"Congratulations"—

That's what everyone is saying to us because we keep up the quality service to the trade in the face of obstacles.

The larger-size page is missed by both advertisers and readers, but there is consolation in the knowledge that we will return to the big page as soon as conditions permit.

In the meantime, we are continuing to plug away, and the spirit in and back of the NEWS remains the same.

Triple praise from Chicago for the newest "Kerrigan"

We expected the critics of the trade papers and the photoplay public to like this newest J. Warren Kerrigan production. From all angles we have not been disappointed, as these Chicago notices prove:

CHICAGO TRIBUNE: "The Joyous Liar" is a good picture and J. Warren Kerrigan adds to his undeniably good looks, sincerity and likeableness. For once we can obey our good mayor's instructions "to lay down our hammer and get a horn." A plausible comedy-drama, cleverly directed with lots of action, much quiet fun and well-aimed "punch."

SCREEN OPINIONS: Many there are who are going to find real pleasure in "The Joyous Liar." The majority of exhibitors will use it to advantage. Few pictures, unless they bear the label special, exceed this in point of interest and presentation. A Class A picture.

EXHIBITORS' HERALD: In "The Joyous Liar" J. Warren Kerrigan has one of the most delightful melodramatic comedies that has reached the screen in months. 5,000 feet of clean, entertaining humor that will add to Kerrigan's popularity.

As the best evidence in the world of the likeability of this picture we announce the remarkable fact that without being asked to do so, twenty first run exhibitors have doubled all their previous Kerrigan prices for this rollicking, enjoyable production.

DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS
in "His Majesty, the American"

is now playing to record business in leading theatres throughout the country. This is the statement of the many showmen who are running the film.

Productions of this type can be made and marketed only if the producer and the exhibitor have complete independence.

The producer must be absolutely free, both in time and money, to assure his best work at all times. And the exhibitor, for the successful exploitation of this type of product, must likewise be absolutely free to deal with each release as a single problem, without regard to outside limitations or considerations, so that he may get the most for himself from the extraordinary opportunities offered by the pictures of the screen's foremost artists.

To make this freedom a realty, United Artists Corporation was formed, and to safeguard its permanence, exhibitors are assured that the policies, plans and methods of the company shall remain unchanged.

UNITED ARTISTS CORPORATION

729 Seventh Avenue, N.Y.

OSCAR A. PRICE, President. HIRAM ABRAMS, General Manager

"If stories can be told in this wonderful way upon the screen, then a new art has indeed arrived—an art as important as that of Poetry or Music.

"It is the greatest step forward that we have known. You have immortalized yourself. I feel that a new era has dawned."

Charles Hanson Towne,
Editor of McClure's Magazine

"In one day the screen jumped five years.

"Such a paradox is not the mere jargon it sounds, but the tribute of the most appreciative of the reviewers. As Miss Virginia Tracy of the New York Tribune says: 'It has the serene accomplishment of an artist who has exacted from himself nothing but perfection.'"

The Literary Digest.
June 14, 1919.

"A sincere human tragedy—that is what D. W Griffith has had the courage and the capacity to produce in 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS'

"A masterpiece in moving pictures"

The New York Times
May 14 1919

"Words, could they be made of spun silk and point lace, of poison fruit and foul vapors, never could have produced the storm of expression, the electrifying dramatic current of this Griffith pantomime.

"IT IS AN ELOQUENT AND DRAMATIC FLIGHT BEYOND THE SPOKEN DRAMA

"Griffith is the most imaginative and sane American who ever revolutionized the theatre when it needed an emancipator"

Amy Leslie,
The Chicago Daily News

"'BROKEN BLOSSOMS is the most tragic, the most beautiful thing that has ever reached the screen."

Virginia Dale,
The Chicago Journal

"While we always have been devoted to the pictures, we never really liked them nearly as well as the spoken drama, but 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS' never could be done so appealingly in any other medium.

"When it was over we wanted to rush up to every one we met and cry: 'Oh, don't miss it—don't miss it!'"

Harriet Underhill,
The New York Tribune

"He has far exceeded the power of the written word. It would be impossible for the greatest master of language to picture the emotions as Griffith has perpetuated them in 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS'"

Louis Gardy,
The New York Call

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS"

Guardians of the Eighth Art

You began as exhibitors———you developed as showmen——— and today you stand as guardians of a new art.

Yesterday there were but seven arts ——— Music, Painting, Literature, Drama, Dancing, Sculpture and Architecture;

TODAY THERE ARE EIGHT! !

The great editors, authors, painters, musicians and the theatre-going public have proclaimed it.

For years they ridiculed — they scoffed — they ignored — they damned,———and now they shout "David Wark Griffith's commanding masterwork, 'BROKEN BROSSOMS,' is the miracle of art."

It ran to packed houses during the hottest June New York has ever known. Eight hundred columns of discussion of it have been written in the press of the nation.

World critics have searched their memories for vivid words to voice its praise.

To present it is to offer to your patrons the greatest attraction ever provided for an American theatre—for this is the wonder of the century—the birth of a new art. Its presence in your theatre will bring a new prestige, will command new patrons.

History Will Remember "Broken Blossoms"—

AN APOLOGY

"We exceedingly regret that such an immense crowd was forced to stand out in the rain last night from 7 o'clock awaiting an opportunity to witness 'WHEN BEARCAT WENT DRY.' We know that it will be impossible, judging from indications, for everyone to see this picture. We will endeavor to arrange for earlier morning openings for the rest of the engagement and suggest that all who can, come early and avoid the later crowds. We thank you sincerely for your patience and your patronage——"

Chas. Freeman,
Mgr. Star Theatre.
Newcastle, Pa.

" 'When Bearcat Went Dry' played to immense crowds during the entire week at my Colonial Theatre. The picture is everything that is claimed for it, and then some.

For an outdoor picture it is one of the best I have ever played, and the general verdict of the thousands of patrons was: 'The best picture of its kind I ever saw.'

For a money-getter 'When Bearcat Went Dry' is the goods."

Chas. A. Feiner,
Colonial Theatre,
Wheeling, W. Va.

"It takes S-O-M-E picture to put two ticket sellers in this small town box office, but 'BEARCAT' did it.

The 'Standing Room Only' sign went up for the first time in this town. It was adorning its place on the door within fifteen minutes after the doors were open.

It was advertised strictly according to the Press Book ideas. Everybody was talking about the picture several days before it arrived."

TEN SINGLE REELS OF FEATURE

TULAGI, A White Spot in a Black Land

Twelve white men fight to bring civilization to a land where cannibalism once reigned.

Through the Isles of the New Hebrides

Where savages stalk the hardy white pioneers with poisoned spears and other weapons of the jungle.

The Home of the Hula-Hula

The birthplace of the Shiver and the Shimmy showing the dusky natives who originated the wild dances in their native costumes.

Saving Savages in the South Seas

Heroic missionaries bringing The Word to the idol worshippers who have taken a heavy toll of human life.

Cruising in the Solomons

A reel of wonderful scenic effects showing grinning savages on the shores of islands where no white man has dared to venture.

STRENGTH

Domesticating Wild Men

A splendid historical record of the making of farmers out of savages. Many white men have become victims of natives who reverted to their old customs.

Lonely South Pacific Missions

Showing the mission station where one priest has lived alone for thirty-five years guarded from savages by faithful natives.

Recruiting in the Solomons

In a land where slave traders snatched youths and maidens from their parents hardy traders now bargain for human labor. Wages average board and $30 for two years.

The City of Broken Old Men

Where men false to their country were sent never to return. Remarkable photographs of New Caledonia and of these Men Without A Country.

Marooned in the South Seas

Mr. and Mrs. Johnson left alone on an island filled with the most terrible natives, took a wonderful photographic record of their adventures.

MARTIN JOHNSON ON THE BORDERLAND OF CIVILIZATION

Footage Does Not Make A Feature

THE camera's eye has dispelled the haze which for so long has surrounded the little-known-of Cannibals of the Islands that nestle like a great mystery in the vast South Seas.

And it has answered the far cry for the new, the novel, the unique.

The measure of an interest aroused, a message carried or an entertainment's worth, is the measure of a feature . . . five thousand feet of film is not the synonym for feature.

On the Borderland of Civilization gathered by Martin Johnson, explorer, in his wanderings among those man-eating Cannibals, interest, teach and entertain. They will appear as single-reel subjects, yet, all preparation for their release will base them as features—for they are features . . . new, novel, unique.

And our co-operation, to its fullest, shall help the exhibitor exploit them as such.

EXHIBITORS who pride themselves on their showmanship are booking this unusual feature on sight. It's an attraction that you can really exploit. Perhaps there's no other picture of the Fall season which offers so many opportunities for sensational advance work—so many chances for whetting the appetites of your patrons in advance of its showing.

Margarita Fisher has never had a more astounding role in her entire career. Hundreds who have seen it proclaim it greater than "The Miracle of Life," which is still remembered as a Fisher triumph. It's gripping—sensational—mystifying. You can obtain unusual paper—threes—sixes—twenty-fours. You can use unique lobby displays, "different" newspaper cuts, a score or more of real "exploitation aids" in putting it over. The better the showman you are the bigger will be your clean-up.

Is the Nude

DOLORES, the naked swimming girl of the north woods in "Back to God's Country", is as pure as the crystal waters of the cold mountain streams into which she plunges.

Only the wild folk of the forest, who know and love her, see her. But she was caught unaware.

But in this picture the nude is artistic, and art is not rude. Sixteen varieties of wild animals actually are shown.

Most of the scenes were photographed in the ice fields of the Arctics, north of the 56th parallel where the temperature was 60 degrees below zero.

If you want the unusual in pictures, look at this one for yourself.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

"IT is not the originality in the story but the unique and wholly original manner in which this production has been presented that makes for it a real financial value to the exhibitor. Too much stress cannot be placed upon this fact.

"As to the story itself it is truly dramatic. In fact, the strong points are thorough, the action is consistent and the finale is one that is touching yet thoroughly in accord with the general appeal of the story. At no time does the action lag and the mystery is so developed that one will be held until the final settlements of accounts."

CHARLES E. WAGNER in "The Exhibitors' Trade Review."

Exploitation Advice from The Exhibitors' Trade Review

"Bill this feature as a mystery drama and mention the fact that it offers something different in the way of photoplay entertainment. Boost up the fact that it is mysterious and state that it is enacted by a strong and capable cast.

"For your lobby have your carpenter build you out of light boards or composboards a frame to resemble a door and place this over the entrance to your theatre. Over the entrance have a neat sign stating: 'The Open Door' will lead you to one hour of thrilling entertainment.'"

Teaser ad suggestions: "Look for The Open Door," and "At the Sign of The Open Door."

SUPERIOR PICTURE

"PUT this down as one of the really meritorious successes of the year, dramatically and technically superb. There may be nothing new in the story, but it is the way it is handled, the brilliant interpretation given the leading roles by a cast of unexcelled artists. The presentation registered one word and that is perfection. Mystery, thrills and human heart interest are there a-plenty, for the theme is one that will reach every grade of patrons. Because it is different the picture will advertise itself."

"The Billboard."

"Atonement"

Atonement is the story of a woman who forgave but could not forget, of a man who was tempted—who thought he had reached the depths of despair—but found that a second chance had been given him, and he devoted his life to righting the wrong he had never committed.

To live, to love, to feel the treasures of life slipping from our foolish grip—that is anguish; but to live, to love, to hold within our hand the reins of our life is joy. "Atonement" shows both the anguish and the joy of life.

The biggest organ in any theatre is in the biggest theatre in the world

THE CAPITOL THEATRE which has just opened in New York is the largest theatre in the world. It seats more people than any other theatre. It is presenting musical novelties and motion pictures on a magnificent scale that has not before been approached.

The Capitol Theatre wanted the finest theatre organ that could be made.

An Estey Organ was installed.

It is the largest instrument ever made by The Estey Organ Company. It is so tremendous in size that it was delivered to the theatre in installments of car-load lots.

Its smallest pipe is about as big as a lead-pencil; the largest pipe could contain more than 135,000 of the little ones! Its sounding board extends from one side of the theatre to he other—a distance of 100 feet. It has tops of a new character, in addition to the usual ones, and for power and timbre they excell anything yet heard. The only assemblage of instruments that could take the place of this Estey Organ is an orchestra of 200 pieces.

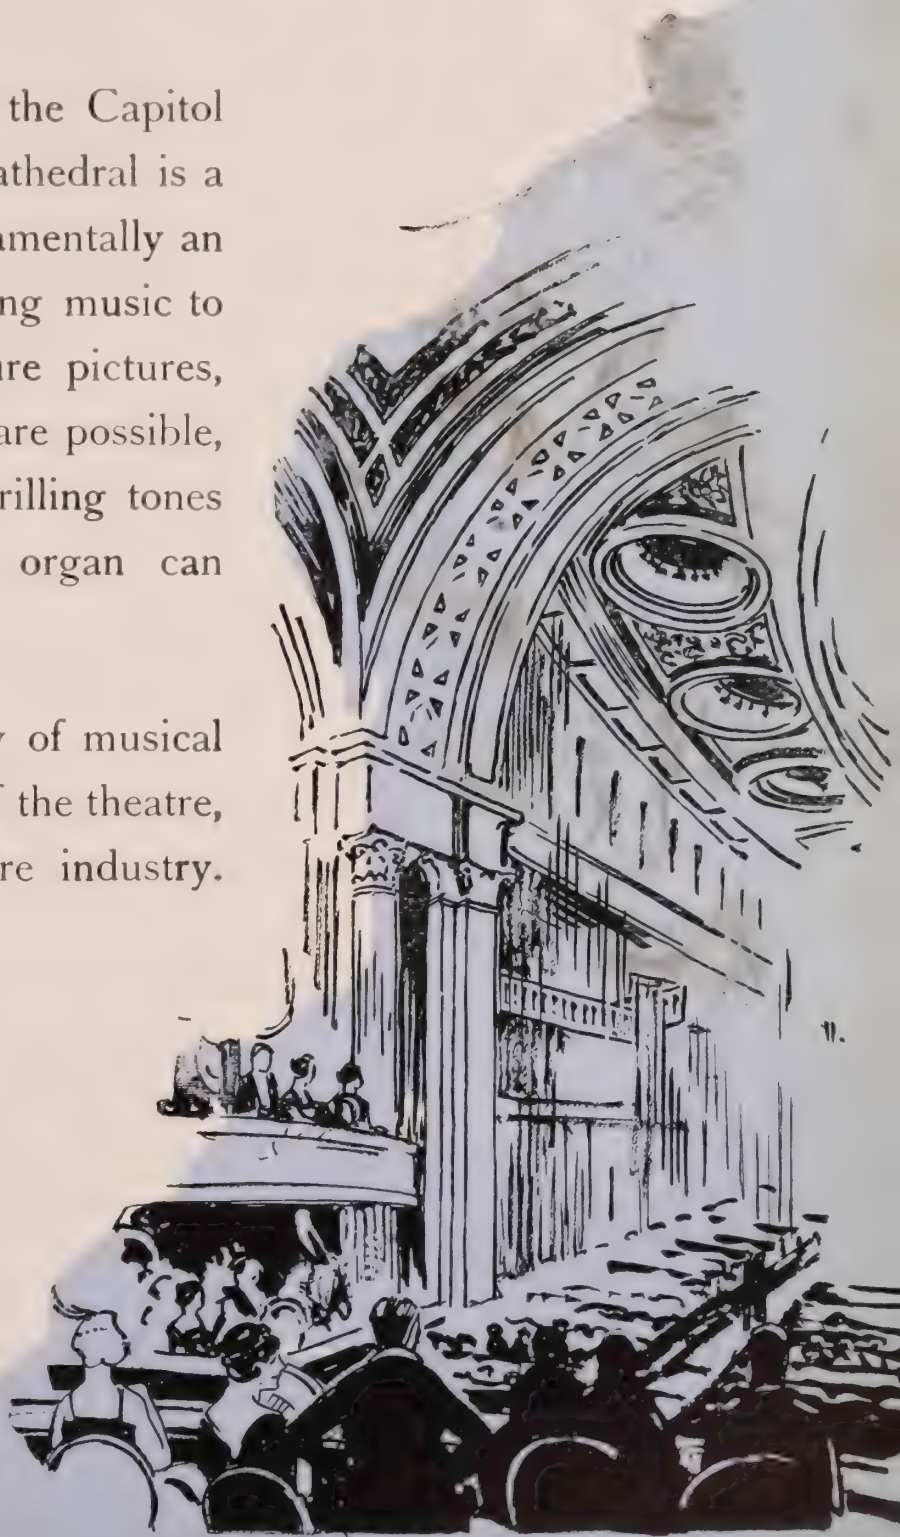
This organ is as much a part of the Capitol Theatre as the organ in a large cathedral is a part of that cathedral. It is fundamentally an organ, yet it is admirable for playing music to accompany pictures,—news, feature pictures, comedies; the most delicate effects are possible, as well as the ponderous and thrilling tones that no instrument but a pipe organ can produce.

It is an achievement in the history of musical instruments, in the development of the theatre, in the growth of the motion picture industry.



Some of the theatres that have installed Estey Organs

Big profits come to the men who do big things.
Good pictures attract people to your theatre—
Good music brings them back—regularly.

You can always have good music if you have an Estey Organ. You will be independent of labor troubles, for in many theatres the Estey Organ does the work of an entire orchestra. It has no union hours, it is always there. You will save the cost of the organ, times over, in what you save on musician's salaries; and your organ is growing better all the time.

Your organ will be built to fit your theatre, just as the organ in the Capitol Theatre was built to fit that theatre. Its cost depends upon the size, and the way it is built in,—and it doesn't cost as much as you think it will.

We will send an expert to talk with you, wherever you are, whenever you say.

ANNOUNCING

MOTION PICTURE DIRECTORY

Motion Picture Directory has already become the standard directory of players, directors, scenario writers, cinematographers and all persons connected with the production of motion pictures.

It is used by directors for casting, by photoplay editors for their departments, and by producers and leading exhibitors for reference.

The 1920 Edition—in addition to embracing all the features that have made the Studio Directory so popular—will be even more, it will be a

in all that the name implies. Motion Picture Directory will be the first complete, "all-around" reference work of the industry. It will be more than a "year book," more than an "annual." In the wide range of subjects covered, the wealth of valuable and authentic statistics supplied, it will take rank as the encyclopedia of the motion picture industry.

Motion Picture Directory will offer to advertisers an unequalled opportunity to buy "year-round" service. Every page of the 1920 edition will bristle with information that will be constantly referred to by executives, exhibitors, photoplay editors, and all interested in the motion pictures.

Glancing Over the Mail

THE picture publication that inspires responsiveness in its readers need never worry about topics for editorial discussion. Take this morning's mail for an example. Atop the pile on our desk is the letterhead of the Alhambra Theater, Eastland, Texas. And our eye catches his ready-made editorial:

"Tell the exhibitors not to be afraid of this raising admissions proposition. Prosperity is over the country, everything is higher — even the distributors are charging us more — and higher prices or everything is in the atmosphere. I say this — to the exhibitor who fears his patronage is going to take him to task for raising prices. Take a month's bookings, go over the different attractions, weed out the weak ones explaining to your respective distributors what is up, that you are going to try to raise your admission prices. Get the most consistently good attractions you can for a solid month. Then raise your price and advertise stronger than you ever did — asking your public to notice the consistently strong and selected programs you are showing every day. 'You've just adopted a bigger policy and know your public wants the best and is willing to pay for it.' This will work."

The Proof of the Pudding

F. K. DAVIS, manager of the Alhambra, then goes on to cite some of his own experiences to prove the case stated in the above paragraphs:

"I know conditions vary," he writes, "but we use that alibi too altogether too often. Let me take the proposition home.

"We had one house here, The Majestic (and still own it) located in the heart of the business section. It had location and fine lobby and that's all that could be said of it. It had two rows of posts down the centre of the house, and to this day has no intake or exhaust fans (merely a dozen well oscilating fans). The floor did not have the proper grade, so many of the rear seats were set on blocks. The original owner (lasted six weeks) had put a transverter in the house and that made so much noise you couldn't play the organ softly and have it heard.

"We opened the Alhambra around the corner, with no posts, fine floor drop, outside ventilation on four sides with proper fans and flues on ceiling, a competent organist. At the Alhambra we charged fifteen and twenty-eight cents, while the Majestic charged twenty and thirty-five — and yet the people swarmed to the Majestic as compared with the attendance at the Alhambra. Why? Because they paid more and thought they were getting the best.

"We now operate both and the first of the month will raise the Alhambra prices to twenty-five and fifty cents. Give them something better — decorations, music — whatever your standard has been raise it and you'll be able to advance prices unless your section of the country is financially suffering."

The Exhibitor's Place

FROM that letter we turn to a communication from Arthur B. Smith, of the Fenwick Theater, Salem, N. J. This paragraph stands out:

"I feel that the responsibility of a motion picture theater is something akin to that of a newspaper in that its influence in the community for good cannot be overestimated. Whatever success I may have attained in the business can be attributed to the fact that I have selected the best pictures obtainable and pictures that are elevating and that make people better for having seen them. This has proved a safe, solid, and satisfactory foundation on which to build the business."

"Safe, solid and satisfactory." We agree heartily with Mr. Smith's sentiments. So heartily in fact that as we turn the letter over we feel sure that at some time in the future we will give longer editorial treatment to Mr. Smith's theme "The Exhibitor's Place as a Publisher in his Community."

Can you conceive of the strides that the industry would take if every exhibitor could feel his position as Mr. Smith does — and could impress his community with that feeling?

It's a big topic — one too pregnant with possibilities to let pass in an idle manner.

"There Must be Reciprocity" says British Editor

IN the September 25 issue of the Kinematograph and Lentern Weekly, G. A. Atkinson, associate editor of that publication, challenges the oft-repeated statement of American producers, and the recently published article in MOTION PICTURE NEWS, affirmative in sentiment and detail, to the effect that the American door is open to the British producer of meritorious film.

The major portion of our contemporary's article, containing an oft-repeated indictment that the American audience is inaccessible to new ideas, follows, with a full and pointed rebuttal on the next page.

W. A. Johnston, the brilliant and virile editor of the Motion Picture News—and an American of sound British ancestry—has been a good friend to the British film trade for many years, but when he says that the door is open to the American market for any British motion picture that will make money for the American exhibitor, he invites correction. Mr. Johnston is in the position of the pup who stepped off the platform to inspect the "live rail." In about a minute he will be full of information. We could name a large number of British films, produced within the past few years, that are quite as good money-makers as the average American production. Several of them, in their day, rivalled America's best. We could also give a long list of names of British filmmen who have taken those pictures across to America, in optimistic mood, and returned sick and sorry over their reception—their business reception, I mean; there has never been any complaint on social grounds. On the other hand, American film-men come over here, close their deals successfully, and return mouthing pious words about the necessity of some sort of reciprocity. Of such are R. A. Rowland and W. A. Brady. Mr. Brady went a step further, and hinted that the American Government might be compelled to intervene in the matter. Why should there be even the hint of a necessity for Government intervention? It almost looks as if someone, somewhere, had a guilty conscience! When the president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry of America is convinced that the problem of getting British pictures into the States has become one for statesmanship to solve, can Mr. Johnston blame the British industry for thinking that there may be some sort of an organized effort to keep British films out of America? I do not say that this is the opinion of the Kinematograph Weekly. I am merely stating a case for the American trade to consider.

How does Mr. Johnston know that the average British-made picture could not possibly appeal to American audiences, if those audiences seldom or never get the opportunity of expressing their judgment? All American audiences must certainly contain a percentage of patrons of British ancestry, in some districts the proportion of British stock in the audiences might be anything up to 50 per cent. Does Mr. Johnston dare to say that this stratum of the American kinema-going public is not interested in British films? It is a matter of international knowledge and consent that if there is a correct standard of taste in regard to sentiment and feeling, matters inseparably associated from public entertainment, the British point of view is more likely to come nearer to the standard than that of any other nation. The ultimate best in all matters in which nothing but a fine sense of discrimination will serve, is almost invariably British. Americans are not dead to the British appeal in literature and drama, or to the British appeal in dress, manners, customs, and other matters which in the last resort are dependent on a keen sense of what is fitting or a nice instinct of choice. Why should the American Trade so hastily assume that American kinema audiences would be dead to the distinctive appeal of the British film? Will Mr. Johnston re-read the American Press notices of those two British films, "The Elder Miss Blossom" and "Her Greatest Performance," and notice how the critics are as one in detecting in those productions a certain atmosphere of charm and dignity, and how they evade the critical issue by saying that the films might "appeal to the older folks" or will need "strong boosting"? Are American audiences, then, dead to the appeal of charm, dignity and a certain fineness of sentiment? Must we be forced to draw the only logical conclusion that the best testimonial to British films is their non-suitability for American audiences. If this is not the correct inference, what is? Does the American audience discriminate against Charles Chaplin because he is British, or against Mary Pickford because she is of Canadian origin? Why should it, then, be supposed that American kinema patrons are insensible to the distinctive appeal of British films?

If we take Mr. Johnston at his word and accept his statements that there is nothing in the nature of an organized effort to keep out British productions, and that the average British-made picture could not possibly appeal to American audiences, then there are only two logical inferences which we can draw:—

(1) That the American kinema audience is the most insular and the least accessible to new ideas of any in the world.

(2) That American viewers have not the courage to approve any foreign film which does not conform to certain stereotyped and parochial notions of what is suitable for the American public.

If that is a true view of the matter, all I can say is that it is a pity that Columbus died before he had the opportunity to repent. We prefer to believe that, in this respect, the American kinema patron is a better judge of what he wants to see than the American film viewer. We believe that Anglo-American co-operation during the war, and the great fraternization in France, has created the favorable atmosphere and the psychological opportunity for the introduction of British films to American screens. It is not necessary that the assurance of the Kinematography Weekly should be accepted that this state of things has come to pass. Let us confirm it by quoting the opinions of a few representative Americans, all expressed within the past few months:—

These opinions are introduced here to emphasize to the Americal film trade the importance of the fact that the British film trade is the one most heavily hit by American competition in its own markets; the one in which, during the war, America gained most at the expense of Great Britain; the one which America is preparing to hit most heavily after the war; the one which, in short, stands most in need of reciprocity from America. The United States Secretary of the Interior says that Americans love fair play, and that amongst them there is growing something akin to an appreciation of the wisdom embodied in the Golden Rule. How does the question of reciprocity stand in the light of this sentiment? Mr. Johnston avers that there is nothing in the shape of organized effort to keep British films out of American markets. What will he say when I tell him that I have seen an agreement between the biggest film corporation in America and its British producing branch, by which the former agrees that none but the films produced by it in England shall be shown on their American screens. If that is not an organized effort to bar out the genuine British productions, what is it? Does it look like reciprocity, or fair play, or an appreciation of the wisdom of the Golden Rule? Does it? On the one hand there is the whole of representative America calling for co-operation and reciprocity with Great Britain, and on the other hand there is the American film trade, headed by its most powerful corporation, steadily, earnestly, grimly barring the door against the British film. On the one hand we have American films being dumped into Great Britain as fast as they can be turned out, and on the other hand we have the British film-producer leading a precarious existence because of American competition in his own markets.

Three years ago I took up with W. A. Johnston and the American film trade the question of reciprocity for British films. Three years ago I said all that I am saying to-day. Three years ago! And how far has the question of reciprocity advanced in the meantime? Not one inch! It is useless to disguise from ourselves any longer the fact that the attitude of the American film trade, in this respect, is tantamount to a declaration of war. Between the attitude of commercial America, in this one matter, whatever it may be in others, and the attitude of commercial Germany, there is no difference whatever so far as the British film trade is concerned. America's idea of burying the hatchet is to bury it in the Englishman's head! Well, it has taken us a long time to realize what the attitude of the American trade actually means, but now that the fact is fairly driven home, the English-

The American Picture Door Is Open--Walk In

Some Information on American Market Conditions

By William A. Johnston

IS there an organized effort to keep British films out of this market?

Our recent and positive statement to the contrary is strenuously challenged by G. A. Atkinson, associate editor of the Kinematograph.

Mr. Atkinson likens us to the inquisitive pup who investigated a live rail and was promptly filled with information; and he then proceeds to inform us in electrical fashion.

We are glad to reply in kind. Information is just what is needed.

Misunderstanding we do not want. We can, we feel sure, speak for the American trade to a man that it deplores, exceedingly, any feeling that anything other than fair play is accorded British made pictures in this buying market.

This is an important subject: but — it is purely a business question. Let us discuss it candidly, as film men, using film facts.

In the first place, Mr. Atkinson, the American market is not organized to exclude any pictures. We are far from any such stage of commercial organization. The American producers and distributors have never been able to unite upon any matter at any time, except on censorship, taxes, the influenza epidemic and other similar situations threatening the very life and the entire cash drawer of the industry. So far as British made pictures are concerned no two or more American distributors ever met to discuss their exclusion; they have for one thing, been too busy making too many pictures.

The fact is we are not even organized to the extent of putting the proper economic limitation upon our own production.

We are just beginning to merge from an orgy of overproduction of pictures which well preceded the World War.

By that I mean that the individual American producer-distributor has produced so many pictures that they have competed with each other, driving each other out of the way, and off our own market, with booking losses of millions of dollars.

The market that was lost here was not found abroad, for the war closed many a foreign territory.

Too many of these fast, machine-made pictures were mediocre. But the fact stands out — does it not — that even before the war put its restrictions upon British production these American made pictures filled a major part of the British market?

And now, again —

We have two sources here of feature pictures — which are really the subject of this discussion: the regular release producer and the independent producer.

The regular release producers — these comprise the more prominent concerns — own their own distributing and selling organizations. We have always considered this uneconomic because the large overhead of an exchange system calls insistently for many pictures and consequently fast (and therefore mediocre) production.

But you cannot — for the present, at least, argue with general success against the shibboleth of the American producer-distributor: "We won't take chances on our pictures except through our own distributing effort."

At any rate the situation exists.

Now what would you do, Mr. Atkinson, if you owned an expensive exchange system and had your production plant geared up to so many pictures a year?

You'd favor your own, wouldn't you? And you'd grow to rely upon them — unless (1) you were offered a better picture (at a fair price) or (2) a picture as good as yours (at a cheaper price) or (3) unless the purveyor shouted loud enough to make you take your accustomed gaze off your release chart and make you look at his wares. (This latter is important, too.)

Well that's just what the American producer-distributor does.

And the independant producer here in America, the man who hasn't his own outlet, is in much the same fix as your British producer.

He has just three avenues of sale for his picture. He can sell to the producer-distributor — cash or royalty basis; or to the independent distributor; or he can offer his picture to the state rights market — an aggregation of independent exchanges, covering the country.

The states right market isn't organized — as yet. That is to say each exchange buys independently for its territory; no joint buying effort is maintained in New York or at any central point; when pictures are purchased no joint exploitation to the exhibitor is carried on against the nationally advertised pictures of the producer-distributor.

These independent American producers have the advantage over the British producer of knowing the buying market, its personnel and possibilities; yet they have to work intelligently and consistently to sell their product. Pictures are not snapped up here; they themselves must do the snapping.

Two years ago a picture (it is mentioned recently in our British correspondence as a fine box-office earner in Great Britain) was brought quietly to New York and got one scant offer. Then an enterprising advertising man took it, put it on Broadway, advertised it loudly and ingeniously; and it sold readily and earned mightily. This is but one of many instances — right along.

We hold no brief here for the American buyer. He may be somewhat deaf — but naturally so since he has grown to reply upon his own production. He may be somewhat blind; but who is an infallible judge of pictures? Then you — British producer or independent American producer — must get his ear and eye. You must ADVERTISE! This is not a covert plea for the American trade press, use any other judicious medium of exploitation, if you will. But advertise! That's plain good business sense.

Some year ago the writer lived and worked in London. He saw many American salesmen come over with American products — metal ceilings and shop equipment, heating systems, breakfast foods and cooking devices and what not. They arrived in characteristic American fashion, cock-sure, buoyant and boisterous; and they left shortly and quietly. Some said that British prejudice was an unscalable wall; others laid facts before their firms and went back equipped to stay and work, believing that the public — any public anywhere — will absorb a fairly priced article of merit PROVIDED it is BROUGHT to their attention. So our original statement still holds — that "the door here is open," or we might amend by saying, "OPENABLE" to any British picture that will make money for the American exhibitor.

The picture must, like the independently produced American pictures, be excellent pictures, outstanding pictures, better than the average American program or regular release picture.

That is obvious, it seems to us, if the pictures are to be absorbed either by the producer-distributor or the independent distributor or by the state rights group of independent exchanges.

Secondly, these pictures must be well — very well — advertised to the trade; and capable local representatives here must handle them. Consider for instance in this connection the representation long had by American companies in London as against British representation in this market at present.

There is an assured market here for these better pictures. No one can argue against that. The exhibitor wants them; the state rights exchange is hungry for them; the independent distributor is open to them; the producer-distributor will not want his competitor to get them. And finally the public will want them — provided these good British pictures are adequately advertised to them.

Again there is the matter of production plants and capital. Great strides have been made here in the way of studio equipment and facilities and more importantly in the way of picture making organization. American pictures today are organization-made pictures. They are the product, not of one man, but of many specialists, the development of which has come about in the past two years. One of the best producing directors recently advertised his latest pictures as a product of organization and specifically and with pride pointed, not to himself, but to his chief of staff.

Again the American picture today is backed with plenty of capital. Producers don't hesitate to "plunge." Money doesn't make pictures but it is quite apt to show clearly in the production and to carry weight. Again, capital is freely added to-

Attention to detail and action is an important factor in "The Beloved Cheeter," a Robertson-Cole production featuring Lew Cody

Robertson-Cole Gets a Feature

"The Beloved Cheater" a Big Production by Gasnier Featuring Lew Cody is Bought

FOLLOWING close upon several other important announcements made recently it is stated by Robertson-Cole Company that negotiations have been completed and they have purchased the L. J. Gasnier production "The Beloved Cheater" featuring Lew Cody and have contracted for five more big Lew Cody specials for the coming year. Negotiations for L. J. Gasnier and the Lew Cody Company were conducted by Sydney Cohan and he expresses himself as well satisfied with the arrangements.

"I would like to thank all of the distributors who so courteously viewed 'The Beloved Cheater' and were interested in the proposition," Mr. Cohan said. "We had many offers, all of them fair and pleasing, but the Robertson-Cole proposition was the most attractive and we have accepted it not only for the first picture but for the entire six in the Cody series.

"Since the preliminary announcement of the picture we have had scores of letters from first run exhibitors throughout the country inquiring as to the date of release and the terms. One of the largest exhibitors in the country offered four thousand dollars for a week's run on condition that Cody would appear personally with the picture for the week. Of course all of these offers have had to be held in abeyance until it was finally decided that Robertson-Cole would take over the productions.

"In the first picture of the series 'The Beloved Cheater,' Mr. Gasnier has achieved a wonderfully perfect production, typical of his work of many years for Pathe. I am sure all six will bear the same stamp of quality and the picture will be a big feature in the market. The producing organization is now at work on the remaining pictures at the studio at Glendale, Cal., where Mr. Gasnier is personally supervising every detail."

The acquisition of this series of pictures by Robertson-Cole is another indication of the determination of this organization to take the best obtainable in the market for their exhibitor clientele. The industry was somewhat surprised by the vigor of the policy announcements of Robertson-Cole for the coming year and the intimation of strong specials and features to come but the steady stream of big announcements since then has shown that those announcements were mild statements of the extent to which the company proposed to go in getting the best.

And in this connection it is noted that in making the announcement of the Lew Cody series, officials of the company said it was the fore-runner of certain other important acquisitions which will be publicly announced in the near future. It is stated that this expansion will continue uninterrupted for some time and at the present moment no limit to the number of quality productions has been set.

At the present pace the company is rapidly forging to a place among the real leaders in the industry and it is the claim of officials that in doing it they have never sacrificed quality to expediency in a single release. Developments in the next few weeks will be closely watched by exhibitors because previous intimations of Robertson-Cole of important announcements have always been fulfilled.

"The Beloved Cheater" according to the Robertson-Cole announcement is one particularly well adapted to the peculiar grace of Lew Cody in society parts and is a comedy drama of unusual merit. Eileen Percy plays opposite Cody, and her husband Busch, the St. Louis millionaire appears in several scenes. A sister of Mr. Busch also participated in the making of the picture and she appears in a few close-ups.

Big Detroit House Bought

Phil Gleichman has purchased the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, buying from Harry Garson the latter's half interest. Mr. Garson at the same time disposed of other local interests in order to give his full time to Equity.

The history of the Broadway Strand revolves around Mr. Gleichman. He originally promoted the house and had it built, but before it was completed leased the property.

King Vidor Signs Contract With First National

King W. Vidor has affixed his signature to a contract with the First National Exhibitors Circuit whereby he is to produce a series of special productions based on the same trend of thought which has characterized his preceding pictures, "The Turn in the Road," "Better Times," "The Other Half" and "Poor Relations."

The contract was closed in the office of Nathan Burkan, 1451 Broadway, Tuesday, and signed by H. Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer, and Mr. Vidor. Nathan Burkan acted as legal adviser for Mr. Vidor while S. F. Jacobs was attorney for the company.

Mr. Vidor will leave New York for the coast at once and begin active work of production. In fact with the signing of the contract the first production was started.

No time limit has been set in the contract on the making of the productions, but Vidor estimates he will be able to complete one picture about every three months.

The terms of the contract are such that an intensive and extensive advertising campaign will exploit the name of King W. Vidor.

Grand Rapids' New "Regent" Will Combine Several Features

According to the plans drawn up the Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., will combine a roof garden on the fifth floor, flanked by refreshment booths, with rooms below for public and private dancing lessons. The house will seat 2,500 to 3,000 persons.

Another feature consists of five tunnels which will serve to deliver patrons exactly where they wish to sit without disturbing a seated audience. Three of these tunnels lead forward from the rear of the foyer floor to the front of the balcony and two lead from the rear of the mezzanine floor to the middle of the balcony. The theatre building alone will cost $219,000, according to the estimate rendered.

Exhibitors of Canadian Provinces to Convene

The third annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of the Maritime Provinces of Canada, will be held in St. John, New Brunswick, October 29th and 30th.

Film Evolution Waits on Small House

General Opinion of First National Theatre Men is that the Industry is Marking Time Between Two Eras; Small Showmen Must Discover Worth of Field

EXHIBITOR sentiment throughout the country, reflected in the discussions of important theatre matters by members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit during their semi-annual meeting in New York, leans to the belief that the industry is marking time between two eras, and that developments in the season to come will clearly define the general outlines of the next great step forward. This predicted evolution, whatever its nature or form, will, it is believed, mark the beginning of the real ultimate in screen attainments.

A summary, by J. D. Williams, manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, of the views and opinions expressed by the exhibitor members of the organization, discloses the existence of a popular belief among theatre owners generally that a new period of adjustment between producers, distributors and exhibitors is at hand, and that several conditions now exist which indicate the trend of progress for the future.

The Small Exhibitor's Move

"Our members," he said, "expressed not only their own thoughts, but those of other exhibitors in virtually every territory. As a rule, it was their belief that theatres generally were making money. There is a tide of prosperity sweeping the country, which, viewed from a box-office angle, somewhat disputes the lack of adequate income among the masses.

"All of our members were agreed on the proposition that small town exhibitors will gradually change their policies for length of runs, and to a greater degree than in the past. They seemed to sum up the present situation as a gap between the first-run houses in the big cities and the smaller theatres in the country districts. This gulf, they said, could be bridged in but one way — exploitation of feature attractions.

"The quality and efficiency of the advertising exhibitors do in behalf of special features is one of the big determining factors that will ultimately dictate the total number of days that any given attraction will play outside the big cities. When small town exhibitors begin in earnest to test out the real business possibilities in their respective communities, they will close this gap between themselves and the city theatre operators, and realize something near to the maximum of receipts to which they are entitled, and which will be necessary to enable producers to keep pace with public demand for bigger and better productions.

"Our members held the opinion that hundreds of exhibitors in the small towns underestimate the profit opportunities easily within their reach. This belief was substantiated by several of them in recitals of the experiences of small theatre owners who have been opposed to any increases in rental prices on the grounds that their patrons would not accept higher admission prices. In a number of instances these refusals to maintain entertainment standards by paying the bigger rentals for special feature attractions have been met with proposals for percentage engagements. The results invariably have been a shock and an almost unbelievable surprise to the theatre owners. These percentage bookings have been in the nature of tests. Experienced ad men from the big city theatres have co-operated in the small town campaigns, and the exchanges have invested as much as ten times the amount usually expended by the exhibitors in newspaper space. Not one of our members could recall a single test of this kind, made to answer the contentions of the theatre owners about maximum rental prices, that had failed to pay a satisfactory profit.

Sidney Franklin, who is to direct Constance Talmadge in "At the Barn"

"These facts appeal to them as being significant for the future. It is definite evidence that there still is some truth in the old saw that 'the surface of the industry has not been scratched.' These test bookings on percentage have shown also that many small towns can support productions for two and three days instead of one day, as popular fallacy had thought. Progress along these lines, they felt, will do a great deal for the entire industry.

"First National members declared, too, that field conditions now are quiet, comparatively. Exhibitors apparently are waiting for something to happen. They realize that the average of screen quality must go far beyond its present level. But there is nothing more than uncertainty about how producers will succeed in attaining it. The small town exhibitors, I was told, are more concerned about how they are going to meet the increased demands in rentals than they are in the improvement of productions. Our members could see but one answer — better showmanship.

"They expect big field changes in the next twelve months. There was a difference of opinion about just what these changes would be, but there was general agreement on the proposition that the industry is slowly narrowing down and that one of the important developments will be a national adjustment of theatre interests, so that the small, independent exhibitors will be accorded specific forms of protection against the attacks of unwarranted opposition that has the earmarks of attempted monopoly.

"Optimism was the keynote. There never has been, and there never will be, industrial growth without difficulties, mistakes, attempts to corner production and distribution, and harassing deviations from the main line of progress. The motion picture business has had, and is having, its share. But the big, broad outlook, all things to the contrary, gives the future a more solid and stable aspect than ever before."

Those present were: E. B. Johnson and Fred Dahnken, of Turner and Dahnken, San Francisco; J. D. Williams; Harry Schwalbe; Jules J. Allen and Joy J. Allen, of Canada; T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles; Harry Nolan, of Denver; Thomas B. Saxe, Milwaukee; I. H. Rubin and M. L. Finkelstein, Minneapolis; A. H. Blank, Omaha; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas; William Sievers, St. Louis; E. E. Richards, New Orleans; Aaron J. Jones and Nathan Ascher, Chicago; Robert H. Lieber, Indianapolis; Colonel Fred Levy, Louisville; Julian Saenger and E. V. Richards, Jr., New Orleans; E. McGurck, Philadelphia; Tom Moore, Washington; J. B. Clark, Pittsburgh; R. D. Craver and Frank Ferrandini, of Richmond and Atlanta.

Czecho-Slovak Center Will Show Films of a Patriotic Trend

The Eagle Nest Film Co., Inc., is erecting a photoplay theatre at Hellertown, Pa., where it is intended to show pictures of interest to Szecho-Slovaks in the United States. S. L. Brozman of New York is president and A. L. Dhlopolsky of Brooklyn is the general manager of the new venture.

The first production, which has already been started, is entitled "The Czecho-Slovak and Our Uncle." Among the first offerings will be a feature exposing the evils of Bolshevism.

Brief News from Various Sections of Country

INDIANA

The Mutual Theatre Company, of Marion, Ind., announced that it will make another attempt to open its Indiana theater on Sunday, only to be met with the declaration of Mayor Hulley that he has issued strict orders to Chief of Police Ben Phillips to arrest anybody connected with the theatre who figures in the opening. This is the fifth attempt of the Spurr family, which controls the Mutual Company to open on Sunday. Other attempts have resulted in arrests, for the blue laws have been enforced to the letter in Marion for years.

The capital stock of the Luna Amusement Company, operating the Luna motion picture show at Lafayette, Ind., has been increased from $70,000 to $150,000.

R. C. Gumm, of Indianapolis, has been named Indiana agent for the Exhibitors Supply Company, an Illinois corporation, which has recently qualified to do business in Indiana. According to a certificate filed with the Secretary of State $5,000 of the company's capital stock is represented in Indiana. The concern manufactures moving picture machines.

The Linton Theatres Company operating the Opera House at Linton, Ind., has been incorporated with a capital stock of $10,000. The directors are Robert F. Scherer, Lawrence B. Scherer, Robert M. Kidd and Samuel M. Grimes.

Two Indianapolis churches have announced their intention of running motion pictures on Sunday evenings to combat the pull downtown theatres have exerted upon their members, beginning November 1.

Bulletin of Ontario's Exhibitors' Protective Assn. Out

In the Bulletin, recently issued by the Motion-Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario for the season of 1919–20, the report of the secretary, Thomas Scott, shows that the association during the past year has been able to render some vital and material service to the associated exhibitors whose interests the organization is intended to safeguard and promote.

By its industry and good team-work with the local authorities the recent fuel shortage did not affect the local exhibitors of Ontario nearly as much as those in other sections of the country. The period of the flu epidemic, also, was passed through with only a close-down of two weeks as compared with the close-down of eight weeks enforced in some other provinces. Legislation, too, affecting the motion-picture industry, has been favorably influenced by the organization, according to Mr. Scott's report.

Richard Nelson, who for the past two years has been serving Uncle Sam, has returned to the screen in the latest Marguerite Clark production, "Easy To Get."

El Paso May be Hotbed in Texas Theatre Control Contest

There is a possibility in the contest for the control of theatres in Texas between the Lynch and Hulsey factions, that it will be extended to the extreme western portion of the state. It has now become known that men of both factions have been attempting to secure control of theatres in El Paso. This city, which has a population of 70,000, approximately 30,000 of which are Mexicans, has fourteen theatres, seven of which are in the Mexican district, and the others are attended almost entirely by the whites.

In this connection it may be interesting to note that all the theatre men complain that business has been poorer during 1919 than in the past several years. A few years ago film rentals of El Paso theatres were the highest in the state of Texas, but because of poor business, attributed to border trouble and the border being closed, except from 9 A. M. to 4 P. M., killing the tourist business, this has dropped far below the normal level and rental rates are now one-third of what they formerly were.

Kull Completes His First Feature

According to the reports received from the Universal "The Pointing Finger" is now completed, and in the achievement of this event the Universal calls special attention to the fact that Edward Kull, who directed Mary MacLaren in this picture, has terminated his first feature production.

MINNEAPOLIS

W. A. Mustard, president of the Blue Mouse Company, has leased 100 feet of ground on Hennepin avenue between Seventh and Eighth streets, Minneapolis, for the erection of a second Blue Mouse Theatre at a cost of $500,000, it was announced here a short time ago. The proposed new theatre will be on the site of the $250,000 theatre now under construction, Mr. Mustard said.

Max Doolittle, who has served in various capacities in the show game for the last 12 years, is to head the press and service department of the Minneapolis Goldwyn office, Manager E. E. Davis announced recently.

A new record for brookings lies within the clutches of H. C. Remington, who covers the State of North Dakota for the World Film Corporation. Mr. Remington has been successful in securing a contract on "When Bearcat Went Dry" in practically every town he has visited.

J. E. O'Toole, formerly Minneapolis branch manager for the United Picture Theatres, has been appointed district manager of the United of this district with offices in Chicago.

SPOKANE

The Auditorium Theatre, Spokane, Wash, will show the government film, "The End of the Road" for one week, beginning Sunday, October 19. The picture was shown privately last week to 150 Spokane citizens, including city, county and court officials, juvenile workers, women's club representatives, welfare workers and newspapermen. They gave the picture a clean bill of health, each writing his opinion on a card furnished for the purpose. Not one criticism was heard.

Wellington Playter, president of the Playter Photoplayers, Spokane, Wash., announces that the first James Oliver Curwood picture to be made at the Minnehaha studios in that city, will be called "The Yellow Back." Mr. Curwood is expected in Spokane shortly to supervise personally the making of the picture. Mr. Playter is selecting locations for the scenes.

Mr. Playter also announces that the Frank Brockless Company, London, Eng., has completed arrangements to make some of the Jack London pictures, for which it holds the rights, in Spokane.

The Liberty and Clemmer Theatres, Spokane, Wash., recently presented the George Loane Tucker production, "The Miracle Man," for six days concurrently in the two theatres. The picture set new records for Spokane — the run being equivalent to 12 days in one theatre with 7 performances daily, 84 performances in all.

National Association Interested in New Exchange for Cleveland

Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, will be in Cleveland the latter part of the week to confer with the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of Cleveland and the Chamber of Commerce with a view to erecting a new and modern film exchange building in Cleveland.

Ninety-five per cent. of motion picture distributors are members of the National Association and Mr. Elliott will report to a special committee on film exchange building, of which Al Lichtman of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is chairman. This committee, besides Mr. Lichtman, is composed of W. E. Atkinson, Metro Pictures Corporation; Lewis Innerarity, Pathe Exchange, Inc., and H. M. Berman, Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

Bessie Love Will Appear in "A Fighting Colleen"

Bessie Love will be seen in two Vitagraph features before the coming of the new year — "A Fighting Colleen," in which she plays the role of a little Irish lassie of the tenement districts, and "Pegeen," a play of an entirely different type based on the novel of the same name by Eleanor Hoyt Brainerd.

"Art Censor for Films More Needed than Moral One"

Advocacy of an art censor more than a moral blue penciler is contained in a lengthy editorial published in the "Rocky Mountain News," Denver.

Paying a compliment first to the big advance in standards recorded in the films of today as against those of some years ago, the writer then flays in humorous fashion the simple inaccuracies which he finds in every picture, concluding with:

"In short, the climax is forced. The events leading to it have no more continuity than a spilled paper of tacks. All this is false to both nature and art. The young, adolescents as well as children, are introduced into a counterfeit world which they are altogether too likely to accept as the real world.

"This may be immoral, but it is not an immorality which any censor would catch in his net. It will be abolished only when producers, who spend so lavishly on actors and scenic accessories, dig up enough money to tempt real authors into scenario writing.

"Already, we are glad to say, a start in this direction has been made by the high-grade producers."

Theatrical Protective League Meeting in Minneapolis

Middlewest exhibitors are looking forward to the convention of the Theatrical Protective League this month as the one and only solution to the numerous problems confronting them. The convention was called by President William A. Steffes and will be in session for three days in Minneapolis, October 27, 28 and 29.

Because it is the "little fellow" who realizes the dire need of an exhibitors' body to protect the welfare of the middlewest exhibitors, it is presumed that the convention will be attended by the most representative gathering of motion picture men ever assembled in the Northwest.

Wire Briefs from the Coast

IT is rumored that Goldwyn has bought the California theatre, Los Angeles, and that Harry Leonhardt is to serve as general manager of the house, which will be named the Goldwyn. The story also says negotiations are on for several more houses. No confirmation could be obtained of the rumor from the Eastern home offices of Goldwyn.

Marie Walcamp and Harlan Tucker of the Universal serial company touring the Orient, were married October 11 in Tokio, Japan, according to cable dispatches.

Douglas Fairbanks is coming East shortly to finish his second United Artist subject and is then going to Europe for exteriors on his third.

Selig is bringing all its Chicago equipment to the Coast where the studios have been practically remade. The plant will have accommodations for fifteen producing companies.

On the occasion of the Duke of Sutherland's visit to the Fairbanks studio, a special picture was made from his own script in which Doug, Mary Pickford and several high English officers. The Duke's wealth is said to exceed even that of Rockefeller. A dinner followed at Fairbanks' home at which the Chaplins were also guests.

Minister Urges Sunday Showings

Church Federation of Indianapolis Says Picture Shows in Churches Will Aid to Combat Evil

MOVIES in the churches upon Friday evening and Sunday afternoon and evening are urged as one of the most effective means of combating evil influences of the day upon young people in the annual report upon the moral conditions of the city just made public by the Church Federation of Indianapolis.

Close supervision of the motion-picture shows, dance halls and public parks is urged. Theatre managers are called upon to co-operate with the Federation in its reform efforts.

"It is our judgment," the report states, "that the churches should open their doors on Friday evenings and Sunday afternoons and evenings for some kind of social life and entertainment, moving-picture shows and community meetings, so that the young people of the residence section of Indianapolis may find their entertainment in the church instead of being forced to the downtown section for their entertainment. Such co-operation on the part of the ministers and churches of Indianapolis would aid the police department greatly in suppressing and eliminating many of the influences which now affect so seriously the life of the youth of our city."

The theatre managers are asked for assistance in the following passage:

"It will be the task of the social service committee of the church federation, in conjunction with the women police to visit all these places regularly and whenever objectionable films or plays are presented to have them immediately suppressed by the proper authorities. Under the injunction and abatement law of the state of Indiana any place which becomes a place of lewdness may become permanently enjoined. It is our hope that we may have the hearty co-operation of moving picture and theatre managers in our efforts to keep all kinds of public entertainment free from lewdness and suggestiveness."

The report commends the frequent visitation of movie houses by policewomen and suggests that four women be added to the present force.

Joseph Lee Leaves Louis Mayer

Resigns as General Sales Manager after Long Association; Is Succeeded by Mooney

JOSEPH F. LEE has resigned as general sales manager of the Louis B. Mayer organizations, the Anita Stewart Productions, Inc., and the Chaplin-Mayer Pictures Company, and has been succeeded by Paul C. Mooney, who for the past five years has been connected with the Fox Film Company.

Mr. Lee has been associated with Mr. Mayer in one capacity or another ever since the latter entered the motion picture business and the severance of their relations caused somewhat of a stir in film circles. Mr. Lee was not prepared to say what his plans for the future are.

Regarding the change of general sales managers, Mr. Mayer said: "Naturally I regret exceedingly the loss of Mr. Lee, for he has been with me since I first became identified with motion pictures as an exhibitor, but this regret has been tempered to a great extent by my good fortune in securing such a man as Mr. Mooney to take his place."

Mr. Mooney has the unique distinction of having received his entire film experience with one motion picture company, namely the Fox organization.

British Prefer American Films

So Asserts J. P. McGowan of the Universal Upon his Return From Work in Europe

J. P. McGOWAN, the serial producer, who recently returned from Europe, made a statement upon his return to Universal City which was to the effect that English and European countries want American made films.

"Notwithstanding the report and talk of the British film producers," Mr. McGowan said, "about the demand for home products, the British exhibitor and public will tell you that American films are not only wanted but are preferred. They say the American films are the best in the world."

Mr. McGowan further stated, "British producers are far behind their American rivals because they have not accustomed themselves to the same prodigality in production that is practiced in America. I can only cite as proof the fact that while in England this summer with the Eddie Polo Company, which produced the serial 'The Thirteenth Hour' and which I directed, I noticed that the English film producers were astonished at our methods. They failed to understand why we took such pains and care in the erection of small sets and they were actually astounded when they heard of the amount of money we spent in the erection of some of the medium and large sets. They would hardly believe that we had come abroad just to get realistic and original surroundings. You see the English producers still stick to the painted canvass for background. Their properties are not at all real, and yet they wonder why American films are better liked.

"The cameras used by the Britishers are — well they aren't modern in any sense of the word. They are old and antique. They are still using the cameras which resemble the old Williamson machine, containing none of the modern attachments, and in no way do they compare to our Bell-Howell machines with the triple lenses.

"I can see a great demand — an almost overwhelming demand for American made films. I happen to know that Universal has a supply of films ready for foreign shipment, and they are not old films either. In fact our English branch is receiving steadily our latest productions. I had heard so much about the recent dislike for American films abroad — that was before I went there on this last trip — but my views certainly were changed after getting in touch with the people themselves."

Changes in Kinema, Los Angeles

Under New Management Beneficial Shifts are Made; Many Big Features are Booked

SINCE the purchase of the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, by T. L. Tally from the Kehrlein Brothers, who have conducted the house since its opening, almost two years ago, the new management has made a number of changes affecting the stage, installed a new pipe organ and made other changes beneficial to this third largest theatre of Los Angeles.

The theatre in the future will be known as Tally's Kinema, and is to continue under the managing directorship of Charles Dumond, who has been at the house for the past nine months. Prior to Mr. Tally's departure for New York to attend the First National Directors meeting, he announced a policy for the Kinema which he states will be strictly adhered to. In his statement which appeared in the Los Angeles press, Mr. Tally said particular stress would be laid upon the pictures, he believing that the attention should be centered on this, and not distracted by near vaudeville acts. The Tally management became effective with the week of October 5th, when the second Pickford First National "The Hoodlum" was the feature. This was preceded by a short dance number in which six girls depicted "The Joy of Youth." Other numbers on the bill were the Hawaiian Island travelogue of the Prisma Company. This was followed by the Educational subject, "How Volcanoes are Formed."

Pictures booked for Tally's Kinema include "The Girl From Outside," Rex Beach production; Clara Kimball Young in "The Eyes of Youth," "Back to God's Country," First National; the first D. W. Griffith First National; Marshall Neilan's "Bob Hampton of Placer," a First National; Mary Pickford's third First National "Hearts of the Mountains," and Charles Ray First National.

Bookings for Tally's Broadway Theatre will include films starring Norma and Constance Talmadge, Katherine MacDonald, Anita Stewart and the Chaplin comedies, all First National subjects.

Picture Men at Friar's Gathering

In establishing Thursday of each week as Club Night, the Friars have started the most popular innovation in the history of the club. The first affair, sponsored by Friar Edgar Selden, took on the atmosphere of the motion picture, and the notables in the assemblage present resembled what was aptly termed the Bradstreets of Filmdom. Motion picture magnates, movie stars, directors, camera-men, distributers and publicity purveyors thronged the great hall. Whitman Bennett, of the Famous Players-Lasky-Artcraft, spoke of the intimate affiliation of the screen and the spoken stage. Commodore J. Stuart Blackton gave a vivid review of the celluloid drama from its inception, through its experimental stages and present-day presentation.

Katherine MacDonald Stars in "The Beauty Market"

Following in the trail of "The Thunderbolt," Katherine MacDonald's first production to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, "The Beauty Market," declared to be one of the strongest society dramas ever filmed, has been completed and with finishing touches will shortly be ready for release.

day for exploitation and we have come to regard advertising as a fifty percent factor in a picture's box-office success. As an instance, Famous Players-Lasky spent $124,808.00 on an advertising space in the month of September, 1919.

We speak hesitantly on this matter of production equipment, fully aware that the United States has had opportunity to develop along these lines without heavy war restrictions. And, in no respect do we speak in a bragging way. We are fully aware, for instance, that this country has been very backward in its export development along most every line, because it has chosen not to investigate carefully its foreign fields. But after all this is a business matter and business is cold-blooded, a pure matter of supply and demand, and powerless to be otherwise.

Mr. Atkinson says — that men like Wm. A. Brady and R. A. Rowland have feelingly advocated reciprocity here for British made pictures. So they have. The American trade feels likewise. Mr. Brady spoke emphatically to the writer, on this subject. And the writer replied, as he has here, that selling British pictures in this market is and must necessarily be a matter of making pictures in a foresighted way to meet a known demand and then selling them as any product must be sold in a foreign field.

There Must Be Reciprocity, Says British

man's intention is to fight. He is organizing for that purpose. He should have organized long ago. We are a slow lot on this side, but when we organize we acquire a sort of momentum that takes us to the goal. It may even be that British films will be shown in America, but when they are they will start from this side with a guarantee of exhibition, and pass above the ordinary channels, if there are such, of film entry into the States. Meantime, if the American film trade wishes to reconsider its attitude, the way is open for it to do so. There is no need to warn the American exhibitor that he is taking a risky step in showing British films. There is no need to warn him that British actors and actresses are unknown to the American public, and that British films will therefore need special methods of advertising.

"Hands Across the Sea" is an excellent sentiment, but the British producer feels that the effect may sometimes more resemble the impact of a fist in the solar plexus.

"Poor Relations" is American in Theme and Spirit

"Poor Relations", the Brentwood picture, produced for Robertson-Cole, will be released during October. The story, which has been written by King Vidor, is described as one dealing with the everyday phases of American Life and the theme is said to center around the home-life of a typical American family.

American Public Is Subject to Hysteria

Article on Admissions by E. V. Richards, Jr.

Secretary and General Manager Saenger Amusement Company

The growth of the motion picture industry has been remarkable. The growth of the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans has paralled the growth of its "patron saint," the motion picture. Eleven years ago the Saenger Brothers, a firm of druggists in Shreveport, whose store was (and still is) the barometer that registered public opinion and public desires in Shreveport, determined to venture into the infant industry and opened the Saenger Theatre in Shreveport. A year previous, E. V. Richards, Jr., a traveling showman, had "played" the town and was struck with its possibilities. Ever and again the thought recurred that there was a fertile field. And the showman returned and, impressed with the energy and acumen of the Saenger Brothers, associated himself with them as manager of their enterprise. From that day to this the history of the Saenger Company is a record of expansion and achievement. Texarkana, Alexandria and Monroe, become the nucleus of the "Saenger Circuit." In Shreveport, meanwhile, the Ehrlich interests were amalgamated. Then the Saengers came marching through Louisiana to New Orleans and built the Strand. The Fitchenberg Enterprises were taken over and the escutcheon of the company carried east past the Mississippi into Mississippi and Florida, and west past the Sabine into Texas. Additional theatres were rapidly added to the lists in various southern states until the Saenger slogan become "We cover Dixie Like the Dew." The circuit is now one of the very largest in America. We have given you this history of E. V. Richards, Jr., and of the company over whose destinies he presides, that you may fully realize that when a man of his calibre writes an article that the thoughts therein contained, the opinions expressed are not those of a motion picture fieldgling. Exhibitors of Mr. Richards' standing and knowledge are writing these articles for the News. Read each one carefully and this one in particular.

IT is not surprising that "Selective Booking" should be used by the producer as an argument for prying higher prices from exhibitors. As a matter of fact, "Selective Booking," "Fewer and Better Pictures," etc., are greater booms for the producer than for anyone else concerned, for if the producer is honest in his intentions he will simply be cutting away the barnacles which have impeded his ship's motion through the water when he makes fewer and better pictures; and he will have more assets and fewer liabilities cluttering the safes of his distributers.

"Selective Booking," "Fewer and Better Pictures," and whatever else like arrangements may be termed spell ECONOMY, nothing less, for the producer. With ten pictures worthy of steady engagements he will be in a far better shape than with twenty, of which half are deadwood. It has been proven that a few good pictures will not redeem an equal or greater number of bad ones, and that a few bad ones will condemn several good ones.

There is every reason why "Selective Booking," if coupled with better pictures, should mean a greater number of "days" for each picture, thus aggregating for each picture a handsome profit to the producer. There is no reason why "Selective Booking" should mean bigger rental prices per diem. At any rate, the exhibitors who refuse to be intimidated are not a whit perplexed by demands for exorbitant rentals.

The American public is subject to hysteria. Every man with anything to sell has taken advantage of the disordered condition to raise prices. There is no foundation in fact for the outrageous "gyps" we have been made to stand for this thing and for that. The natural laws of supply and demand in materials and labor caused prices to skyrocket after our entrance into the World War. Profiteering thereafter has kept these prices on an advance. There now seems due a recession of the Excessive Price Wave.

There has been no profiteering in exhibitor circles. Whatever advances have been made in admission rates in the past two years have not been in ratio with the price advances in necessities. But we have reached the peak and it will not be safe for the exhibiting interests to go one step farther.

Let us not forget the fable of the peasant and his goose that laid golden eggs. Not being content to gather his one egg daily, said peasant sharpened his knife and proceeded to investigate the inside of his goose, thinking to gather all of his eggs at one time. He killed the goose that laid the golden eggs, failed to find a treasure trove inside and lost his source of income.

Higher prices now will be the knife that will kill our goose. The motion picture industry was born despised of all but a few curiosity seekers. Proving merit of a sort, its infancy was nourished with the nickels of the untutored masses. Gathering strength on this pap it grew in popularity and ten cents was paid, still by the masses and not a little grudgingly at first. Little by degrees inevitable improvement brought the screen to the attention of more critical spectators, and eventually photodrama replaced flicker-pictures and the industry prospered. Exhibitors built new temples of greater pretense and studied presentation. Fifteen, twenty and twenty-five cent prices became possible because by this time the exhibitors themselves arranged attractive shows and the public expected to pay more for anything — and this time is THE PRESENT.

We are operating one theatre which charges fifty cents regularly and plays each program a minimum of one week. It plays the unrestricted choice of the world's best offerings, and its programs are the latest word in completeness, eight units comprising the bill. The famous Italian bandmaster, Don Philipini, directs a concert orchestra in this theatre. It includes vocal soloists and tableaux, besides pretentious musical numbers, in its presentations.

The attractions of this theatre are circuited at the same price of admission.

We also have in this city five other theatres. One of them has a regular Lower 25, Mezzanine 15c., policy, minimum changes semi-weekly. Two of them vary from 20 to 25c. top. The other two charge 10c. They, however, do not play first run pictures. And we contemplate no increase in prices in any of these theatres; we are not tempted to sharpen the knife to search for all the golden eggs at one time.

Let us not forget that it is still the masses who support motion pictures. We are really not expecting "Selective Booking" to do the impossible, that is, to result in pictures of uniformly high standard of quality. Every picture that proves real class will, however, enjoy longer runs with

Your Idea and Ours

THERE have been displays used on this Pickford picture "The Hoodlum" which we personally didn't like which on the other hand we had to admit were good providing one could accept the vein in which the advertising was written as the proper thing with a star who occupies the position Miss Pickford does with the public. We refer to advertising which has emphasized the hoodlum part of Miss Pickford's role in this feature and which has used cuts showing her in characterizations after she begins living in the slums.

However in this display by the Tivoli of San Francisco, all the value of presenting this star in her old time character is retained and the people who have placed Miss Pickford on a pedestal as "America's sweetheart" aren't shocked to see their favorite star with face blackened hardly recognizible and to them wholly repulsive. This ad of the Tivoli's starts out by saying "joy" and that is what people who are strong for Pickford want, and then a good likeness of her is shown as she appears in ingenue roles with the other impersonations framed as secondary to that of the larger photograph.

The Tivoli ad man has sense. He has made his ad tell San Francisco that Mary Pickford is a character actress as well as an ingenue and invites a comparison of the different makeups she uses for this feature. He has builded an interest in the picture and prepared people for what to some would come as rather a shock seeing "sweet little Mary Pickford playing around like a hoodlum and shooting crap." The Tivoli makes a practice of listing the balance of it's program which is something we believe should always be done when advertising space of sufficient size is purchased.

The Lord loveth a cheerful giver and so does the film exchange guy.

MAYBE the New Unique bought big space for this show before the opening and has Minneapolis well informed as to its dramatic merits, but if it didn't, then "The Right to Happiness" isn't getting the billing it deserves.

There are some pictures where we believe that a small space tastefully arranged will do as much good as a larger one, but "The Right to Happiness" is not one of these. This is a smashing big melodrama, that needs to be advertised in big bold fashion with a lot of extravagant promises made as to its pleasing qualities.

We wouldn't hesitate a minute on buying a page for this production and then we'd use some good scene cuts and give Dorothy Phillips some big head lines, tell 'em a little bit about the dramatic part of the story, go after the labor class and the capitalists too with our selling talk and make every effort to impress the reader with the fact that this is a picture which doesn't come along every day. This ad is all right in a way but it isn't big enough, two columns by six inches, for a picture of this sort. When you have a feature which costs you a lot of money and will stand boosting, that is the time to cut away from all traditions and forget that newspaper space costs so much per. However, we will alibi ourselves on this one by again saying that maybe the New Unique has done what we recommend and that this ad is just a reminder that the film is still playing.

Some exhibitors can't foot their expense bills without kicking.

HYMAN has come through with another mighty good display, this time on "Lombardi Ltd." To frame this we would judge that he selected a good still and used no producers materials. Anyway the result he has obtaineed must have been productive of good business for the Rivoli (Denver).

If we had been going to do this job we don't think we would have neglected to say that "Lombardi Ltd." is an adaptation of the stage success of the same name although we must admit that we can't just see any place where this reading matter could be sandwiched in without harming the artistic appearance of the ad.

In size this was three columns by eight inches. This is a fair sample of the Rivoli advertising which to our minds rates well with the best of the hand drawn variety to which we are rather partial except that we realize that about ninety per cent of the exhibitors aren't interested in it for the reason that they are barred out by conditions from trying to duplicate anything on this order.

Suspect not the film exchange man's words but rather their meaning.

THIS display on Doug in "His Majesty, The American" is different than anything yet seen on the picture and recommends itself as a very good follow-up ad for use on a star like Fairbanks where selling talk isn't needed.

"Nothing succeeds like success" is the basis of the Moore's Rialto appeal in this display. Nothing tends to advertise a show like telling them that the S. R. O. sign is out providing it was or nearly so. Everybody likes to be in with the crowd and a yell like this bragging about what business a feature did is the best kind of advertising. To attract attention Moore's has used one of the excellent cuts prepared by the producers and which is typical of Fairbanks as people like him best. We think this is worth cutting out for the last day of your engagement on "His Majesty."

This was a quarter page clear across the sheet.

How Exhibitors Advertise

HERE is an unusual display by the Princess of St. Paul, Minn., on "The Wolf," in the placing of the star's name, the title of the production and the other matter within the white space which has been framed to suggest a front view of a wolf's head. The Princess has staked most of the ad's appeal on the headlines, the selling talk not being extensive, but in this we believe that the theatre is correct. We would say that the fact that this is Eugene Walter's play with Williams starred is the big bet. This display looked well on the page, the white space making it stand out. In size the ad was three columns by eight inches. No producer's materials have been used here except the cut of Williams. Only exhibitors who have the facilities for reber of the new Fox News, which also featured a local event, the reunion of the Confederated Veterans.

Ordinarily we would say that giving a weekly so much space as this, although we do believe in mentioning them, even to listing the various strips, would be a bad advertising policy but here is a case when the local element makes it the one best bet. In fact if we had been doing this we would have spread the local stuff all over the page if we had to buy the paper to do it. "Hitching on to local color" as our good friend Branham says is the right dope in this picture game. Never miss a chance to tie up something local with your show, even if it is remote. We are willing to gamble that nine out of ten people who came to the Criterion to see this picture went away with the feeling that the feature picture was the news weekly strip, which makes us ask: "What is a feature?" Something that sticks up its head as a business attractor which in this case is a few hundred feet of a current-event real.

"I thank you" doesn't pay the house rent but it makes friends of patrons.

THE Isis of Denver has a very pretty and artistic display here, hand-drawn and nicely framed, but the ad doesn't say a single thing beyond announcing Alice Joyce in "The Winchester Woman," etc., which to our minds unless a star is so very popular that the story is of no importance, is not the best advertising.

At least the Isis should have told Denver that this is a mystery story in which an innocent woman is accused of murder, etc.

has given "Gentlemen Jim" a great send off.

In the first place advertising a serial is somewhat different than advertising a feature picture. The people who really get interested in a serial production aren't usually the ones who will look over your advertising too closely after seeing what you advertised to find out if you equivocated and they also are the kind generally who expect you to lie a little about your show and your show shop.

That's the reason we say this is a good ad, principally if we are to take the size and the way it is framed as a matter of course and just pass on the policy of billing 'em extravagantly.

Give a man enough rope and he'll smoke himself to death.

THE Plaza theatre of San Diego, Cal., does some mighty good advertising. If it wasn't located in the West where the tank towns seem to have it on the big centres of the East when it comes to picture exploitation, we would say "extraordinary" advertising.

This display of the Plaza's three columns by seventeen inches is quite up to this theatre's standard and, therefore, A-1 stuff.

There is a good cut of Reed, a first-class descriptive scene cut and some appropriate selling talk. The Plaza is correct in giving the fact that this is a Peter B. Kyne story prominence even with a star at the head of the cast enacting the feature, like Reid, for this author is very popular, especially since his stories began

We don't know whether or not any of this ad is producers cut and that doesn't matter. The point is, it is mighty good display, advertising a picture in the right vein and in the right way. We call attention to the "starting hours" which the Plaza has inserted near the bottom of the display. Everyday it is becoming more important to guard against people coming in and catching the feature in the middle and thereby spoiling what would otherwise be good entertainment for them and may be losing a good patron for you. Of course the Plaza might have said something about the other numbers on the bill. That's another thing we are always yelling about.

The man of loose habit usually turns at home in a tight state.

THE ad man of the American (Butte, Mont.) evidently decided to let two good scene cuts depicting action advertise "The Thirteenth Chair" for him along with the brief statement that this is a picturization of the play of the same name.

We think he was correct in his assumption that this was the proper thing to do in this case inasmuch as the feature does not have a star on which he can base a claim for appeal. The only trouble is that his cuts do not print up well enough so they mean very much toward the putting over idea the ad man had in mind. Neither are they framed very artistically with the reading matter or the hand drawn circle within which the title of the feature is billed.

However this ad will attract attention since it is big space, four columns wide by a full page in depth. We also believe that better results have been secured here than

WE call this the best display we have yet seen on Mabel Normand's last picture "Up Stairs."

In view of the fact that advertising is a matter of opinion and cannot be judged except by comparison with what one is accustomed to, we may perhaps lay ourselves open to question in so broad a statement for we know many good live showmen who would never O. framed in bold type, with black ink and plenty of superlatives, and they will prove to you that it is the way by the recital of their experiences.

Here is our idea why this is the best thing we have seen on "Up Stairs." Mabel Normand made her reputation as "Keystone Mabel." She is still "Keystone Mabel" in the minds of picture fans and they want to see her in "Keystone Mabel" stuff. This display of the Trianon, New Orleans, tells you that this is a "Keystone Mabel" picture from selling talk to illustration. It is in tune with the production and the production is the kind that people want to see Miss Normand play. We could go on talking about this ad for another half page, saying "the star's name is properly displayed, etc," but what is the use Here is the ad. We think it is mighty good. Exhibitors who think the same as we do will copy it and those who don't will use a borrowed idea of someone else's, and there you are.

Lacey Wins Merited Promotion

Frank Lacey, live wire manager of the Majestic theatre has been promoted to manager of the Star Theatre. He will retain his direction of the Majestic, the Star being located exactly across the street from the Majestic, making it possible for him to easily keep his eye on both places. The Star and the Majestic are now under the same management as the Star and the Peoples theatre were purchased recently by J. J. Jennings, president of the Majestic Amusement company, and by Jensen and Von Herberg which in turn purchased half the stock of the Majestic Amusement Company.

Going The Top Notchers One Better is Grauman's Motto

AND still the art of presenting the photoplay grows ever toward magnificence and according to artistic standards, which make us wonder to what height it will travel since it is but a few years since the "movie" was looked upon as a cheap diversion of uneducated people. Now we are seeing numbers given in the motion picture theater which in the past were accorded place on only the so-called "high brow" program, grand opera or the lecture course number.

The specific instance we are recording of the continued evolution of the cinema theatre is from the home of the motion picture, Los Angeles and the house itself is "Grauman's," one of the foremost of the Western metropolis' picture palaces.

Grauman's has always been in the foremost ranks in photoplay presentation and has kept pace with the growing vogue of using stage settings and prologues.

Following this policy, the return of Sid Grauman to his native city from New York signalized an unusual event even for Graumans which with the quality of the feature picture selected for the bill of the week, set a new box office record for the "Million Dollar Theatre."

The feature picture mentioned was Maurice Tourneur's "The Life Line" and the stage spectacle was H. S. Linne's "Unveiling the Temple of Love" and now the question which Los Angeles students of the show business are pondering over is whether the photoplay or the dancing number was instrumental for the phenomenal business the house enjoyed for the full week.

Just how the pro's and con's would end in this argument probably no one would ever be able to judge, since what does and what does not bring business to the theatre is something which can not be measured by any rules yet devised by human ingenuity.

Anyway the dancing troupe have a wonderful interpertation, one which our California representative who is something of a "hard boiled" guy states would be a credit to Ziegfield and his Follies. One thing is certain, and that is that the week is a triumph for France, as both Tourneur and Linne hail from the land of the fleur-de-lis, and both are scoring probably the biggest triumphs of their career since they decided to exploit art beneath the sunny skies of Southern California. Seldom has the press of Los Angeles bestowed praise so lavishly as it has on both "The Life Line" and "Unveiling the Temple of Love." The rare genius and fine vision of Sid Grauman, however, in taking such a bold step forward artistically, in causing to be presented to a middle class audience so absolutely artistic a spectacle as "Unveiling the Temple of Love," will probably have a marked influence upon the future of the ballet in Los Angeles, now fast developing into an incomparable New World art centre. Men of smaller calibre than Sid Grauman would have long hesitated in allowing a man of Mr. Linne's splendid artistic attainment free financial rein.

Northwest Exhibitors Circuit Use Novel Exploitation Methods

"BETTER TIMES" has been the subject of wide exploitation throughout the country because of its happy title, but the work of the Northwest Exhibitors Circuit in putting it over affords an example of the up-to-the-minute methods of this organization and of the genuine help they extend to members. In that territory the picture went big, and much of the success is undoubtedly due to the splendid campaign outlined by officials of the circuit.

The campaign started in Seattle where the Chamber of Commerce and various other commercial clubs and organizations were interested in making the slogan of the city "Better Times Coming." The slogan appeared on small cards widely distributed, on twenty-four sheet stands, on stickers which merchants used on their stationery, and on some street cars which became "moving billboards."

There was not a hint of the fact that "Better Times" was a picture. The slogan stood alone. But on the day the show was to open at Clemmer's Theatre the slogan became "Better Times — HERE — at Clemmer's Theatre."

The campaign took on the nature of a general movement for boosting the city when the cards and tags appeared bearing the words "Better Times — Watch" on one side, and on the other the following verse:

If you want to live in the kind of a town,
Like the kind of a town that you like —
You needn't slip your clothes in a grip
And start on a long, long hike;
You'll only find what you left behind —
For there's nothing that's really new;
It's a knock at yourself when you knock your town —
It isn't the town — it's you.

Real towns are not made by men afraid
Lest somebody else gets ahead;
When everybody works and nobody shirks,
You can raise a town from the dead;
And if, while you're making your stake,
Your neighbor can make one, too,
Your town will be what you want to see —
It isn't the town — it's you.

The cards were distributed in banks and office buildings and the tags were taken out one night and hung on the doors of most of the homes in the residential section. When the residents came out in the morning they were met with the message and the slogan and campaign became the talk of the city.

In the papers of the city many small "ads" appeared. They were cuts with a black background and in white letters "Better Times" appeared. The next day the wording was "Better Times, How?" and following progressively came "Better Times, When?" "Better Times, Where?" "Better Times, knocking at your door."

Finally the day before the picture was shown a tie-up with local merchants was arranged and two "Better Times" pages were filled with merchant advertising all containing the slogan in the "Post Intelligencer." The theatre itself used four-column, full page length, displays, and the arrival of the photoplay was known to every man, woman and child in the community. Records were broken in the week that followed.

A complete description of the campaign and the news of its success was immediately sent to every exhibitor in the territory and the cities and smaller places followed the lead of Clemmer with complete success. The value to the picture, according to exhibitors who have written, is that it is big enough to stand the exploitation and the people whose interest has been aroused are entirely satisfied. Not alone in the Northwest, but along the whole Pacific Coast the exploitation of the picture was exceptional and the results have been extraordinary.

Putting "Evangeline" Over in Denver

WHEN Manager Edward L. Hyman of the Rivoli Theatre of Denver undertook the exploitation of the William Fox super-production, "Evangeline," based on Henry W. Longfellow's immortal poem, he missed no chance for giving the picture adequate publicity. To start with, he had cards announcing the showing date and theatre hung up in the schools of the city; then he placarded the book and stationery stores with other cards. Of course store windows and billboards, etc., were taken care of in the usual effective manner a week or more in advance of the showing.

The Sunday the picture began its engagement a Sunday newspaper carried a half column news story in its news section telling about a contest open to all school children of the city and in which they were to write essays on the picture "Evangeline" and submit them to the contest department of the theatre. The prizes were to be season tickets good for a year, six months and three months each, seven awards in all being offered. At this writing the contest had not closed, so its full measure of success as a publicity measure cannot be estimated. Be it said, however, that it attracted widespread interest and many interesting essays were submitted.

Letters also were written by Manager Hyman to leading educators of the city telling them of the value of the picture from an educational standpoint. The result of all this publicity, most of it carried out by Meredith Davis, publicity manager for the four William Fox theatres in Denver, was packed houses at almost every performance of the week's run in Denver's great picture palace.

us so that each picture with real merit will net its distributer real money in extended bookings; in other words, each real picture will earn its distributer more than three or more inferior pictures.

We do not approve an unstable price policy. Better have a fixed policy and have your house known as one charging a certain price, whether it be ten, fifteen or twenty-five.

Summed up, our policies will tend to holding admission prices down. We may be flattered at the number of limousines parked around our theatres, but let us not forget that their occupants form but a lining for the full house who came in Fords, street cars or on Shanks' mare. Let us all be careful.

A cat may have nine lives, a goose has but one.

Using the Woodpile for Exploitation Purposes

SOME few weeks ago we were able to print a photograph of a lobby display on "The Valley of the Giants" in which the principal things needed to build this display was not a clever scenic artist and a whole stage carpenters shop but a load of "slab wood."

We like to get hold of stories of that kind in as much as when we do we have placed before our readers practical demonstration of a business letter which doesn't cost more than the exhibitor could expect to take in at his box office if he does capacity for his whole engagement.

Therefore it is with pleasure that we have grabbed these two photographs which illustrate better than words can tell, what C. W. Diebel, manager of the Liberty theatre, Youngstown, O., did with a lobby display on "Wolves of the Night."

The same idea which was utilized on "The Valley of the Giants" has been used by Mr. Diebel. He visited the lumber yard and probably for a few dollars bought not only enough material for his lobby display but also enough kindling for the Liberty's heating plant to last half the winter.

With Farnum about to appear, the lobby of the Liberty theatre was a remarkable sight. It was most attractive, and set off the star and story in such a way that the people literally flocked to the theatre. "Wolves of the Night" ran for four days in Youngstown to record-breaking business. Rough, untrimmed boards, trunks of trees, birch wood, fir and rugged branches were so placed as to emphasize the fact that he was a story of the rough and ready kind with a virile, powerful star. Action was the cue of the story—and the action that Mr. Diebel got from the public set a new record for motion picture theatres in Youngstown.

Detroit Gives "The Miracle Man" Unusual Publicity

"THE Miracle Man," now playing a long engagement at the Broadway Strand theatre in Detroit was assured of good business, as it has done elsewhere but that didn't deter Phil Gleichman, managing director of the house, from putting over a broadside in the way of a publicity campaign. All of which insured the business.

The advertising campaign was begun some three weeks before the picture was scheduled to appear. There were a series of teaser advertisements running in the newspapers for this period. These "teasers" consisted of snappy bits of good writing on the play with the announcement that it would shortly be shown in Detroit. No theatre was named until one week before the opening date and then the Broadway Strand was mentioned in small type only. In other words, it was planned to interest the public in the play. The big advertising of a display nature just before the opening, assuring knowledge of where it would be.

At the same time bill posters were set at work and 5,000 small snipe, concerning the coming of "The Miracle Man" were posted in all sections of the city. Other outdoor advertising consisted of the hanging of 1,000 dated lithographs.

A jewelry store window was secured in the centre of the city, at the busiest corner in town and here, each night, there was a display of scenes from the play with the announcement that it was coming to the Broadway Strand. The jeweler supplied silver frames to hold the photographs. Window displays were also secured without trouble in all the leading book stores with the book, of course, prominently displayed.

Several stunts were worked with the newspapers. The Detroit Free Press ran an advertising section, advertising the picture with a layout and some descriptive matter and offering prizes ranging from a full box to balcony seats to those who could pick out the words "Broadway Strand" the most number of times from the letters used in the advertisements.

The Detroit Journal opened up a contest with cash prizes and theatre tickets for the best letter on faith cures. This contest aroused a great amount of interest and hundreds of letters were printed by the newspaper.

A screening was given five days before the opening to which were invited Christian science readers and practitioners, the clergy, newspaper editors, city and county officials and officers of women's clubs. The affair was by invitation only and fully 800 were in attendance.

All of which resulted in long lines forming in front of the box office Sunday and every succeeding day with the theatre playing to capacity at every performance. Six shows are being given daily, the first starting at 11:15 A. M.

Stage setting used at the Tivoli, San Francisco, during the showing of "The Girl From Outside"

Johnson Exemplifies the Meaning of "The Show Must Go On"

HERE is the story of an optimist. A record of a living example of the spirit which has characterized the show business since the time Bill Shakespeare trouped around England. It will also give some of the managers who have a suite of offices all furnished up with mahogany furniture, with a private secretary and two or three stenographers, to say nothing of a corps of experts on which they may depend in a time of trouble, what the small town exhibitor is up against when some thing breaks bad in his young exhibiting life.

Middlefield, Ohio, isn't much of a town and the Co-operative Movie Company's theatre isn't much of a theatre, judged by merely physical standards. But how Manager Smith M. Johnson surmounted seemingly insurmountable difficulties and "put on the show" makes a story that will warm the cockles of many an exhibitor's heart who passed through the "early days." Moreover, it should comfort the minds of some of the fellows who think — only think — they have troubles of their own.

Here is Mr. Johnson's own story, which reaches Broadway via the Famous-Players Lasky publicity department, who induced the resourceful manager to tell all about his recent stunt which is good for headlines in the newspapers.

"In response to your request that we should give an account of our difficulties in the picture business, I will tell you something of what we were up against.

"The Co-operative Movie Company is only a part of the Ohio Pail Company which operated a pail factory and the town lighting plant in connection with it up to the time of the fire. One morning at 10 o'clock our dry kilns were found in flames and within two hours the entire plant and electrical equipment had burned to the ground. While it was yet burning we happened to think of a large traction engine which we were using in a saw mill a couple of miles away and we got the operator to start it over towards our plant

"As there was a 15 h.p. motor in one of the feed mills in the town we got this over and set it up in a small garage shed which was not burned and fastened it down securely so that when our engine arrived we were ready to hitch it on. Of course, the insulation had been burned off the wires where they entered the power plant but we insulated them after a fashion and hitched them on to the motor (which we had changed to a generator). All this took time, but we had the lights in the town going by dark, although they had to be very economical in their use.

"A few nights later came our regular picture show, and as we had been having very large crowds at the Paramount-Ar craft programs we had been showing it seemed a shame to give it up on account of the lack of power. So we cut the town lights out and by using the street light line as a feeder we had street lights and a picture show. We advertised that people who stayed at home would have to sit in the dark. So they came and the house was packed.

"Each Wednesday night we have worked the same stunt and the crowds are there."

Famous Tivoli Once More To The Fore

THE famous Tivoli theatre of San Francisco, once the home of grand opera and whose auditorium has housed the most brilliant assemblages of the Golden Gate City and whose stage has been graced by the World's premiere artists. but for the past few years a motion picture house, is going in for elaborate stage settings and prologues those days in connection with their photoplay presentations.

The latest example of what the Tivoli is doing along these lines is illustrated by the accompanying cut. An elaborate prologue with a special drop was used in connection with the engagement of Rex Beach's picture, "The Girl From Outside." The curtain went up on a semi-dark stage while off-stage music was supplied by a male quartette. Standing on the stage at the left, was a local actress Miss Davis, dressed in furs. At the conclusion of the quartette number, Miss Davis recited Robert W. Service's "The Spell of The Youkon." The backdrop represented the northern seas with icebergs in the near distance. The Northern Lights were flashed across the skies, a dummy Eskimo was seen paddling a native canoe and there were two other canoes in the foreground. Above the water there appeared the heads of two walruses. Snowshoes and other articles appropriate to an Alaskan setting also were included in the scene, all having been secured from local furrier without cost to the management.

"Red Lantern" Lobby Displays Continue to Thrive

THE way which "The Red Lantern" continues to go on and on in its popularity with the public is a matter worthy of thought. Is it such a wonderful picture or is it because it lends itself particularly well to special publicity stunts, or both?

Anyway no one can gainsay that the publicity the feature has received almost from its initial showing is still a potent factor in the films history.

The latest record we are able to present of "The Red Lantern's" trail of success comes from Billings Montana where the feature played the Babcock theatre, managed by A. H. West.

As usual the report is big business and the use of a lobby display and other attendant extra exploitation.

A glance at the accompanying photograph will give the reader a better idea of what Mr. West did than attempting to describe his display.

The dressing of the ushers in the costumes of the picture made a distinct hit with Billings fans and also gave the girls a week of great fun as every woman loves to "dress up."

Mr. West feels sure that his exploitation of the feature and especially the lobby display was one of the things which brought him capacity business at every show.

Orphans Attend Theatre Party at Memphis

GETTING front page publicity from two to four columns daily for ten days; upsetting all traffic rules on the principal business street in a city of 175,000 and making the cops like it; stopping local retail business for several minutes just like a circus parade does and getting cheers and smiles from the merchants and burning up gallons of perfectly good gasoline and having the autoists holler for more miles, may sound like giving away free tickets to a circus and barbecue. But this actually happened along with many other interesting things in Memphis the week of Sept. 28 to Oct. 4.

The occasion was a special publicity stunt staged by C. A. McElravy, general manager and G. E. Brown, publicity director, of the Memphis Enterprise, Inc., in collaboration with the Memphis Press when 500 of the orphans of various charitable institutions of Memphis were entertained as guests of the Strand Theatre at a special morning showing of Mary Pickford in "The Hoodlum."

Several smashing big ads and the advance publicity obtained in "The Press," caused all standing box office records at the Strand to be smashed Sunday, the opening day. The day's returns went well over the highest topnotch figure in the theatre's history, this previously having been held by "Over the Top."

The crowds at the theatre when the doors opened were so great that special police had to be stationed at the theatre to preserve order and keep traffic clear in the street.

The big event upon which the publicity was obtained, was held Tuesday morning when more than 100 autos participated in the festivities. Cars were instructed to assemble at the downtown offices of The Press at 9 o'clock from where they were to be dispatched to the various orphanages. Coupons had been carried on the front page of The Press for a week and more than sufficient car owners had signed these pledges and had mailed them, to care for the entire number of orphan guests.

Here are some of the cars which took the Memphis orphans to the Strand's theatre party

When 9 oclock rolled around, traffic on Jefferson avenue was locked for two squares and the congestion extended into two nearby streets. In order to scatter the cars as quickly as possible, tickets, which already had been printed, were handed to the drivers directing them to one of the orphanages. This quickly relieved the congestion but still the cars came. Before 9:30 when the last cars of the first arrivals had cleared out another assemblage began to gather and this continued for an hour, more than 150 cars being presented to convey the orphans to the Strand.

While only about 100 cars were needed, others were sent out to the various institutions to pick up any that might not have been accommodated but many cars returned empty. A half dozen of the drivers were rather peeved that they did not get to do their share and some women drivers went so far as to attempt to loot the cars that were filled to capacity.

All the drivers were admitted to the theatre free as were the chaperones of the party.

The parade down Main street proceeded to the din of a hundred klaxons and the traffic cops turned the "go" semaphore at every intersection. The parade circled back over its route to the theatre and unloaded the little guests where they were treated to a surprise and pleasant anticipations.

Inside the lobby were stacked boxes of oranges, apples, nuts, candies and other goodies which had been solicited by Mr. Brown from various wholesale dealers. Even the sacks were donated and while the tots were inside laughing and cheering Mary's stunts a dozen or more theatre attaches and other willing workers, amused the passing throngs sacking the goodies.

Before the performance had ended, more than 500 sacks of edibles dear to a child's heart were stacked up in huge piles at the lobby entrance and were passed out to the little guests as they filed out of the theater.

Each child also was gaily decorated with paper hats and given a rubber balloon, this being the donation of the Coco-Cola people.

Talbot Treats Denver to a Real Barnum Advertising Stunt

METROPOLITAN Denver got a taste of real motion picture exploitation last week—a campaign that made every amusement lover in Colorado's first city proclaim A. G. Talbot, owner of the America Theatre, the nearest approach to P. T. Barnum that ever set foot into America's great silver belt. It was "The Westerners," which inspired the Talbot stunt of stunts, that of taking staid old Deadwood right out of South Dakota and planting it in the heart of Denver.

For a week before the opening the America management had been promising all Denver the biggest surprise in years. It came last Saturday night on the eve of the first performance of "The Westerners" when, from out of one of the suburbs, came a caravan, fully two blocks long bearing a close resemblance to the one Stewart Edward White so glowingly depicted in his book dealing with the thrilling rush for gold in the Dakota Black Hills, and which the surprised Denverites were enthralled to see was an exact replica of the caravan shown in the picturization.

When the procession halted at the America Theatre Denver let out more yells of surprise and admiration, for Mr. Talbot had transformed his lobby into a caravansary. Fully ten thousand people crowded in front of or near the theatre but it was an orderly and good-humored gathering that was set agog for a sight of the picture. A record Sunday business, despite the fact that "The Miracle Man" opened the same day in two local first run houses and the "The Brat" in another, was the result, and throughout the week Mr. Talbot's ticket-sellers had the same story to tell of "you can take your chances; there's standing room only, now."

The caravan parade was staged on Monday and again on Wednesday.

"Broken Blossoms" Lends Itself Well to Publicity

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" promises to be a popular production for novel advertising stunts and especially for the use of lobby displays, since the portion of the title "blossoms" naturally suggests to the exhibitor the idea of using floral decorations.

Here is the first instance we are able to record of a display such as we mention as practicable. We are publishing a letter received from Milwaukee concerning the "Broken Blossoms" showing which is now under way in that city.

Since the information we have concerns what is being done prior to the actual beginning of the engagement we leave the story in the future tense.

"The Merril Theatre has the picture booked starting Oct. 19th. They started to advertise on Oct. 1st with slides and trailers in both the Merrill and Strand Theatres, and cards in their lobby. They have an advertisement on the front of every street car in town. The manager, Mr. Bostick, is sending out 34,000 personal letters which will be mailed in Chicago, the envelope bearing the return "D. W. Griffith, 17 N. Wabash Ave." They are having their ushers from both of their theatres pass 20,000 blotters around the downtown offices in the mornings, in their uniforms.

"The Merrill lobby is decorated with 28,000 pink paper blossoms on lattice work illuminated by small pink electric bulbs, and is a very beautiful sight. They have arranged for a 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS' week in the Badger room, which is the cabaret in the Wisconsin Hotel. During this week the waiters will wear a ribbon with 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS' on it. The room will be decorated with blossoms and the two songs 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS' and 'WHITE BLOSSOMS' will be sung extensively. During the engagement each morning every key box in the leading hotels will have a card in it on 'BROKEN BLOSSOMS.'

"They are advertising for a girl who looks like Lillian Gish to take part in the prologue. They are having a special Chinese drop curtain made for this prologue. They are increasing their orchestra to 25 pieces."

"Lombardi Ltd." and a Fashion Show Score Heavily

"LOMBARDI LTD." whose story has to do largely with a dressmaking shop, one of the exclusive sort where all the feminine creations which cost a barrel of money and are patronized largely by those who have so much of this world's goods that they don't know what to do with it all, naturally suggests itself as being a good picture for a "fashion show," especially since it's release is concurrent with the "release" of the new fall fashions in women's lingerie by America's modistes.

The gowns that the eccentric Lombardi designed in his Fifth Avenue shop, speaking as if the plot of the story was founded on fact which may be it was for all we know, were wonderful viewed even by masculine eyes and is one of the picture's best advertising points. When coupled with a fashion show in which the latest from Paris are actually shown the exhibitor has a combination that can not be beaten.

The accompanying photographs will illustrate what the California theatre of Los Angeles did in the way of exploiting the feature with a fashion show.

The "Lombardi Ltd." engagement at the California was for the week beginning Sept. 29. For several days before the engagement began the theatre's management advertised both the fact that the film itself and the fashion show would exhibit the latest modes in women's apparel, with particular stress being laid on the actual gowns that were to be shown.

The opening performance proved that the angle of exploitation selected was the proper one for the house was filled with fluttering expectant women who seemed to be hanging on the promise made that they were to be given a real treat in the one and only thing a woman is always interested in, the fashions.

The fashion show was staged along the usual lines of parading the manequins about in exclusive models before a specially designed drop which showed off the colors of the lingerie achievements to advantage The showing of the picture also was received with many enthusiastic comments. Even the fact that the film is an entertaining comedy seemed to be overshadowed by the fashion show part of the offering.

"Checkers" Cleans Up at Cleveland

IT is now a matter of film history the way the managers of the Strand, the Orpheum and the Metropolitan theatres in Cleveland each played "Checkers" for a solid week, and simultaneously.

But these three managers did more than just play the film "Checkers." They played "Checkers" with the crowds that swarmed at the ticket windows of their theatres, and with the aid of special police details managed to keep the crowd moving and to fill out the engagement of the picture without either accident or riot.

All three houses played the checkerboard effect to a stand-still in artistically arranged frames. Cut-outs of running horses with jockeys up also were used, and the Orpheum dressed the columns of its portico with boxes of the checker-board design, above which were bigger box-frames showing figures of the principal players in the picture.

The Metropolitan had an equally attractive display while the Strand drew crowds.

Bathing Girls Depart and Minneapolis Wives Now Breathe Freely

WHEN Mack Sennett's bathing beauties departed from Minneapolis and St. Paul they had concluded three weeks' of the most varied and unique entertainment ever offered the motion picture public of the Twin Cities. What's more, they had established a mark in versatility that gives promise of standing until the last chapter is written in the annals of photoplay industry.

The mermaids came to the Twin Cities well advertised — perhaps advertised as no stage congregation had ever been heralded before. But when they departed they had created such advertising for themselves that the advance notices were completed and everlastingly outdone. They rode in airplanes, they rode in racing cars; they went stockingless along the prominent thoroughfares of both cites; they sold papers to raise funds for the poor; they posed in the leading department stores, displaying the latest in dresses and gowns; they were both hosts and guests at various bathing parties; they did everything, that's all.

Perhaps one of the most noticeable features of their three weeks' visit was that of Jacqueline Logan who rose above the clouds in an airplane with Lieutenant Ormer Locklear, acrobatic aviator, and all the time she was attired in a bathing suit. All this happened at the Minnesota State Fair before ten thousands of persons.

Next the mermaids were guests at a bathing party at Calhoun Beach, Minneapolis, after the last night showing had been completed. The newspaper folk of Minneapolis were the guests and needless to say there were a lot present.

Then in St. Paul the entire gathering went into the streets as regular newsies and disposed of hundreds of copies of the St. Paul Daily News, the proceeds going to the children at the State Hospital for cripples. The price of the papers were unlimited and many fancy returns were reported. The same night the bathing girls were hostesses at a party to newspaper folk and others on the stage of the New Liberty theatre, following the final performance.

Next, when the sophisticated woman of fashion took an advanced peep at Dame Fashion's latest creations, she saw the mermaids plum with Brisque, soutache braiding, Malines, lace, tricotine, Alsace blue, tulle and charmeuse, taupe gray and other adornments in the leading department stores of St. Paul. The scheme made a big hit and before the bathing girls left town they had received offers from dozens of sources requesting them to display the latest in fashions.

In Minneapolis they showed at the New Lyric theatre for two weeks and the first week brought record returns to the New Lyric box-office. The lobby was elaborately decorated for the showing and the burlesque film, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," was shown in conjunction. Even the ushers at the theatre were attired in the latest models of bathing suits.

The girls were guests at the Minneapolis Athletic Club the night of Sept. 12, where they gave a swimming and diving exhibition before club members. "Peggy, The Shopper," feature writer for the Minneapolis Daily News, wrote elaborate articles on their costumes as displayed during their stay in the city. All the papers of both cities gave them numerous stories and press notices.

New Stunt Gets "Midnight Man" Much Publicity in Butte

PRECEDING the opening of "The Midnight Man," at the Ansonia theatre in Butte, a novel publicity stunt which excited an unusual amount of comment, was put across.

On Sunday evening a young man attired in a full dress suit, his head and face swathed in bandages, appeared on the streets strolling slowly along and looking neither to the right nor left. To make his costume more incongruous he wore a Stetson hat of the more conventional western style. Before he had been on the streets an hour he was picked up by the police who regarded him as a suspicious character, especially as he would answer no questions when approached by an officer.

The publicity in the press told of the arrest and stated that a prominent business man who wished his name kept out of the affair had rescued the young man from jail, promising to be responsible for him. The next evening he appeared on the streets again and it was hinted that he had again eluded his friends.

It was variously hinted also that the young man was prominent in the city and that he had been injured in an automobile acident which compromised several other prominent people. The "prominent business man" was finally located and without giving his name, the papers stated that he deplored the regrettable publicity given the affair.

The morning papers then announced that Merle Davis, manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company, had issued a statement explaining that the young man's prototype was James J. Corbet, star in the Universal Serial, "The Midnight Man," which was opening at the Ansonia.

Unique Display by Poli's, Wilkesbarre, Pa.

SOME exhibitors have been obsessed with the idea that a lobby creation, to be effective, must be costly, elaborate and pretentious. Sound judgment does not indicate this belief, for, on numerous occasions, it has been proved that the inexpensive lobby arrangements have been most effective — the money spent on them not entering into the consideration but the arrangement of the setting being the main feature.

There is, for example, the display arranged by Poli's Theatre in Wilkesbarre, Pa., last Monday, for "The Thirteenth Chair," the mystery drama, starring Yvonne Delva. The manager of Poli's worked out a carefully designed lobby dressing, which caused no end of comment in his district; yet, he spent a sum that was insignificant.

The big mirror, which decorates the Poli lobby, was painted a dead black, as indicated in the photograph accompanying this article; and, then, in the centre, a big chair was painted in white. This created a most attractive — even startling effect. It was not pretentious, but very striking, nevertheless.

Around his lobby, he ranged thirteen chairs, using the slip covers furnished him by his Exchange, and giving further publicity to "The Thirteenth Chair."

The Poli manager had a good idea; he worked it out consistently and with earned success, for "The Thirteenth Chair" held the screen for three record-breaking days.

In another instance, a manager in the Middle West, obtained a striking display on "The Thirteenth Chair" by putting a dias in his lobby and rigging a fake electric on it. He dared any of his patrons to sit in this chair, by offering the inducement of a pass for any one who would "warm" it for three minutes.

He didn't give away many passes — but he created an interest that crowded his house.

Do Longer Runs Pay? Watts Says They Do

By W. W. Watts,

Owner Gaiety and Vaudette Theatres, Springfield, Illinois

NO doubt there are many exhibitors in various parts of the country who are extremely doubtful and nervous of the "longer runs" policy now being so heartily advocated by producers at this time. Perhaps a few words from one who has been in the film business almost from its inception may be helpful to those who find themselves in distress.

I have operated one of my theatres for thirteen years — the Vaudette — and the Gaiety for the past seven years. We used to change pictures every day. Gradually we got away from that and ran some of them two days. This was considered marvelous. To have the same show two days was thought to mean one big day and one poor day. And it was at first, until we got so we could have two good days on the same film.

Then came the big programs, Paramount, Triangle, Metro, etc. We put Triangle into the Gaiety, using one picture four days, and the other three days. They were turning out two features a week, you will remember. At first we thought four days was a terrible long time to run one film, thought that no picture would be able to stand up for so long a period. After a little while we saw that we were mistaken, that we could use a picture four days with profit. In fact if it was an extra good picture business grew better daily from the word-of-mouth advertising it received. Soon a four days' run was common, as common as our daily change of some time before.

The big test came when we booked a picture for a week. That seemed the limit in long runs. "Just think," people would say, "the Gaiety is advertising a picture for an entire week." And the answer always helped us. It was, "Well, it must be a good one." They were right. Pictures have to be good when you give them long runs. Otherwise someone is going to go broke.

Then for the first time in the history of the Gaiety we ran a picture the second week. This was "The Miracle Man," a picture we believe to be the best that has ever been shown in Springfield. Business was good on every day that we ran it, though weather conditions were sometimes decidedly against theatre-going. It rained on the opening Sunday, again during the week. It turned extremely hot and it rained torrents on the second Sunday we had it. Despite all this we were able to show a nice profit on the engagement. And we were certainly surprised at the number of people who came to see "The Miracle Man" two and three times. The picture cost us about twice as much as we had ever before paid for a film, yet we had no complaint to offer when the whole thing was over.

Our advertising was very heavy both before and during the engagement. We used some billboards, but most of our money was spent in the newspapers. One of the local dailies, The Illinois State Journal, gave us a fine editorial before the picture opened. The editorial writer, Frank Waller Allen, a famous author, knew the story of "The Miracle Man" and praised it highly. This helped. In addition to the local dailies we used ten small town papers in and around Springfield suburbs, using two ten inch advertisements in each. This got results, as we happen to know.

So much for long runs at the Gaiety. At my other theatre, the Vaudette, which seats about 550, I have always been in the habit of changing twice a week. That is for the past two or three years. Sometimes we changed three times a week, when we thought we had weak pictures. When I signed the new Paramount-Artcraft program for 1919–1920, the short number of pictures practically compelled me to play them longer than I had been doing. I admit it was with some fear that I put Dorothy Dalton in "The Market of Souls" on for a week. The result surprised me.

One of the best displays we have seen in exploiting "The 13th Chair" is this one by Poli's Theatre at Wilkesbarre, Pa.

To Get Acquainted With Your Patrons—Establish A Mailing List

An Interview With Bruce Fowler, New Manager of The Elmwood Theatre, Buffalo

TO secure results in advertising in a city with an exorbitant advertising rate for theatrical display is a proposition not easy to solve, but the plan we have in vogue at the Elmwood theatre, namely—direct advertising—has broken down all obstacles," said Bruce Fowler, recently appointed manager of the Elmwood, succeeding E. O. Wineberg, who went to the Strand, in the course of an interview with the Motion Picture News representative.

"Our mailing list is in excess of 5,000 names covering a radius of several miles of the theatre. Our program enters 5,000 homes of the theatre-going public and we believe it reaches at least 15,000 persons. This is practically our entire advertising with the exception of small space in the daily papers to carry the message to those not on our list.

"The program is mailed every week, reaching the homes on Friday and Saturday and giving the bill for the following seven days. It is an attractive little vest pocket edition, comparing with any outside New York city.

"Our aim is to sell the Elmwood first. Through hard work and untiring efforts this theatre has been established as one offering superior presentations. Our copy for the program is invariably short and snappy, giving the star, title of production, the most notable players in the cast and a short talk on the production itself without going into detail thereby leaving the action to the imagination. Our short subjects are also advertised on each bill. A purchaser of amusement is just as particular as a shopper for the family table.

"When we present a production we consider is in the 'special' class, we program it as an 'Elmwood Theatre Special Attraction,' but it must be of this calibre before it is given this booking. Elmwood patrons know Elmwood programs as truthful. Ours is a neighborhood location and we cater to the vast majority of our clientele three or four times every week, therefore to misrepresent means to eventually close the theatre. Our patrons realize this as well as ourselves, consequently we tell the facts as we know them—not as the majority of press agents view them.

"No phone call requesting the program for the evening is passed with a casual reply giving our show. Callers are asked by an efficient and courteous attendant if they would like to have their name and address placed on our mailing list and invariably we secure it and add another patron.

"We keep a careful tabulation on all 'dead' names. This is especially important throughout the summer months when a number of our patrons leave for their summer homes at the neighboring resorts. These name plates are filed and upon notification to resume mailing, the plate is waiting for use. This saves delay incurred in securing new plates from the manufacturer.

"The program is a welcome visitor to the homes of our patrons and if by chance it is not received on the usual day we are notified of the fact. Of course, their call is given immediate attention.

"To get acquainted with your patrons—establish a mailing list. Human beings appreciate this individual attention."

Strand Theatre, Portland, Makes Strong Appeal For Patronage

THE Strand Theatre, Portland, Oregon, whose management has recently announced an exclusive "big feature policy," with which is included a complete renovation and remodelling of the theatre, addition of a 24-piece orchestra and other features that are making it one of the leading houses of the city, is recognized as having the most striking lobbies of any of the big first run houses.

Phillip Pelz former court director has assumed the directorship of the Strand twenty-five piece orchestra. Mr. Pelz has a fine reputation on the Pacific Coast among music lovers and was the director of the famous 400 piece Russian band which opened the Panama-Pacific Exposition in San Francisco in 1915. This band made a great reputation at the fair and the director was accorded great honors.

Prior to going to the Pacific Coast, Mr. Pelz played an extended engagement in New York and is well known among the Metropolis' musicians and devotees of the opera.

The Strand orchestra under his leadership is productive of many new patrons and has become one of the feature attractions on the weekly bills at this Portland house.

The lobby shown by the accompanying illustration on "The Little Brother of the Rich" is typical of what the Strand accomplishes in the way of lobby exploitation.

We have record displays which have cost many times what this one did but very few in our estimation were any more effective business attractors.

A six-sheet cut-out was made and mounted in the lobby behind a decorative lattice frame in strong reds and greens. Another six-sheet cut-out was mounted over the box-office window.

Phillip Pelz, former Russian court director, who will lead the orchestra at the Strand

The Fiction Mart

"The Flail"
By Newton A. Fuessle

Character of Story: Character study; career.
Theme: Heredity.
Characters: Rudolph Dohmer, American son of German parents; Heinrich Dohmer, his father; Emily Downing, an actress, later Rudolph's wife; James H. Deshman, advertising man; Vincent Nesseth, Dohmer's partner.
The Plot: Rudolph Dohmer is born in Chicago of German-American parentage. From early childhood he instinctively dislikes the Prussian attitude of mind and objects to the German aggressiveness which he observes in some of his companions. Rudolph inclines to be an artist and a dreamer. He strives with all of his might to eradicate from his system every trace of his German ancestry and to become thoroughly Americanized. With this in view he leaves a business situation to work his way through college, which he does with considerable difficulty. There is no particular action in that part of the story which deals with his college career. He becomes a writer for the college daily, indulges in a few innocent love affairs and forms a temporary engagement with a rich man's daughter. After leaving the university he enters newspaper work and wanders about from place to place without arriving anywhere in particular, until he finally drifts into New York and makes up his mind that he must have something which will lead to a future. With considerable distaste he secures a position as a copy writer with an advertising firm through the influence of a college acquaintance now in the advertising business. He rapidly develops a genius for this work, and now comes to the front the grasping, hard, pushing side of his character which he has so carefully suppressed. He finds that in business the Hun seems to be a success — the man who overrides all obstacles and allows nothing to keep him from what he wants. Dohmer presses every advantage, squeezes one rise in salary after another out of his employer, and finally leaves to become the partner of a free lance advertising agent with original methods. He has risen in a few short months from forty dollars a week to ten thousand dollars a year, but he is not yet satisfied. He plans to pull off a few big deals on his own account without taking his partner in on them. Meanwhile he has married Emily Downing, one of the flames of his college days, and has neglected her shamefully for his business. Nothing seems of any importance to him but to get on faster and faster. He is about to undertake a big propaganda campaign for German interests when the United States enters the war and makes this impossible. At the same time Rudolph awakes to the fact that the Hun method will not bring lasting victory in private life any more than in international relations, and he again turns against the Prussian element in himself — this time forever.
Locale: Chicago and New York; mostly interiors.
Picture Highlights: There is nothing especially spectacular about this story, though there are some good emotional situations and plenty of opportunity for character acting.

"The Woman Called Rita"
By Jack Boyle

Character of Story: Crook story.
Theme: Loyalty in underworld.
Characters: Boston Blackie, master crook; Mary, his pal; Miss Happy of the dance hall; The Cushion's Kid, her boy; Larry Donovan, a guard; Spanish Mickey, gambler; Rita, his girl; Abe Ritter, a lawyer; Tom Creedon, a politician; the Warden.
The Plot: The Cushion's Kid has been convicted of a murder which was done by one of his pals. Refusing to "snitch" he is in eminent danger of being hanged. The lawyers failing to get him off, Miss Happy appeals to Boston Blackie to get him out. Blackie goes to Folsom prison and arranges with Larry Donovan a guard, to slip some nitroglycerine, a rope, file and revolver into the Kid's cell "The Count," a go-between, lets the cat out of the bag to Spanish Mickey, a gambler, who wishes to square his place with the authorities since he has been accused of demoralizing the prison guards. He "snitches" and the warden discovers the plant in the Kid's cell. Spanish Mickey arranges that the warden shall conceal six guards in his card room to seize Boston Blackie when he arrives to meet the Kid. Rita, Spanish Mickey's girl, disgusted with his perfidy toward the underworld, goes to meet Boston Blackie and warn him. She admires Blackie for the record he has made and for his reputation as a "square guy." Blackie appeals to Abe Ritter, a lawyer, to get Tom Creedon, eminent politician, to intercede with the governor but fails to carry his point. Rita offers to do what she can to save the Kid if Blackie will make her his girl. He refuses and she goes to Creedon, who has formerly made love to her, and offers to sacrifice herself for his influence with the governor. Creedon intercedes and the Cushion's Kid is saved, evidence coming to light which proves that he is innocent of the particular crime.
Locale: California.
Picture High Lights: Prison scenes; the commutation of sentence.

"The Substitute Millionaire"
By Hulburt Footner

Character of Story: Melodrama.
Theme: Tracking a clever crook.
Characters: Jack Norman, a lucky young man; Kate Storer, the only girl; Mariam Culbreth, adventuress; Harmon Evers, theatrical costumer; Bobo, the substitute millionaire; Mrs. Anson Cleaver, society woman; Walter Delamare, banker; detectives, messengers, etc.
The Plot: Jack Norman, who is a bookkeeper in a sash and door factory at twelve dollars a week, quarrels with his employer and is discharged. The same day he receives a letter from Walter Delamare, head of the National New York Bank, asking him to call. He calls and learns that he is the sole heir of Silas Glyde, eccentric millionaire, who has recently been murdered by an anarchist, and whose will provides that all of his money, producing an income of about thirty millions a year, shall go to Jack Norman, the son of his boyhood sweetheart. Norman discovers that the millionaire had a shabby suite at the Hotel Madagascar (which he owned) with a secret passageway to the house next door, apparently abandoned, but really the dwelling place of the old man. Papers discovered here inform Jack that the old man was threatened by anarchists and that when they demanded money he refused — a refusal which led to his murder. Jack is now threatened with the same fate by a mysterious band called "The Red Gang." He determines to run this gang to earth and hand them over to justice. By accident he encounters a famished actor and employs him to play the part of the newly-made millionaire, while he himself poses as "Jack Robinson," the millionaire's secretary. From this point on the story moves rapidly, with many a complication in the plot. Mariam Culbreth, adventuress, in league with the villain, strives to marry the actor Bobo under the impression that he is the real millionaire. She finally succeeds in this design. Kate Storer, formerly stenographer and now ostensibly proprietress of a boarding house, is pressed into service by Jack to help him solve the mystery. Jack pursues his quest in disguises furnished by a theatrical costumer, who afterward turns out to be the villain himself. There is no "red gang." Harmon Evers has evolved a clever scheme for blackmailing the wealthy. He first threatens them and then offers them the protection of his own private detective bureau at so many hundreds a month. He employs many people — most of whom do not know the real nature of the business in which they are engaged. In one or two instances he has been forced to make good on his threats and murder his victims. In spite of his subtle methods he is eventually trapped by Jack and Kate.
Locale: New York; exteriors and interiors.
Picture Highlights: Many dramatic, or rather, melodramatic situations; plenty of action; love interest.

"Smiles"
By Eliot H. Robinson

Character of Story: Love story in moonshine country.
Theme: Love and adventure.
Characters: "Smiles," a rose of the Cumberlands; Big Jerry, her "granddaddy;" Judd Amos, young moonshiner, in love with Smiles; Donald Macdonald, surgeon; Miss Merriman, a trained nurse; Lou, Judd's little sister; Marion Treville, society girl, Macdonald's fiancee; The Rev. Talmadge, a mountain minister.
The Plot: Donald Macdonald, while hunting in the Cumberlands, stumbles on an isolated cabin and in opening the door startles "Smiles," a beautiful girl of fifteen, so that she spills hot broth on her foot and burns it. He bandages it and is invited to stay to supper. Out of this incident grows a deep friendship between himself, Smiles and her grandfather which rouses the jealousy of Judd Amos who warns Dr. Macdonald that he is not wanted there. Macdonald pays no attention to the warning and Amos attempts to shoot him. In the course of Macdonald's visit Smiles develops an ambition to become a trained nurse and makes sweet grass baskets to sell in order to earn money to buy books and educate herself. Dr. Macdonald, on his return to Boston, sends her books of his choosing and buys her baskets through the local storekeeper in the mountain village. A year later he returns on a vacation and while in the mountains stumbles on a still conducted by Judd. Judd, who is madly jealous of Smiles, attacks him and they fight it out, Dr. Macdonald giving Judd a sound thrashing. In revenge Judd seeks to shoot him but only succeeds in killing his dog. Dr. Macdonald returns to Boston. Judd's little sister is very ill and the local doctor can do nothing for her. Smiles wishes to send for Macdonald but Judd refuses to give his consent. Finally Smiles telegraphs on her own account. Dr. Macdonald comes, bringing a trained nurse, and performs a marvelous operation, removing a tumor from the child's brain and saving her life. Old Jerry dies of heart trouble, appointing Macdonald guardian to Smiles. Smiles comes to Boston and then becomes a trained nurse. Marion Treville jilts Macdonald and he then discovers that it was Smiles whom he loved all along. Much of the strength of this story lies in the lovable character of the girl lead. There is sufficient action so that the story does not drag at any point and the growing love interest is handled very well.
Locale: Cumberland mountains and Boston hospital.
Picture Highlights: Several good dramatic situations, especially in the operation under the unfavorable conditions obtaining in the mountain cabin and Smiles first effort at nursing.

AID THAT COUNTS

THE following expression from Hamilton Thompson of Fox Film Corporation to the editor of the recently incorporated Fiction Mart Department of the NEWS, indicates the value which is placed on this department by the various producing companies:

"It seems to me that the MOTION PICTURE NEWS and yourself have hit upon a most practical idea in the new Fiction Mart Department. Weekly reviews of fiction available for motion picture use, carefully culled and sorted from the great mass of literary productions, cannot help but prove a great aid to the producer.

"You have our every best wish for the continued success of this department, which has been so auspiciously started."

Good Fiction Suitable For Film Production

"The Creed of Her Father"
By Van Zandt Wheeler

Character of Story: Expository.
Theme: Equality of the sexes.
Characters: Laola Howard, perfect not only physically but mentally as well, highly educated, with a keen, analytical mind, an accomplished sportswoman, a social triumph, possessing, in short, the virtues of Venus, Diana and Minerva; Dr. Jefferson Howard, her father, a famous alienist, whose chief interest lies in rearing his daughter according to his ideals and theories; Huntleigh Mainstram, successful young lawyer, suave, polished, a broad minded and liberal man of the world; John Hart, practical business man; Judy Pringle, unlettered girl of the Maine fisherfolk; Jed Rambo, her lover; Several friends of Dr. Howard's, natives of the Maine coast, and others.
Plot: Laola, who has never known her mother, begs her father to break his marked silence regarding her, and to tell her the story of their marriage. As she is now 18 years of age, he consents. While ship's doctor of the Carpathian, Dr. Howard went ashore with a party at a port not far from the Russian border. He happened to meet Paul Mishelovitch, a former classmate, who asked him, as a fraternity brother, to aid in the rescue of his sister, who was about to be arrested and sent to Siberia on a false charge of plotting against the government. Howard, rather unwillingly, arranged a plan whereby the sister, Paula, was to return to the Carpathian with the American party, pretending to be one of them. The ship had hardly cleared port, when Howard found that they were being followed by a Russian cutter. He told the captain his suspicions as to the reasons for this, and the captain refused to allow Paula to remain under his protection, fearing international complications. At this moment Paula herself approached, threw back her veil, disclosing her great beauty, and declared that she would never leave the ship alive. Howard, on the impulse of the moment, offered her his hand in marriage, explaining that this would make her an American citizen and free her from the power of the Russians. She accepted and, as the cutter drew rapidly nearer, the chaplain performed the ceremony, finishing just as the Russian officers boarded the ship. The romance ended in perfect happiness, which lasted until Paula's death. Laola realizes that she has the romantic impulses of her mother, combined with the keen mentality of her father. She meets Huntleigh Mainstram, whom her father invites to visit them at their summer home in Maine, falls deeply in love, and promises to marry him, with her father's consent. The two are caught in a storm which wrecks their boat, and barely succeed in swimming to shore. They are forced to spend the night in a lonely cabin, and Laola submits to Mainstram's wishes. When Dr. Howard learns of the affair, he refuses to allow the marriage to take place, on the ground that Mainstram has proven himself unworthy and that in later years Laola might feel that he had married her out of pity. Seven years later she meets Mainstram again at a huge ball and realizes that her love for him is entirely gone and that John Hart is the man she really cares for. As she is afraid to risk losing his love by telling him of the past incident, and as her father declines to consent to her marrying him without doing so, she decides never to marry. Finally, in desperation, Hart persuades Howard to tell him the real reason for Laola's behavior, and, when he does so, Hart declares that it matters not at all, thereby vindicating Howard's theories.
Locale: New York City and the Maine coast.
High Lights: The doctor's story of his romantic marriage would make an excellent flashback, full of suspense and action, with the ceremony taking place on shipboard while the cutter approached to take away the bride. Also a shipwreck and ballroom scene.

"The Bartlett Mystery"
By Louis Tracy

Character of Story: Mystery.
Theme: Discovering the true identity of Winifred Bartlett.
Characters: Winifred Bartlett, the girl; Rex Carshaw, handsome young millionaire; Mrs. Carshaw, his mother; Rachel Craik, Winifred's supposed aunt; William Meiklejohn, a wealthy senator; Mr. and Mrs. Ronald Tower, members of the smart set; Detective, Inspector Clancy; Chief Steingall; Ralph Voles, villain; Mick the Wolf, his accomplice; Fowle, third crook.
The Plot: Winifred Bartlett is working in a book binding factory, and is suddenly sent for by the police to be questioned about the murder of Ronald Tower, who was killed while on his way to a friend's yacht in the Hudson river. She knows absolutely nothing of the affair, and is even more surprised when she learns that her aunt has been taken into custody for the same reason. Then Tower turns up alive; and at Senator Meiklejohn's request refuses to prosecute the case. But Winifred, in whom Rex Carshaw has become intensely interested, is taken to Bridgeport, Conn., en route for deportation from the United States, as Carshaw learns with the aid of the detective bureau. Carshaw follows in his speedster, and after a smashup, rushes Winifred back to New York. While seeking employment she is again abducted, and rescued with much difficulty; the mystery surrounding her is satisfactorily cleared up, and she is happily married to Rex, having been proved of excellent birth and the heiress to a fortune.
Locale: In and near New York.
Picture High Lights: Plenty of action and melodrama.

"The Honorable Gentleman"
By Achmed Abdullah

Character of Story: Stories of Chinatown.
Theme: Oriental psychology.
Characters: Tsing Yu-ch'ing; Minnie Levinsky, a daughter of Pell street; Widow Levinsky, her mother; Dr. Travers Hardwick, eye specialist; Tsing Yat, head of the Tsing Clan.
The Plot: These are stories of Pell street, New York, analagous to the stories of the Limehouse district in London which appear in Thomas Burke's "Limehouse Nights" and from which Griffith made his "Broken Blossoms." The first story in the series deals with the love of Tsing Yu-ch'ing for Minnie Levinsky; a blind white girl of the Pell street district. Encouraged by her mother Tsing tells her the legends of China and recites for her the poetry of his native land. Minnie, naturally, falls in love with the voice of the only man whom she has ever known and the two are married. Minnie is consumed with a desire to see her husband because —"I know you are beautiful, best beloved in all the world." But Tsing is not beautiful. And he knows that one sight of his ugly yellow face would break her heart. And then comes Dr. Travers Hardwick, friend of Tsing's Harvard days, and offers to restore the eyesight of Tsing's wife. Tsing cannot refuse his aid. Yet he knows that this will mean the end of his own happiness and the happiness of his wife. And so, after talking with the head of his clan, he decides that it is his duty as "an honorable gentleman" to spare his wife this unhappiness, to make her love eternal, and to take upon his own shoulders the burden of loneliness for the rest of his life. And so, the night before the operation, he pours in his wife's tea an insidious Oriental poison which defies detection at the hands of the Occidental police, and for this reason they carved upon his funeral arch in Canton, long after the memory of Minnie Levinsky had faded in Pell street, a certain Mandarin ideograph which read: "Tsing Yu-ch'ing was a wise man. Through death did he make love eternal."
Locale: Pell street, Chinatown, New York.
Picture High Lights: The wedding; the arrival of the eye doctor; the conference which ends in the decision to "make love eternal."

"One Woman's Story"
By Carolyn Beecher

Character of Story: Drama of married life.
Theme: Jealousy.
Characters: Margaret Drayton, an individualist; Robert Drayton, a lawyer, her husband; Tod Freeman, a millionaire; Holland Lansing, a rich young woman; Harper Carleton, a bachelor; Phyllis Lawson, a divorcee.
The Plot: Margaret Drayton marries a struggling young lawyer. She finds it difficult to be happy in the circumstances in which they are forced to live and complains that he does not get on fast enough. Robert Drayton, the husband devotes himself to his work and secures for a client a rich young woman named Holland Lansing. His association with Miss Lansing makes his wife furiously jealous and she accepts attentions from Tod Freeman, a former suitor, though nothing serious comes of this. In spite of the birth of two children, Bruce and Betty, the husband and wife grow further and further apart. Robert is seldom home except when they are entertaining and is much in the company of Miss Holland. Tod Freeman and Miss Holland are married, but by this time another woman, Phyllis Lawson, has become a client of Robert's, and Margaret's jealousy is directed toward her. Robert does not talk over his business with his wife and when she endeavors to amuse herself with music — for which she has a fine talent — he objects to her performing in public. In his opinion a woman's place is in the home. Margaret resents this and especially as she learns that her husband has encouraged Mrs. Lawson to take up writing as a profession and that he follows her work with much interest. Margaret begins to spy upon her husband and he catches her, which widens the rift between them. Margaret secretly prepares to make a career for herself as a pianist, and receives a flattering offer from a maestro. She has made up her mind to accept this when she enters her husband's office suddenly and finds Phyllis Lawson there holding his hands. She rushes home and accepts the offer. Before an answer arrives their son is suddenly stricken with heart trouble and dies. Margaret is inconsolable and Robert receives the letter from the musician asking Margaret to come on to New York at once. The doctor urges the husband to do something to rouse her. In the talk which follows, Margaret unburdens herself of all of her jealous fears and explanations follow, the two being drawn together again through their mutual sorrow over the death of their son.
Locale: A small city in California.
Picture High Lights: Domestic quarrels; court scenes; masquerade ball; emotional scenes following discovery of Mrs. Lawson in office; death of Bruce; reconciliation.

"A Woman's Man"
By Marjorie Patterson

Character of Story: French society drama.
Theme: Sex; artistic temperament.
Characters: Armand de Vaucourt, author; Bernadette de Vaucourt, his wife; Madame de Vaucourt, his mother; Jacques Colbert, novelist and publisher; Marie-Therese, Colbert's wife; Ernest Bonnet, his friend; Luce, Bonnet's daughter; Princess Roumistorf, poetess, and Armand's employer, Monsieur de Kerlavoz.
The Plot: This is the story of a "woman's man" whose affairs of the heart eclipsed in his own mind the call of his art and the entire story centers around his weakness in this respect. He has only two major liasons, but these are sufficient to ruin his career from a literary point of view although he has achieved a certain fame in his early efforts. Armand de Vaucourt comes to Paris from the provinces, leaving his financee behind. He falls in love with Marie-Therese, the wife of his publisher but no uncertain reputation. Through her he secures a position as secretary to the rich Princess Roumistorf, who helps to make him known in literary circles. An affair develops between de Vaucourt and Madame Colbert which results in a duel between Armand and — not her husband — but another lover, Monsieur de Kerlavoz. Armand wounds his opponent but afterward learns that his enemy did not shoot at him. Armand is meanwhile married and continues his affair with the Colbert woman who has the effect of paralyzing his genius and who teaches him to resort to opium and other drugs and thus whip up his dying inspiration. Armand now breaks off with Madame Colbert to begin another affair with Luce, the daughter of his boyhood friend. He leaves his wife. The wife dies, leaving a little daughter and he discovers that this child has been adopted to cheer her loneliness. He is stricken with remorse and realizes for the first time that he was in love with his wife and did not know it. An unsatisfactory story as it stands but one which could form the basis for a more striking exemplification of the same theme.
Locale: French provinces and Paris.
Picture High Lights: The duel; de Vaucourt's meeting with Madame Colbert when she has grown old and ugly; emotional scenes.

National Catholic Council Will Show Films on Camionettes

Camionettes service is to feature the showing of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation films, according to plans which are now being outlined by the National Catholic War Council for its Civic Education campaign. In order that its program of instilling a fuller comprehension of democracy, of vocational guidance and of an appreciation of industrial opportunities may cover the country as completely as possible, the Council is laying plans for the utilization of this wartime device in furthering its reconstruction program.

The final decision to employ camionette service awaits only the consummation of a few details. Personal investigation it is said, is to be made of the Pennsylvania coal mines and of other sparsely settled sections of the country so as to ascertain the equipment that will be necessary to present an adequate educational program. If these details are satisfactorily arranged the Council will, in all probability, establish the service under the guidance of competent drivers and lecturers. Apparatus necessary for a motion picture show will be mounted, according to reports on a motor truck in a manner similar to the Camionette service used in providing pictures for the doughboys overseas.

Efficient Branch Establishment

Within Five Days From Time of Deal Robertson-Cole has Twenty-Six Exchanges Operating

A remarkable record in efficiency was shown by the Robertson-Cole organization in the complete establishment of twenty-six branch offices throughout the United States for the purpose of distribution in less than a week after the signing of the contracts had made this possible. On October 7th the final papers were signed, leaving Robertson-Cole for the moment only without representation. With the use of the telegraph and long distance telephone negotiations were commenced with the most competent exchange men in the country and at midnight on October 12th, Robertson-Cole Exchanges were opening in every center in the country, with a full executive, clerical and sales staff.

The close of the first week, October 18th, found the Robertson-Cole Exchange system in full sway, increased bookings being reported everywhere, and business being conducted with the smoothness of an organization 20 years old. In fact, one of the remarkable features of the inauguration of the new system was the almost immediate increase in bookings in certain centres.

The credit for the achievement must go to A. S. Kirkpatrick, Vice-President and General Manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. He is one of the best known men in the distributing end of the industry and his wide acquaintance throughout the country enabled him to reach out with intelligent direction and quickly and effectively organize his staff with tried and trusted men.

Not a break occurred in the schedule of releases of either the features, specials or comedies, and not a hitch came in the physical service of distribution. The lithograph and paper service, Press books and exploitation helps, never missed an issue. When the change-over was an accomplished fact, Mr. Kirkpatrick expressed himself as immensely pleased with the operation and confident that it was on an ample and efficient working basis.

The situation was of course helped by the fact that coincident with the opening of their own branch offices, Robertson-Cole announced the purchase of several big specials, notably, "The Broken Butterfly," a Maurice Tourneur production, and the six big Lew Cody specials being produced by L. J. Gasnier. This gave the new organization important plays to work on at once and gave representatives an immediate welcome to the offices of the largest first run exhibits in the country.

Results on both these big specials came in immediately as well as a demand for information as to productions of a like nature which it was believed would soon be under the Robertson-Cole banner. Negotiations for several exceptionally high-class productions are under way and several important announcements in this connection are expected shortly.

Big Productions Hurt by Cutting

First Run Exhibitors Charged With Ruining Big Pictures Through Careless Cutting of Film

ONE of the most serious evils with which producers of big feature productions have to contend at the present time, is the careless cutting of their film by first run exhibitors to meet the cut and dried requirements of their show schedules," asserts Billy Shea, head cutter for the Anita Stewart Productions, and the Mildred Harris Chaplin productions.

"A great many splendid productions on their first runs have been literally ruined by such methods, and enormous losses inflicted on the producers because in the matter of special productions, the smaller exhibitor usually bases his bookings on the first run showings. And it's a cinch he won't book a film which has invited public and press criticism through wretched cutting.

"The eternal cry of some exhibitors seems to be, 'More shows, more shows. Never mind how good or bad the show is, get them in and get them out as quickly as possible.' If an exhibitor is accustomed to allowing 60 minutes for his feature, then it has to be cut to that time no matter how meritorious it may be or how freed from paddling. This is about as ridiculous as a legitimate manager cutting a four-act drama down to three, because he insists that his show shall start and finish at a stated time. But this much may be said in favor of the legitimate manager who cuts his show, if indeed he ever does. His motive in any case is to accommodate his patrons in the matter of catching trains or trolleys, whereas the motive of most exhibitors in cutting film is to increase the number of shows in order to swell his receipts. It matters not to him that any increase he gains by this means is taken out of the producer many times over.

"Now please don't think that I put myself up as an infallible judge as to how film should be cut. But I have devoted a good many years of my life to scientific cutting, and I certainly don't believe the exhibitor is qualified to scissors-censor the celluloid before the audience, who pays the full amount of admission to see the full amount of picture, has had a chance to pass upon it."

Big Picture For Robertson-Cole

Maurice Tourneur's "The Broken Butterfly" Said to Be Greatest Production He Ever Turned Out

IN keeping with the announcement of Robertson-Cole of a broad schedule of motion picture productions second to none in the market it is announced that they have purchased the great Maurice Tourneur special "The Broken Butterfly." It is declared by officials of Robertson-Cole and by others who have seen the first showing of this gigantic art production that it ranks as one of the finest pieces of work ever accomplished by Mr. Tourneur and this assurance means that it must be a really great picture.

All of the artistic genius and the sense of dramatic values of Mr. Tourneur have gone into the picture. According to officials of Robertson-Cole it is almost useless to say more about the artistic quality of the picture beyond the fact that it is the best he has ever accomplished. The director is proud of the work himself and is eagerly awaiting the public decision on it.

The title implies something of the power of pathos and drama in the plot. The butterfly type is known in a pathetic sense to everyone and Mr. Tourneur's presentation of the beautiful but fragile type of womanhood broken on the sharp edges of life's reality is said to be a remarkable work. Depth of pathos and drama is what he has been seeking in his recent work and in "The Broken Butterfly" he has fought it in abundant quantity.

The production was secured by Robertson-Cole at a price which has not been disclosed but is said to be a record in the industry. Many large producers and distributors negotiated for the film but with the determination which has characterized the recent efforts of Robertson-Cole, that firm held on and finally secured the attraction.

A big campaign will be instituted immediately to acquaint film audiences throughout the country with the purchase and the knowledge that the picture will soon be released. It is expected that in point of first-run showings it will exceed most of the really big pictures of the past year. This seems certain from the number of inquiries coming from exchanges as soon as they were notified of the purchase and is despite the fact that the pictuer will be released with but little delay.

A significant feature of the deal is the statement of officials of Robertson-Cole that the purchase is not to be regarded as exceptional with them because they have already negotiated the purchase of pictures close to the same standard to be shortly announced. They are emphatic in stating that it merely represents the general class of pictures which Robertson-Cole will insist on securing for their clientele.

"We have kept faith with exhibitors of the country during the past year in giving them pictures of the Highest Standard of Excellence," said an official of the company. "We have kept that promise despite the fact that in doing so we have found it necessary on more than one occasion to lay on the shelf big and expensive productions because they did not measure up to the standard.

"This policy may appear expensive at first sight and it certainly had its hazards, but our experience has convinced us that it is the sound policy to pursue. We will take the chances ourselves and assume the difficulties of the productions which do not meet our standard when they are produced. We intend to give the exhibitors the sure things as far as is humanly possible and in the end we know it means for us a large, steady clientele, a clientele that relies on the name of Robertson-Cole."

Griffith Here Ready to Produce

Noted Photoplay Creator Comes to New York to Stay This Time and Will Work in Newly Erected Studios

WITH no wide heralding such as might have preceded the arrival of so prominent a figure of the theatre, David Ward Griffith, protagonist of the photoplay and creator of such productions as "The Birth of a Nation," "Intolerance," "Hearts of the World" and "Broken Blossoms," has quietly slipped into New York.

There is more than passing significance to this event. Mr. Griffith does not come to New York as a visitor this time. He will not hurriedly "put on" a Griffith production and as hurriedly steal away to California. He comes to New York to stay. All his future productions will be made in New York. He has literally forsaken Los Angeles for the city where he first enjoyed the success that since has ripened into real achievement in the world of the cinema.

It was at No. 11 East 14th Street where D. W. Griffith first attracted attention by the production he turned out for the old Biograph Company. But it is not to East 14th Street that he returns. Out at Orienta Point, Mamaroneck, N. Y., on the estate of the late Henry M. Flagler, Standard Oil Magnate, there has been erected a group of studio buildings, and here, on a location that cost nearly a million dollars, the future Griffith productions will be made.

What effect this migration from the Pacific Coast by America's foremost motion picture genius will have on the cinema productions of the future cannot be forecasted at this time.

Mr. Griffith's first operations at Mamaroneck will be the production of a series of special feature pictures for the First National Exhibitors Circuit and for the United Artists Corporation.

Irene Boyle, a featured player with the Kalem company before her two-year retirement from the screen, has been engaged for the leading role in "Other Men's Shoes," the first picture which Edgar Lewis will make for his own company.

A Press Showing of "The Sacred Flame" Set for Oct. 24

Officials of the Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., have completed arrangements and sent out invitations for a special press showing of their new picture, "The Sacred Flame" which will be given in the Wurlitzer Fine Arts Hall, 120-122 West Forty-first Street on Friday, Oct. 24th at 2:30 P. M.

The producing company believes that this new picture, which was written and produced by Abraham S. Schomer, and in which Miss Emily Stevens is starred, offers an unusual story of life and love which will excel it is said, anything that has been produced on the screen for a long time.

In Earl Schenck, leading man, Miss Stevens is said to have an able actor to work with. Others in the company are Lionel Adams, Maude Hill, Muriel Ostriche, the ingenue of the picture, Frederic Clayton, James P. Laffey and little Violet Axzel.

After the press showing that has been planned, E. S. Manheimer, sales representative of the Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., announces that he will make known the company's plans for distribution of "The Sacred Flame."

Authors of Constance Talmadge Stories Get New Equipment

A complete "photoplaywrights' workshop" was installed last week at the new apartments, No. 103 East 75th street, New York of John Emerson and Anita Loos, who are writing the Constance Talmadge stories for First National Release. The equipment includes a projection room, cutting apparatus, extensive files to handle the flood of 'scripts which come into the authors from all parts of the country, and a photoplay reference library,—one of the largest of its kind, which the writers have collected during the last eight years.

Cleveland Sales Manager for United Artists Named

Announcement was made from the office of Hiram Abrams last week that R. K. Evans has been appointed Sales Manager of the Cleveland Distributing Depot of United Artists Corporation.

Mr. Evans, for about fifteen years, was closely identified with the Greenwall-Weis Circuit of theatres, and managed the various houses of the enterprise throughout the South. He also handled the Southern distribution of many big special productions, and has at various times managed exchanges in Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis and New Orleans.

Cathrine Curtis Co. at Work on New Western Feature

Alfred Allen, it is announced, has been engaged to appear in the western production now being filmed by the Cathrine Curtis Corporation in the wilds of the northern part of Idaho. Miss Curtis and her company recently left Spokane and expect to spend the next month in their present location filming the feature that has been started. The new feature is a western drama but is as yet unnamed.

Goldwyn Filming Plays by Pinero and Others

Goldwyn Pictures this season include among other distinguished subjects two by the English dramatist to whom is generally ascribed the resuscitation of the English stage from the sloth of half-a-century—Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, who won his knighthood as the result of those very services to English dramaturgy. "The Gay Lord Quex" and "Letty" (the film version is called "The Loves of Letty") are the two noted plays from Pinero's gifted pen which Goldwyn is producing.

Both themes have been given stars worthy of them, Tom Moore having the stellar role in "The Gay Lord Quex" and Pauline Frederick the identical role in "The Loves of Letty."

Aside from the living eminent American authors whose works are presented by Samuel Goldwyn and Rex Beach as Eminent Authors' productions, a famous American writer dead only a short time has one of his themes represented on the Goldwyn list—O. Henry, most celebrated of American short-story tellers. "Roads of Destiny," one of his stories, which was dramatized for the legitimate by Channing Pollock, has been secured for Miss Frederick.

Realart's New Press Book Will Give Real Aid to Exhibitor

The advertising and publicity department of the Realart Pictures Corporation has designed what is considered an ideal publicity and press campaign book, and Realart officials have given it their sanction.

C. Alfred, in charge of accessories explains that suggestions, helps and aids for almost any emergency that may arise on the part of an exhibitor in his exploitation of a picture have been provided. The Realart press book is laid out in chronological order, the advertising and publicity matter being so arranged that an exhibitor need only follow it through from beginning to end as his show dates grow nearer. The difference between the Realart press book and its continuity, and the ordinary book is that in connection with the latter an exhibitor is forced to hunt through all the pages to find the one item he wants. The plan followed in organizing the Realart press and continuity book is said to have eliminated this defect.

Leads in Next Fox Film to be Miss Traverse–Al Roscoe

John Hadlock, the leading male character in the new Fox production "The Hell Ship", starring Madlaine Traverse, is the first role assigned to Al Roscoe under his new contract with Fox Film Corporation. Among the principals in "The Hell Ship", aside from Miss Traverse and Mr. Roscoe, the Fox casting director has numbered Betty Bouton, Dick LaReno, Jack Curtis, Fred Bond, and William Ryno.

William Fox promises that "The Hell Ship" will be something unusual in the way of screen material—something entirely different from either "The Splendid Sin" in which Miss Traverse has been seen most recently, or "Snares of Paris", released October 19th.

Theatre Men Laud "Checkers"

Fox Receiving Many Messages on the Proved Drawing Value of Big Feature

WHAT the combination of a high-class photoplay and efficient showmanship and advertising will do was exemplified in Minneapolis the week of September 28 to October 4th, when the William Fox spectacular production of "Checkers" was shown at Finkelstein and Rubin's New Lyric Theatre. William M. Vance, manager of the theatre, had an overflow crowd for every performance—because he had proceeded on his conviction that the public would flock to the box office if they were made to realize the magnitude of the Fox all-star drama. He lost no time and neglected no means for letting the public know he had something to show that was good clean through.

These are the means Mr. Vance used to proclaim the adaptation of Henry M. Blossom's popular play: Ten jockies mounted, a jazz band of ten colored men, 50,000 door knob hangers, 50,000 circus style heralds, 600 snipes and one-sheets, 60 24-sheet stands, 40 6-sheets and 50 3-sheets.

Every day the jockies rode through the streets of Minneapolis in their gaudy costumes, compelling the attention of all people, within sight. They were headed by the Jazz band, which was tireless in the production of stirring strains that set the feet of Minneapolis folk a-tingling. There were also performances by the band before the New Lyric Theatre and many persons stood patiently in line for an hour and a half to get tickets, entertained by the music and amused by the antics of the musicians. Mr. Vance pleased his audiences too by hanging out a sign reading, "No Advance in Prices."

Word also came to the Fox offices in New York that the success of "Checkers" was repeated the week of October 4th at Finkelstein and Rubin's theatre in St. Paul.

Mr. Vance on September 28th sent the following telegram to William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation:

"Feel it is only fair and my duty as an exhibitor to congratulate you for making a production with real box office value. I opened here to-day with "Checkers" to a most phenomenal attendance in spite of drizzling, chilly rain. Had continuous crowds from two-thirty to ten o'clock tonight. "Checkers" possesses combination of two important essentials—a good picture and box office value!"

From Grand Island, Neb., came this message on September 23d, signed by S. A. Hayman:

"Just finished four-day run on "Checkers." Packed to streets from 1 P. M. to 12 at night. People stood up and yelled in racing scene. Lets have some more like this one."

M. M. Rubens of the Princess Theatre, Juliet, Ill., wired: "'Checkers' enthusiastically received by our audience. Broke record. Extended run at advanced admission prices on strength of same. Have applied for contracts on entire output coming season."

Dan Meyers of the Broadway Theatre, Muskogee, Okla., sent the following: "Congratulations on 'Checkers.' Played to capacity for the three days at advanced price. Best money getter of the year."

From R. F. Peltier, manager of the Bijou Theatre, Mt. Clemens, Mich., came this praise. "'Checkers' did splendid business. Picture gave excellent satisfaction. It has everything that entertains and nothing that offends."

First Of Lloyd's New Comics

Expect New Series of Two-Reelers Will Win Wider Approval Than Former One-Reelers

ON the eve of the release of the first Harold Lloyd two-reel comedy, "Bumping into Broadway," which is set for November 2d, Pathe announces that already more than one-half of the theatres which played the Lloyd one-reelers have booked the new series of multiple reel comedies.

According to statements received, this means it is already assured that more than 2,000 theatres will show "Bumping Into Broadway," and the five two-reel comedies, to follow. Indications are said to point to the probability that the two-reel features will gain even a wider circulation than the single-reel Lloyd offerings.

First-run exhibitors in considerable numbers are reported to be booking the entire series.

The new productions are booked in a series of six, and Pathe announces that under no circumstances will it enter into a contract for more than six successive Lloyd subjects. "Bumping into Broadway" will be followed by "Captain Kid's Kiddies," "His Royal Slyness" and "From Hand to Mouth," all of which were produced before Lloyd met with the accident which incapacitated him for some weeks.

Bebe Daniels has the leading role with Lloyd in "Bumping into Broadway." It is her signal of distress, which the knightly Lloyd, a playwright, gallantly answers and which leads to the many laughable complications.

The boarding house scenes in the first two-reeler, it is asserted, will introduce a new comedy element into motion pictures, and the stand-patters of comedy-makers, who see only one side of humor in life in a boarding house, can obtain a few lessons from "Bumping into Broadway," according to the Pathe reports on the picture.

Paramount Farce Cemedies

Both of the Paramount-Artcraft pictures scheduled for release October 19 are farce comedies, one of them being Bryant Washburn in "Why Smith Left Home" and the other Billie Burke in "Sadie Love." Both, also, are adaptations of well-known stage plays, written respectively by George Broadhurst and Avery Hopwood.

Farnum Starts a New Production

Role Said to be Different from any Heretofore Essayed; Title is not yet Selected

WORK has been begun at the Fort Lee studio on a new William Fox production in which William Farnum will be the star. The director is J. Gordon Edwards, who has been responsible for a number of the popular star's successes. John W. Boyle again is cameraman.

The story is from the fluent pen of Henry Albert Phillips and was adapted for the screen by E. Lloyd Sheldon. A permanent title has not yet been selected for the picture, but Mr. Farnum is cast in a type of character he has not heretofore attempted, but in which it is predicted he will win new laurals. It is one more test of his versability.

Mr. Farnum's leading woman will be Gladys Coburn, who played opposite him in "The Primitive Call," and who has appeared in another Fox production, "The Battle of Life." Robert J. Cain, who has just done very successful work in support of William Russell in "Eastward Ho" is in the cast, as are Paul Cazeneuve, Betty Hilburn, Kate Blancke, Rowland Edwards and several others.

Many of the scenes in this feature are laid near Quebec, Canada, and it is probable that the company will go there to do the exteriors. Both director Edwards and Mr. Farnum are firm believers in realism of the most convincing sort, and the star is anxious to make this his most effective production. Other scenes are laid in the Bohemian section of New York.

Mr. Edwards and Mr. Farnum both express the opinion that this will be a bigger photoplay than any in which the popular star has been seen.

John W. Boyle, who is photographing his seventh Farnum picture, says that from a photographic standpoint the story offers greater results than any in which he has handled the camera.

Like F.P.-Lasky Exploitation

Field Men of the Exploitation Department Commended for Work in Exhibitors' Letters

THE enthusiastic letters reported to be arriving at the Famous Players-Lasky offices in which pleased exhibitors are said to be registering their appreciation of the exploitation campaign in behalf of "The Miracle Man" are construed as a positive evidence of the complete success and efficiency of the Exploitation Department of that corporation.

The field men, who number twelve at present, are under the supervision of Claud Saunders, Exploitation Manager, whose headquarters are at the Home office in New York. These men conduct their operations from district and branch offices of Famous Players-Lasky. Their duty, stated in a few words, is to employ every legitimate means to enable exhibitors to increase their receipts from the showing of Paramount-Artcraft pictures. In so doing they confer with and advise the exhibitor as to the methods which he is at present using to attract increased patronage; in so doing, they may utilize natural resources of publicity and exploitation heretofore neglected; increase the interest of local newspapers in motion pictures in general and especially in Paramount-Artcraft pictures; interest other lines of business in seasonable and mutually advantageous tieups; and, finally, assist the exhibitor in the carrying out of his own ideas, all with the purpose of enabling the exhibitor to dominate his theatre's territory.

Lehrman Engages New Types

Many Well Known Funmakers will Appear in Support of "Ham" in his First Release

HENRY LEHRMAN, producer of Lehrman Comedies for distribution by the First National Exhibitor's Circuit, announced this week the engagement of a number of well known comedians to appear in his first release in support of Lloyd (Ham) Hamilton.

Prominent among those engaged as aides to Mr. Hamilton is Harry Todd, the famous "Mustang Pete" of the old Snakeville comedies, which were in high favor at the time the "Ham and Bud" pictures were at the height of their popularity, and which featured himself, Slippery Slim and Sophie Clutts.

Harry McCoy is another well known comedian just placed under contract, closely following a tour of the Pantages Circuit. McCoy has for years been featured with leading comedy companies, and was formerly under Mr. Lehrman's direction in the Sunshine organization.

"Rube" Miller, long a director and player in the comedy field, is another new recruit to the Hamilton company, and is now cast in a farmer part, which is recognized as his specialty.

Charlie Dorety, recently featured in a series of comedy productions, is also seen in a prominent role in the Lehrman production, and the cast also includes Ernie Shields and Charles Dudley, well known character actors.

List of Picture Titles Compiled to Prevent Lawsuits

Ligon Johnson, legal adviser of the United Managers Protective Association, announces that he has completed a work in which have been registered all the plays copyrighted in the United States since 1878 and also all the titles for motion-pictures already produced. The work is said to be the most important reference source of its kind that has ever been compiled in connection with the theatrical industry.

Almost 100,000 plays and pictures are said to be included in the new reference work. It is hoped that in addition to its value as a work of reference for purely information purposes, the compilation will be of material service in preventing lawsuits arising from the duplication of titles and that it will also eliminate the tying-up of investments, brought about by the inability of producers knowing whether prospective titles for new productions have ever been used before or not.

The new work will also enable persons, purchasing productions, to ascertain if the copyright covering the production has expired, and whether or not they will have exclusive rights to the production.

Real Air Chase Will Feature a Lehrman Comedy

What are said to be among the most remarkable aerial photographs ever made were filmed at the Lehrman Studios in Culver City last week, when Henry Lehrman, producer of Lahrman Comedies for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, superintended the staging of a number of scenes for a new picture featuring Billy Ritchie. These mark the latest development of the comedy "chase" and involve some of the most hair-raising stunts ever included in a motion picture. Aeroplane scenes have been "faked" on a number of occasions, but this it is said marks the first time that comedy action has really taken place high in the air.

Three aeroplanes were used, with Director Henry Lehrman and a cameraman in the producer's own plane, and Billie Ritchie and Hugh Fay, dressed as an escaping convict and a policeman respectively, in the other two. During the flight the comedians clambered to all parts of the machines.

Territory Is Now on Sale for "The Price Woman Pays"

Announcement is made from the offices of the J. Frank Hatch Enterprises located in the Godfrey Building, New York, that all the foreign rights have been sold for "The Price Woman Pays," the six reel production now being offered to state right buyers. In the United States the states of New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania have been disposed of.

L. L. Hiller, Longacre Building, New York City, distributor of the feature, announces that the outlook for the immediate disposal of the balance of the territory in the United States, for this production looks very bright. "The Unpardonable Sin" also exploited under the Hatch banner in the state of Ohio is likewise meeting with pronounced success it is claimed.

"The Brat" Shown Simultaneously on Cleveland Stage and Screen

The successful exploitation of Nazimova in "The Brat" in conjunction with a stock company presentation of the stage play by Maude Fulton in the same week has been accomplished in Cleveland. Special advertising and publicity stunts were arranged jointly with the result, it is said, that both offerings drew capacity audiences and theatre patrons in Cleveland had the unusual choice of seeing a famous play in either its spoken or its silent form.

The double attraction was arranged by C. E. Almy, manager of the Grand Theatre in Cleveland. He booked Nazimova in "The Brat" for a second showing in that city and then arranged with the Prospect Stock Players to present the stage version. With the special newspaper and exploitation stunts worked in conjunction the unusual features of the idea made a strong popular appeal.

Maude Fulton's play was adapted to the screen by Nazimova and Charles Bryant. Herbert Blache directed it from June Mathis's scenario and it was personally supervised by Maxwell Karger, director-general.

Private Showing Given Farrar's Latest Production

The first print of Geraldine Farrar's latest Goldwyn production, "Flame of the Desert," has arrived from the Culver City studios and has been shown to the executives, board of directors and editorial department of the organization. The alleged magnificence of the production, which was directed by Reginald Barker, roused the sales department to a pitch of enthusiasm which will make the picture one of the best sellers that Goldwyn has yet made. Vast stretches of desert, brilliant ballroom scenes, tremendous mob effects all disclose, it is said, the master hand of the director who is given special credit on the screen for the production.

"Eyes of Youth" to Have Simultaneous Show in 60 Cities

For what is claimed to be the first time since motion picture theatres began reaching their present high-class scale, one motion picture will open simultaneously in 60 cities in America on the same date.

"Eyes of Youth," in which Clara Kimball Young is to be seen, is the film; and a few of the cities which it is reported will project the film during the week of November 15 are Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Detroit, Cleveland, Minneapolis, Omaha, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Dallas, Fort Worth, Newark, Trenton, Wilmington, Richmond and Atlanta.

The foreign release will occur one month later and it has already been booked, according to reports, to open in London, Paris, Rome and Hague, in Europe, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, Buenos Aires and Caracas, South America, and Sydney and Melbourne, Australia.

"Eastward Ho" Said to be a Realistic Production

Director Emmett J. Flynn, of the Fox forces, and his assistant, John J. Folly, have made a new score in realism in the filming of "Eastward Ho." A complete train, consisting of engine, two Pullmans and a baggage car, was recently hired from the Long Island Railroad. In the cars were arranged big spotlights so that scenes could be taken inside the moving train. The taking of the scene required eight hours. The train was run one hundred miles out on the island and returned to Long Island City eight hours after it left that terminal. The lights operated by big storage batteries were still working when the train pulled in.

Director Flynn believes that "Eastward Ho" will set a new mark for thoroughness. According to reports, nothing has been "faked" in the picture. It is a fast moving story, combining the rush and bustle of New York with the quiet of a home in a small town in Arizona.

Friedman Advertises Event

When Henry E. Friedman of the New York Metro exchange was agreeably surprised, he used his knowledge of advertising to publicise a certain event in a very attractive manner. Mr. Friedman is said to have a wide acquaintance throughout the country because of his exchange experience in the various territories. Among other exchanges managed by Mr. Friedman was the Pathe at Minneapolis and he has also held managerial reins in Denver and Chicago.

On a postcard received by many of his friends appears the picture of a baby cupie and the descriptive matter is as follows: "Well now, what do I do. Jane Charlotte Friedman arrived on September 23, 1919, at 11 P. M., a full sized healthy baby and wants to know what to do next. All suggestions will be properly noted and appreciated by the parents, Mr. and Mrs. Henry E. Friedman, of 600 161st Street, New York City."

Victor Kremer Acquires More Chaplin Comedies

Victor Kremer, at present engaged in exploiting Charlie Chaplin's feature comedy, "A Burlesque on Carmen," which he will present on Broadway in the near future in conjunction with the Spanish Dancing Girls' Revue, announced this week that he had consummated a deal with Essanay whereby he has acquired four more Chaplin Essanay comedies.

By the terms of the contract it is said Mr. Kremer comes into possession of the following Chaplin comedy pictures: "The Champion," "The Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea."

The exploiter of "Carmen" will distribute these comedies on the state right plan and will at once commence an elaborate advertising campaign, involving various colored inserts, special booklets and several novelties. This campaign will be carried out broadcast throughout the country for several weeks prior to the release of the first Chaplin two reeler.

"Great Radium Mystery" Said to be a Real Thriller

"The Great Radium Mystery," made by the Pacific Producing Company and released by the Universal, is reported to be a sensational production of unusual character. The first two of the eighteen episodes have already been sent to the exchanges, and bookings are being made.

Intrepid Eileen Sedgwick does many daring stunts. Others in the cast include Cleo Madison, whose latest success was in "The Romance of Tarzan," Edwin J. Brady, Bob Reeves, Jeff Osborne, Bob Kortman, Robert Cray and Gordon McGregor.

What is called the most valuable prop ever used in a motion picture is a one gramme tube of radium, said to be valued at $120,000 which was secured from Joseph M. Flannery, the Pittsburgh multi-millionaire, who, according to reports, controls 80 per cent of the world's output of radium. The precious prop is guarded in a big safe at the studio, night and day, but its penetrating rays come through the heavy metal sides.

"The Joyous Liar" Succeeds "A White Man's Chance"

Prints of "The Joyous Liar," J. Warren Kerrigan's second in his series of Robert Brunton productions for W. W. Hodkinson distribution, were shipped this week to all Hodkinson branches, from which announcements of early trade showings will be sent to scores of the nation's biggest exhibitors, it is said.

The favor with which J. Warren Kerrigan is received by audiences everywhere is due in no small measure to the success scored by "A White Man's Chance," the star's first Brunton-made vehicle. This success, according to reports, promises further to be increased by "The Joyous Liar," in every way a worthy successor to his first Brunton-made production.

Besides the creditable acting of Mr. Kerrigan, Miss Walker and Mr. Dowling, good performances were also contributed by Alfred Hollingsworth, Pell Trenton and Albert Cody.

Violet Heming Has Signed Long Contract with Paramount

The signing of Violet Heming to a long-term contract to appear in Paramount-Artcraft pictures is announced by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production. Miss Heming will shortly be seen on the screen in the title role of "Everywoman," Famous Players-Lasky's production of Walter Browne's successful morality play, which Director George Melford recently finished in California. She will first be featured and later starred, according to the announcement.

Miss Heming is at present appearing in "Three Faces East," a stage production which is now on tour. Her work in pictures, it is announced, will not interfere with her stage appearances. On the contrary they will be encouraged by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on account of her constantly increasing popularity with the theatre-going public.

Universal Expedition Takes Scenes of Diamond Mine

Some very interesting scenes of the diamond mines at Kimberley, and the gold mines of Johannesburg, South Africa, have been taken by George Scott, chief cameraman for the expedition now travelling in Africa under the name of the Smithsonian African Expedition in conjunction with the Universal Film Company. Mr. Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal, received a cablegram on October 13th from William Stowell, who is directing the moving picture production end of dramatic work of the expedition, in which he said that ten thousand feet of pictures had been taken of the mines. A number of scenes were also made of the native race of Bulwayo.

Paramount Brings Screen to Aid Fight Against the "H. C. L."

The Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under the direction of Nathan H. Friend, has produced a series of special subjects which, it is expected, will be of much interest to housewives, as these pictures will try to show how the housewife may obtain greater value out of her weekly household allowance by the application of practicable scientific methods in purchasing food and other staples of living.

The first of these pictures is "Your Home and Your Dollar," and is set for release on November second. The first picture, it is stated, is devoted to showing how vegetable oils can be substituted in the preparation of numerous dishes.

"Round-Up" Films Marketed on State Right Basis

The Bulls-Eye Film Corporation has engaged Grover Jones, director, and scenario writer, to cut, edit and subtitle the fourteen thousand feet of the Pendleton, Ore., "Round-Up" films. According to Nat Spitzer, west coast studio manager for Bulls-Eye the "Round-Up" films will be marketed on the state rights' plan about November first, in two reels.

Nat Spitzer Waxes Strong for Shorter and Better Picture

In a statement recently issued, Nat Spitzer, of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation, takes issue with the producers who have not taken cognizance of the reported cry of the exhibitor for "shorter and better" pictures.

"In the main, I'm as much to blame as other producers," states Mr. Spitzer, "but I've cut my wisdom teeth. This 'public be damned' policy has gone the limit—with the public. The cry of the exhibitor goes on unheeded, but if the big producers do not get down to earth soon and study the present and future wants of the exhibitor, besides heeding the public demand, there will be some wonderful studios with thousands of dollars worth of props up at auction.

"The handwriting on the wall is two-reel dramas and comedies, the exhibitor has been crying for more short reel subjects and the producers all seem to be hard of hearing."

Fox Letters Go by Air from Coast to Coast

Sponsored by Fox Film Corporation and recorded by Fox News, the first delivery of letters by aeroplane from coast to coast has been effected in the great trans-continental aeroplane race. Lieut. E. H. Manzelman, of the United States Army, reached San Francisco with the last of six letters from William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, to as many branch managers along the route of the flier. Starting at Mineola, L. I., on October 8th, the aviator winged his way over San Francisco and alighted at Mather Field five days, six hours and 31 minutes later. He is said to be the first man to take letters through the air from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

Mr. Kolker of the "Legit" Engaged by Brentwood Film

Henry Kolker after many years of very real stage success as actor and producer was not won over to the screen until a few months ago. His short acquaintance with the "silver sheet" has, however, according to reports, sufficed to demonstrate his marked ability as a director, and to establish in his own mind recognition of the increased responsibilities which the multiplied influence of the screen has over the legitimate.

Kolker has now been secured by the Brentwood Film Corporation of Hollywood to direct a series of photo-dramas, and most fitting talent for each story to be picturized. Speaking of this engagement Mr. Kolker said, "There is a peculiar fitness in my joining the Brentwood since my views so thoroughly coincide with those expressed in the well-established policy of this organization. I feel that both the producer and his audiences have wasted their time, unless each picture adds to its hour of absorbing entertainment some constructive and practical thought, solidly implanted in the minds of all who see the picture."

Cowboy to Direct Cowboy for Fox in Western Features

Cliff Smith, cowboy director, has been signed by Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, to direct Tom Mix, cowboy actor. Mr. Smith is busy adopting for the screen the story of "The Gold Coins."

Winfield R. Sheehan got the director and the star together, and in short order closed the deal by which the director of former western thrillers and one of the most popular portrayers of western roles will make features for the Fox Film Corporation.

The pictures made by this combination will be, according to plans laid down, big virile stories, carrying with them the flavor and the odor of the life of the real West.

Work will start immediately, and with three leading women engaged to play opposite Tom Mix, a new stable of 100 horses, it is claimed, and fifty additional cowpunchers at Mixville. Western features on an unusual scale are promised by Fox Film Corporation.

"Hearts and Masks" Suitable Vehicle for Elinor Field

It is claimed that no more suitable story for Elinor Field than "Hearts and Masks," from the novel by Harold McGrath, could be found, in the opinion of those who have witnessed the first presentations of this story in film form as produced by the National Film Corporation of America. Not only does this production mark the debut of Miss Field in the sacred ranks of stardom, but it is also one of the few works of McGrath to reach the screen.

The production was directed by William Seiter and was filmed in the new studios of the National Film Corporation at Hollywood. It will be ready for special review in New York within a short time, according to Joe Brandt, general representative of the company, who is supervising elaborate plans for its premiere in the East.

Deitrich-Beck Enthuse Over Reception of "The Bandbox"

Preferring to withhold their enthusiasm until the big exhibitors of America saw their first joint product, Theodore C. Deitrich and Arthur F. Beck, producers of Doris Kenyon's first W., W. Hodkinson release, "The Bandbox," from the world-known novel by Louis Joseph Vance, were silence itself all during the course of production and even when the Hodkinson organization placed its stamp of approval on their offering. Reports from Hodkinson branches, where trade showings were held last week, however, have given the producers of "The Bandbox" just cause for giving vent to all of their pent-up enthusiasm.

"The Bandbox" has been received by the foremost picture showmen of the country with the same sort of praise they lavished on "Sahara" before that Hodkinson release set out on its successful expedition throughout the United States and Canada it is claimed. Much of the exhibitors' praise was devoted to Doris Kenyon, the excellence of her performance, her beauty and her way of making life-like the heroine of the Louis Joseph Vance story.

Pathe Reports Great Strides in Business Since June

Pathe this week issued a statement calling attention to the fact that during the last three months its feature bookings more than quadrupled the best previous months on record.

According to the report submitted, the business for June exceeded the May returns by 150 per cent.

A 60 per cent increase was recorded in July over the remarkable figures for June; August exceeded July by 75 per cent and September showed a 55 per cent increase over August. With October's business now rising to another new high record, Pathe predicts that the steady increases reported since June, will be more than maintained during the present month.

High standard of production realized in the pictures turned out and excellent service on the part of the Feature Sales Force are the two factors credited principally with the responsibility for this successful state of affairs by Paul Brunet, General Manager of the Pathe Exchanges, Inc.

"Scarlet Days," Historic in Basis, Shows California of 1849

D. W. Griffith's new Paramount-Artcraft Picture "Scarlet Days," scheduled for release on Nov. 30, is said to be based upon the romantic career of Joachin Murieta, a noted bandit of the memorable days of Californian history around 1849. The character of the bandit, appearing under the name of Alvarez, is reported to have been modified considerably; and in the photoplay, he appears as a sort of Robin Hood of the West, robbing the rich and giving to the poor.

Richard Barthelmess, in the role of Alvarez, and Eugenie Besserer in the role of the Scarlet Woman, are supported by Clarine Seymour, Ralph Graves, George Fawcett, Carol Dempster, Walter Long, and Herbert Sutch.

American Film in Foreign Deal

Son of President Hutchinson has Closed Contracts on Three Stars' Productions

WITH the return of J. Hobart Hutchinson, son of President Samuel S. Hutchinson of American Film Company, Inc., from England last week, comes the announcement that contracts for the Russell, Minter and Fisher productions have been closed for Europe at a figure well over a million dollars. This figure appears to be the highest yet obtained by any American manufacturer in proportion to the territory covered and the unmber of productions contracted for.

The Russell, Minter, Fisher productions are now being exploited widely in England, Wales, Scotland, Ireland, France, Holland, Belgium, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal, Italy, Greece and Egypt, Germany, Austria and Hungary, Poland, the Balkan States, Finland, Norway, Sweden and Denmark.

President Hutchinson's son who was in the Third American Army of Occupation, stationed at Coblenz when he was honorably discharged from service on July 15th, has been co-operating with the various buyers of American production in marketing the new features in their respective territories.

In England, young Mr. Hutchinson was the personal guest of Herbert Wright Thompson, who controls the Russell, Minter and Fisher subjects in England, Wales, Scotland and Ireland, at his home in Leeds. Mr. Thompson is known as one of Great Britain's foremost film impresarios, as he has the confidence of all the exhibitors in the United Kingdom and has built up a reputation for handling only the best of film attractions.

As an indication of the manner in which Mr. Thompson stages his trade showings it need only be said that the vast majority of his exhibitions for exhibitors are held in the famous London Pavilion, a gigantic legitimate theatre known all over Great Britain as the scene of the yearly Revues, which correspond to our "Follies." This theatre is located in Picadilly Circus and the mere fact that a film attraction is given in such a temple of the drama is a guarantee that it is of top notch quality.

Naturally Mr. Thompson, beside engaging such a magnificent theatre for his trade showing, makes sure that the presentation is in accordance with the house in which it is held, and it is no uncommon event for the film to be preceded by a pantomimic prologue symbolical of the story to be shown, and the running of the film itself is to the accompaniment of an orchestra of fifty or more pieces.

In France the same features are controlled by the firm of Cinematograph Harry of Paris, this being one of the most firmly established film distributing houses in France, with vast financial backing and representatives all over the European continent. Both minematograph Harry and Mr. Bates, another executive of the firm, were formerly connected with the Urban-Eclipse concern. Monsieur May, the great French banker is financially interested in the film, and his son represented the French government in the United States in all matters pertaining to film propaganda. Mr. Bates was in charge of the film activities and propaganda of Switzerland during the World War.

In company with Mr. Bates, J. Hobart Hutchinson visited Strasburg and several other German cities and reports that American Film Company productions were in tremendous demand, as exhibitors told them almost nothing but German-made de-

"Well--it is all over and I can truthfully say I have shown my patrons as great a production as has ever been thrown on a screen --even more so--for the comments were 100% when I gave them 'THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS' last Friday.

"It broke all house records.

"Allen Holubar is to be congratulated for such a timely production and the moral lesson is surely a credit to him.

"The Star--DOROTHY PHILLIPS--is at her very best. Her success in the dual role, which is simply wonderful, will always be remembered, as she surely made a great hit with my patrons.

"'THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS' is a production that every Exhibitor should be proud to show to his patrons and, if put over in the right way, will make him the clean-up of his lifetime.

"I thank you for your truthful advice on this great production and wish you all the success due you."

for the Smallest Town

When we brought out that tremendous triumph, "THE HEART OF HUMANITY", it was several months before the small-town exhibitor found cut that he could make just as much in proportion out of this picture as his big-city brother. He knew it was a great production but he was afraid of it--he feared he couldn't net enough to make it worth the price. As the weeks went by, however, we showed him testimonials from small-town men who had made a great success with and soon, all over the country, the smaller theatres started running "THE HEART OF HUMANITY"--and making the clean-up of their lives.

EXACTLY THE SAME THING IS ALREADY TRUE OF "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS". SAME MARVELOUS ACTRESS--SAME MASTER DIRECTOR--SAME TYPE OF PLAY AND STORY. BOOK IT TODAY FOR THE SAME MONEY.

Lehrman Explains His Policy

Producer Clarifies his Statements About the Acceptability of Scenarios From Outside

HENRY LEHRMAN has issued the following statement regarding his policies with reference to scenarios submitted from outside sources.

"Scores of exhibitors are writing me daily asking for information about the production of my series of comedies for First National Exhibitor's Circuit.

"This flood of inquiries is coming to me, no doubt, on account of a recent announcement from my studios stating that at present no comedy scenarios were desired from outside contributors.

"For some reason, when this announcement reached some of the leading trade paper editors, as well as a number of photoplay editors, several of them deplored the fact that I should keep my comedy sources confined within the limits of my studio.

"This statement displays a singular ignorance of conditions on the part of a photoplay editor whose work should make him conversant with the fact that exactly the contrary is true, and that producers of motion pictures are now paying prices for stories (published and unpublished) which even a year ago would have been considered outside the range of possibility.

"If fewer unpublished stories are now being purchased from unknown writers, it is simply because the general average of submissions has for years been deplorably low, and some companies have despaired of securing suitable stories through this channel.

"But the creation of the type of material used in Lehrman Comedies has little in common with the writing of the ordinary photoplay, and requires special training almost impossible to secure outside the studio. A comedy, to be a laughing success, or a practically unbroken succession of laughs, cannot depend entirely upon its story for results, but must achieve its purpose through the introduction of incidental action or "gags" which may be entirely foreign to plot, but nevertheless have an important bearing on the reception accorded the completed picture.

"I would gladly pay a high price for a comedy scenario with a good story and sufficient novel "gags" to make two reels of fast and funny action. But many years' experience has served to show that it's almost too much to expect."

"Desert Gold" In Wells' Houses

Chain of Theatres Also Booked on "The Westerners" and Early Playing Dates Given

HARRY BERNSTEIN, general manager of Jake Wells Virginia enterprises, and Hugh L. Cardoza, general manager of Wells Atlanta interests, have simultaneously through two Hodkinson managers booked for immediate presentation in Norfolk, Richmond and Atlanta, the first Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner presentation of Zane Grey's "Desert Gold." A triple booking of Mr. Hampton's first great author's picture, "The Westerners," also has been made, the two productions thereby obtaining six weeks of the playing time in three of the South's most important first run theatres.

The past week has been marked by the success of B. B. Hampton's two productions. In Des Moines last week A. H. Blank, the Iowa and Middle West magnate, played "The Westerners" for a week's run at his Palace Theatre against "The Miracle Man" in another Blank house a few doors away and established the fall record for the house. During the week also "The Westerners" drew capacity business to W. L. Myers' Majestic Theatre, Waterloo, where the Benjamin B. Hampton production equaled the mark set by "Sahara" earlier in the season. A. J. Diebold gave "Desert Gold" a week of powerful exploitation at his Strand Theatre, Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and a banner week's business resulted. Mr. Diebold staged a gorgeous prelude on the Zane Grey production and his newspaper advertising appropriation almost doubled that of any production shown at the Strand since his Fall opening.

Among the important first-run contracts on "Desert Gold" just announced are: The Hippodrome, Pottsville, Pa.; the Family, Elkhart, Ind.; the Princess, Ames, Iowa; the Opera House, Gloucester, N. J.; the Standard, Chicago; the La Salle, Chicago; the Theatarett, Fort Scott, Kans.; the Movieland, Las Cruces, N. M.; the Gould, Pittsburgh; the Crystal, Pittsburgh; the Majestic, Hibbing, Minn.; the "B" Theatre, Albuquerque, N. M.; the Eagle, Jeanette, Pa.; the Strand, Altoona, Pa.

Big bookings of "The Westerners" announced in the past few days include:

The Majestic, Chillicothe, Ohio; the Hippodrome, Pottsville, Ja.; the Elks, Mahoney City, Pa.; the Doan, Cleveland; the Main, Cleveland; the Opera House, Urichsville, Ohio; the Airdome, De Leon, Tex.; the Lincoln, Union Hill, N. J.; the Magnet, Claremont, N. H.; the O'Dowd, Florence, S. C.; the Colonial, Sioux Falls, S. D.; the Gould, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Proctor's, Plainfield, N. J.; the Regent, Billings, Mont.; the Majestic, New York City.

Arthur Jacobs Branches Out as a Player Specialist

Arthur H. Jacobs, prominently identified with the producing end of the motion picture industry for many years, has again engaged in business for himself and has opened a suite of offices on the ninth floor of 145 West 45th Street, New York.

Mr. Jacobs announces on his letter heads and business cards that he is a specialist in Motion Picture Players, Authors, Stars and Productions. He intends to manage stars and players of recognized ability and to institute a new sort of high class service to producers.

tective stories had been the steady film diet of their patrons for the past two or three years.

In Copenhagen the firm of John Olsen and Company controls the American Film Company productions for the group of Scandinavian countries and Mr. Hutchinson, Jr., declares they are being warmly received by the exhibitors. This firm was also co-operating with the Scandinavian government in film propaganda during the World War and through its activities in that respect greatly increased its prestige among Scandinavian exhibitors so that today it unquestionably dominates the distribution field.

"We feel that the consummation of contracts providing for the distribution of the Minter, Russell, Fisher series of productions in the newly created countries like Poland, Finland and the Balkan States, with the others which have been closed for the balance of Europe, gives us reason to be mighty proud of our European connections," said Mr. Hutchinson. "I know of no American producer who is better represented abroad than we are at present. It is mighty gratifying to note that our reputation for making only the highest class of features — the kind of pictures that can be shown in the finest theatres on the continent, has won us such excellent connections, for all of the firms holding contracts with us are held in high esteem by exhibitors and assure the showing of 'Flying A' pictures in every nook and corner of Europe. With the aid and co-operation of such firms, you may be sure we can go enthusiastically about making still greater and better pictures for them next season."

Briggs Comedies Liked in the Metropolitan Centers

With bookings from the leading first-run houses all over the country, the Paramount-Briggs comedies it is declared in a statement from the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, are proving that exhibitors want variety in the type of comedy fare which they serve their patrons. Last week two Paramount-Briggs comedies played in two leading Broadway houses, the Strand and the Rivioli, and in the new Strand Theatre in Brooklyn.

Special Service Section on
Anna Lehr in "The Open Door"

ABOUT THE STORY

THERE is a feature picture which presents a great opportunity for the exhibitor to get out of the beaten path, inasmuch as it is a decided novelty in construction, so far as the technique of making a picture is concerned.

The story is told almost without the use of subtitles. Clever methods of expressing lapses of time and like necessities in picture making are employed without words being used to inform the audience what can not be told in the scenes.

The picture itself is a mystery story and will hold interest although there is really so much mystery in the first few reels that no one is able to even guess what it is all about. Later sequences, however, explain fairly well the early scenes which have been meaningless up to this time and the picture will pass as a better than average offering of its kind.

We believe that every true showman is looking for opportunities for getting out of the exhibiting and advertising rut and we therefore have decided that we will recommend that those who book this picture should go about exploiting it not so much as a great dramatic picture, but as a novelty and we might say, an innovation in construction. We must admit that there has been mighty little improvement in the technique of the studios. Picture fans realize this too and they have been looking for something that is different and which could be termed an advance in the art of screen production.

It is now some years since Mr. Griffith introduced the closeup and the foreground into what is now common use. This marked an epoch in the history of the industry, is still talked of, and is generally known among picture fans as one of the big events in picturedom.

In the construction of "The Open Door" you have three things which by stretching a point or so that you could proclaim to your audience as a second epoch in motion picture events. First, the elimination of practically all titles, the injection of which has in many cases irritated many people who go to the picture houses. Second, is an improvement in camera work, the use of double and triple exposure, so that the scenes blend from one to the other with the entire elimination of the "snap" that always characterizes the projection of a closeup following a long distance shot where no resolve is used.

Third, photography that has never been surpassed and is seldom equalled, especially in a six-reel picture. There is not a scene which does not stand out like a cameo. So sharp and clear is it, that beads of perspiration can be seen trickling down the faces of some of the actors in foreground shots. We are not aware that any new methods have been employed in developing such high grade photography, and are presuming that the results obtained are only those which expert camera men and laboratory "sharks" such as the head camera man who is responsible for the negative of this picture, John K. Holbrook is capable of when given the authority to go ahead and do a job the best they know how. But the fact remains that this is a great piece of work in this connection and we don't think that you would be placing yourself outside the sphere of a good showman if you were to claim that this picture was a demonstration of a new process in photography which promises to revolutionize the business.

Advertise it as presenting a great advance in studio technique as that presented by D. W. Griffith when he introduced the "close-up."

Advertise it as a film where the story is told almost entirely without subtitles.

Advertise it as the finest photographic gem you have ever seen and as an advance n the photographic art.

"The Open Door" was written by Garfield Thompson, directed by Dallas M. Fitzgerald, supervised by George M. Merrick and photographed by John K. Holbrook and James C. Hutchinson.

Although John P. Wade heads the cast, an unusually good one throughout, we believe that we would give Anna Lehr the best end of our billing if we wanted to mention anyone especially in the cast, as she is rather well known among picture fans and Mr. Wade's name will mean very little.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

Horton and Evans are partners in business. Moore, a trusted bookkeeper for the firm, discovers a defalcation. It is learned that Owens has used the funds in a speculation and lost. In order to save the good name of the firm, and greatly in need of money himself, Moore signs an arrangement with the two men, whereby he will take the blame for the stolen money for a compensation. After serving fifteen years in prison he returns and demands his money. He has lost his copy of the agreement. Owens refuses to pay him and he seeks Horton. Horton has reared Moore's daughter as his own and further he promises to aid him to recover the money under this secret agreement. Owens in the meantime hires a crook to rob the safe of Horton in order to steal some securities and get a copy of the agreement. Horton is murdered but the criminal is discovered by Moore. The latter is injured by a passing automobile. Later Moore is accused of the murder of Horton. An attempt is made to blackmail the daughter of Horton. Finally the real criminal is caught, and Owens' connection and complicity in the crime is discovered and he is sent to jail. Moore comes to claim his daughter but realizing her life might be clouded if she knew of his career, leaves. She never knows the sacrifice.

THE CAST

Joe Moore.....John P. Wade
Tom Burke.....Sam J. Ryan
James Horton.....Bob Broderick
Matthew Owens.....Frank Evans
Mary Burke.....Anna Lehr
Betty Horton.....Edith Stockton
Robert Blakemore.....Walter Miller
Alice Drake.....Diana Allen

John P. Wade will be remembered for his characterization in J. Stuart Blackton's "Safe for Democracy" and Anna Lehr has a good reputation as leading woman in numberless features. The other members of the cast are well known stage artists. Especially effective are the characterizations of Sam J. Ryan, Bob Broderick and Frank Evans.

COMPARISONS AND OPINIONS

THERE is hardly a feature which we remember with which this picture can be compared with justice. Not that in plot that it is so different than many other mystery-crook stories but that it has been handled very differently.

Since we have treated the story in our synopsis from the angle of telling you in the fewest number of words what the plot is about we think it best to advise you a bit farther concerning the construction.

This picture opens up with a fight between Horton and Owens which Burke sees. Then you see Moore leaving Sing Sing Prison and then come some scenes in which you guess that Moore has been doing time for a crime that he did not commit, that Owens is crooked and that the girl who is supposed to be Horton's daughter is really Moore's child. Then the plot centers on the solving of the murder mystery in the last reels.

It is our opinion that this feature will get by with audiences which like mystery stories and most people do and that doesn't mean just ordinary fans either.

At a Glance

Story — Mystery melodrama with love interest secondary in importance.

Star — John P. Wade credited with the lead. Practically an all star production with no one role predominating.

Support — Includes Anna Lehr and capable people who are correct types.

Author — Garfield Thompson.

Director — Dallas M. Fitzgerald — Supervised by George M. Merrick.

Length — Six reels.

Roosevelt confessed to liking the detective yarns, Wilson is said to fall for the Diamond Dick stuff and so on.

We would advise the exhibitors who book this feature to speed up their projection a bit on the first three reels. It would be fatal to let this story drag as it takes quite a while getting to the plot.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY

WE have told you that we would announce this as something new in photoplay and therefore some advertising copy we will write for use in your newspapers and program will be framed to carry out this idea.

Here is what we would suggest in catch lines:

"Griffith Revolutionized the Photoplay with the 'close-up'"

"Have you been bored by pictures because of excessive titles?"

"Marking a new epoch in photoplay production."

For selling talk to be used with a good cut we offer the following:

"We announce the film sensation of the season in point of novelty. A picture which tells its story almost without the aid of titles: which contains some new ideas in scene construction that is as revolutionary as D. W. Griffith's first use of the "close-up": Photography which has never been equaled in any picture, something new and different in every way."

"As for the dramatic story of the picture, it is a mystery melodrama, the kind you all like, interesting and attention compelling in every sequence." "This feature marks an epoch in photoplay in three departments. First, because the story is told almost without the use of titles: Second, because some new ideas in scene construction which are as revolutionary as D. W. Griffith's first use of the "close-up," and third, because it will introduce to you a quality of photography you have never seen.

The dramatic quality of the story, a mystery melodrama the sort which keeps people guessing until the final sequence, will also commend itself to your good judgment on picture values. It is good entertainment and a decided novelty. We want your opinion on the new technique. Come and let us know what you think about it."

"This picture promises something new. First, the story is told, practically without the aid of titles, clever means being employed to convey what is usually stated in words. Second, new and revolutionary ideas put to test in camera work. Third, photography which has never been equaled and concerning which we are not able to make announcement further than that it is a big advance in the art.

Dramatically this is a good story, an interesting well-knit tale of the crook-mystery type, the kind you like best because you can't see the end until the end is reached."

NEWSPAPER READER

"THE OPEN DOOR" a new and novel feature photoplay, enacted by an all star cast will be the photoplay offering at the ——— theatre for an ——— day engagement beginning ———.

This film has been acclaimed by everyone as an astonishing production from it's technical side in that it is a wide departure from the usual in many of it's angles. To those who have deplored the ever increasing tendency to make the picture an animated novel by the use of excessive subtitles this feature will be welcomed. It is said that it contains less than a half dozen short titles, the whole story being told by the pantomime of the players or by clever camera work which eliminates the necessity of words in the unfolding of the plot.

Another feature of the picture which brings it into the novelty class, is some new ideas in scene construction and the most wonderful photography ever produced.

Greater Pathe Sales Activities

Big Increase in Sales Volume Makes Necessary Reorganization of Sales Department

BECAUSE of the tremendous increase in business recorded in every branch during the last six months, Mr. Paul Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been obliged to reorganize the executive force of the Sales Department to provide for further specialization in sales activities. The Short Subjects Sales Department has been abolished, and in its stead are three divisions which will handle all short subjects sales. These are classed as Division 1, Serials; Division 2, Comedies; Division 3, Pathe News, Pathe Review, Topics of the Day, and Miscellaneous.

Frank Duffy, who for some time past has been engaged visiting the Pathe Exchanges as Special Representative of the General Manager, has been appointed Assistant Director of Exchanges, and will spend most of his time in the Home Office. Mr. Duffy has been with Pathe for years, and is familiar with exchange work in its every phase. He will relieve Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges, of much of the department detail, and his first-hand knowledge of conditions and men in the sales force, will be invaluable.

Walter Wessling, Short Subject Sales Manager, at his own request, was relieved of the multitudinous duties of that office, and has been appointed Manager of the Southern Division. He is already in the field. Mr. Wessling has been with Pathe for more than five years and has held almost every office in the exchange system —posterman, shipper, booker, cashier, assistant branch manager and district manager. His territory will embrace the Charlotte, Atlanta, New Orleans, Little Rock, Dallas, Oklahoma City, Kansas City, St. Louis and Cincinnati offices.

Jack Storey, whose work as a manager of the Kansas City exchange was most effective, has been promoted to District Manager of the Pacific Coast territory. His district comprises the Denver, Salt Lake City, Seattle, Spokane, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles offices. Storey has been with Pathe about a year and a half, and in that time brought the Kansas City exchange from a position where it had only once earned a bonus, to a consistent winner of prize money.

Edgar O. Brooks, who for some time has been Exploitation Manager of Pathe, is appointed Manager of the Serial Sales. Mr. Brooks' energetic work as Exploitation Manager, which has resulted in big returns, was responsible for his promotion. He is thoroughly familiar with the sale as well as exploitation of motion pictures, for, in his long career in the motion picture field, he has been thoroughly trained in the direction of sales.

No selection has been made of the men who will command the other two short subjects divisions, and until they are selected all matters pertaining to the product of these divisions will be handled by Mr. Duffy.

The duties of the Exploitation Department have been assumed by Victor M. Shapiro, who joined the Pathe Publicity Department soon after receiving his discharge from the Camp Upton hospital, where he spent several months after returning from active service in France as a lieutenant with the 77th, Metropolitan Division. Mr. Shapiro is a thoroughly drilled exploitation man, and before joining the army handled several big features.

L. S. Diamond has been appointed Secretary to the Director of Exchanges, and in addition will retain his position as head of the Sales Statistics Department.

Several weeks ago Frank Rogers was named Manager of the Central Division, which includes the offices in Chicago, Detroit, Minneapolis, Indianapolis, Milwaukee, Des Moines, and Omaha, and is now actively engaged in his work.

United Feature A Costume Show

"The Corsican Brothers" Marks Return to Costume Productions and Romantic Style

THAT Dustin Farnum and his management, the United Picture Theatres Inc., are convinced that the time is ripe for a return of the costume play to the screen is indicated by the reported magnitude of the production of "The Corsican Brothers" which United has almost completed for the star at the Astra studios. Another enthusiastic advocate of the plan, and incidentally one who predicts great success for it, is L. J. Gasnier under whose personal supervision the big feature spectacle is being made. Mr. Berst, Mr. Farnum and Mr. Gasnier put themselves on record as prognosticating success for their costume production, basing their opinion on the need of diversity of offering, and pointing out as they are reported to do, the fact that there has been so frequent a repetition of the monotony of modern dress plays and of modern plots that the motion picture public has grown rather weary in that line and is ready to welcome a return of the romantic style of the early part of the last century with its courtly environment and wealth of investiture.

Manifestly "The Corsican Brothers" lends itself well to massive and elaborate production, and this is promised with marked assurance by the United producers. Stills of the major portion of the offering already completed have reached the East and are said to bear out by their depicted "action," and by the massiveness and beauty of the scenes they show forth, the large claims made for the forthcoming six-reel feature.

The acclaim with which patrons of the silent screen have accorded the productions in which Sessue Hayakawa is the central figure will, it is said, be emphasized in his latest picture, "The Illustrious Prince" produced for Robertson-Cole by the Haworth studios.

Dalton Closes Deal; Organizes a New Company

Emmett Dalton, President and General Manager of the Southern Feature Film Corporation recently sold his Ohio Territory on his famous feature "Beyond The Law" to Sol. Lesser. During his recent trip to New York City Mr. Lesser bought these state rights for his Masterpiece Film Corporation of Cleveland, Ohio.

Mr. Dalton also closed out the states of Illinois and Indiana to the Doll-Van Co. of Chicago and Indianapolis, also to Mr. J. F. Cubberly of the First National Exhibitors Circuit of Minneapolis the states of Minnesota, Wisconsin, North and South Dakota, and to A. H. Blank, of Des Moines the states of Iowa and Nebraska.

Mr. E. H. Hulsey of The First National Exhibitors Circuit of Dallas, Tex., purchased the rights to Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas on this great production.

With these big deals closed Mr. Dalton has done the unusual thing of disposing of the entire territory over his desk in his New York office.

Mr. Dalton also desires it to be announced that he has recently completed the organization of The Great Western Pictures Corporation with headquarters in New York City, and he will leave for the west shortly with a company of screen artists to take a series of two and five reel western productions.

A. S. Dworsky Completes Film Machine

A visitor in New York City is A. S. Dworsky, inventor of machines that clean and renovate film. He is proprietor of Twin City Film Renovating Company of Minneapolis and receives film cleansing orders from distances as far as New York and Seattle.

From eight to ten years have been spent by Mr. Dworsky in experimenting and he has had large machines of his own invention in operation for many years. As he has just perfected a machine four feet high by four feet long and only two feet wide, which is small enough to be installed in any exchange he is demonstrating it in New York City for the next few weeks.

Without the aid of chemicals Mr. Dworsky declares that his machine absolutely cleans and buffs old film and that it can also buff the emulsion side as well as the celleloid side of new film. The American Film Renovating Company with headquarters in the Consumers Building, Chicago, has been established by Mr. Dworsky and those allied with him to demonstrate the new small machine.

Night Scenes of Shipwreck Form Feature of New Metro Film

Alice Lake, Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier head the company that is picturizing "Should a Woman Tell?" for the Screen Classics, Inc. The drama is from the pen of Finis Fox of the Metro scenario staff and is directed by John E. Ince. A company of 100 players spent 10 days at the Laguna Beach location on the Pacific Coast where night scenes of a shipwreck were filmed for the production.

FOUR CHRISTIE COMEDIES

INNOVATION IN SPECIAL SERVICE

IN preparing a special service for Christie comedies, an innovation in this department, we have been induced to render this service for the reason that we have noted the continued increase in attention that the smaller numbers on the programs are receiving at the hands of progressive exhibitors.

We are selecting the last four releases of the Christie Specials, "Shades of Shakespeare," "Dangerous Nan McGrew," "He Married His Wife" and "Wild and Western."

All of these pictures are in two reels, each has a definite plot to which the sequences adhere and each picture is entirely different from the others. Releases are monthly through the usual channels of the Christie films.

SYNOPSIS OF "SHADES OF SHAKESPEARE"

DIRECTION AL E. CHRISTIE.

Story by W. Scott Darling.

Cast: Alice Lake, Earl Rodney, Gene Corey, Eddie Barry.

Gene and Earl were in love with Alice and when they decided to put on a war play, they both wanted to be the hero. Alice had written the love scenes for Earl and herself, but as Gene said his father wouldn't let them play in the opera house if he wasn't the hero they had to let him be the American officer, while Earl was the Hun captain.

Everything apparently went well until Gene quarreled with the property man. In order to get even, the property man tied Gene's uniform to the scenery just before his cue, thus preventing Gene from making a heroic entrance and rescuing Alice and the Belgian girls. They quarreled again, knocking some of the scenery down.

In his villainous effort to sandbag Earl, Gene was knocked unconscious. Then Alice was struck by the brilliant idea of Earl changing uniforms and playing the hero. This was done and just before the entrance of the German army, Gene bribed them into not going on. So the show waited while the property man was sent out for a new German army. He persuaded the fire department to come and act and, as there hadn't been a fire in three months, they consented.

This gave the villainous Gene another chance. He hurried to the fire house and in the most dramatic scene rang the fire bell. The fire chief, posed majestically upon the edge of the trench, cried, "Brady's Planing Mill; back to the fire house!" And again the show was left flat.

Arriving at the fire house, they saw what the trouble was and chased Gene away and went back to the theatre. But Gene's resources were not at an end. He purchased some sneezing powder and installed himself in the gallery, distributing the powder over the audience.

The audience sneezed, the orchestra sneezed, the actors sneezed, and even the dead soldiers rose up to sneeze. Of course this cooked the performance. The audience walked out and the actors stopped acting. Alice commenced to cry, but Earl comforted her with a proposal and a diamond ring, so she counted it not such a bad night after all.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES

IN as much as this is a burlesque on acting, your advertising should be couched in the same vein. For instance, "kid" in your newspaper display. Use one of the burlesque melodramatic cuts furnished by the producers and tack a good catch line in the same vein along side it. Here are some which occur to us as appropriate:

"The German Army Goes on a Strike."

"Firemen Take the Place of the German Army."

"The Villain's 'Pa' Owned the 'Opery House.'"

For a paragraph of selling talk we would use something written in this vein, "The shero wrote the play, all about the brave doughboy, and the despicable German officer. They presented it in the 'opry house.' Presented is correct because lots of things happened, the funniest things you ever saw and reminiscent of that home talent show you took part in once on a time. Remember how everything went wrong?

"We can't tell you any more about this comedy for it would spoil your fun to know what is coming, but believe us it is funny."

"'Shades of Shakespeare' is right. The immortal bard probably turned over in his grave at the travesty this comedy makes of his great art. It is all about the home talent show that the shero wrote mostly for herself and hero and which is presented at the "opry house." Ever see a home talent show? Or better yet, did you ever play in one? Well, this comedy is the real thing. See it."

The producers have prepared two very appropriate posters for this show. We would be liberal with both as they will suggest that a lot of fun is ahead for the patrons of your house.

Number four of Volume 1 of "Film Follies" published by the producers of Christie comedies, will tell you about "Shades of Shakespeare."

SYNOPSIS OF "DANGEROUS NAN McGREW"

Nan McGrew, proprietress of the ice cream parlor in a Western town, is in love with Billy. They plan to marry as soon as Nan receives a legacy from a rich uncle in the East who has just died. A letter from the uncle's lawyer states that the will provides that Nan and Cousin Hezeziah were to share jointly under the condition that they marry, either party defaulting, the other would get the money. Their bubble bursted, Nan tried to think of some way to sidestep Hezekiah, who was arriving on the next train.

She had the happy idea of bringing to life the Western town of Dead Dog in which they lived and which was as dead as its name. The temperance hall was turned into the Golden Nugget Saloon, a few cactus planted for atmosphere and the whole population turned into dance hall girls, Indians and cowpunchers. The cowpunchers went to greet Hezekiah, escorted him to the saloon, forced him to drink and generally shocked him when in rode Nan. The customers in the saloon ducked under tables and chairs and Hezekiah was informed that she was DANGEROUS NAN McGREW.

After drinking the bar dry, killing a few citizens and acting tough, Nan thot she had Hezekiah sufficiently scared and went with Billy to her ice cream parlor to drink a toast to their victory.

BUT, Hezekiah wasn't so easily lost. He decided to marry her after all, having both eyes on the inheritance. Then Billy took a hand. He told Hezekiah that to flirt with his girl was to flirt with death. In vain did Hezekiah protest that he only wanted the money and would secure a divorce as soon as they were married, and all the threats couldn't move him.

Nan and Hezekiah accordingly went to the minister's and as Hezekiah was about to say "I do," Billy started to shoot up the place. It was then that Hezekiah ran and didn't stop till he was safe on the train, while Nan and Billy were made one and happy by the minister.

ADVERTISING POSSIBILITIES OF "DANGEROUS NAN McGREW"

THIS film is another burlesque in which what would have passed as a straight Western melodrama in the old days is given broad treatment with excellent comedy results. If you have played the Dorothy Gish feature "Nugget Nell" you will know about what to expect as this is a two reeler along the same lines.

In advertising this we would recommend the use of the two-column cut prepared by the producers which is typical of the fun the film contains, and gives the star, Fay Tincher, recognition as the foremost figure in the illustration. There are also two one-column cuts available, both of which will advertise the production in the right vien. A good one and three-sheet poster are also available, as well as some excellent scene stills. On this production the stills will be especially effective in your advertising.

For catch lines on this picture we would suggest something like these:

"The Parson Drank It Down," but (explain what he drank).
"Dead Dog Came to Life."
"Sounds Like a Rip Roaring Westerner."

SYNOPSIS OF "WILD AND WESTERN."

AL E. CHRISTIE.

Story by W. Scott Darling and Frank Roland Conklin.

Cast: Fay Tincher, Eddie Barry, Neal Burns, Gene Corey, Earl Rodney.

Rosie is a Y. W. C. A. gym. instructor in the east. Coincident with her getting a little too rough with one of the girls, knocking her out and being fired from her job as athletic director, Rosie is advised of the fact that she has acquired a piece of real property in the form of the Rough Neck Rancho. There is nothing for her to do but go west, going Horace Greely one better by setting out for the Rough Neck Rancho with the idea of bringing it up right and proper with deft feminine touches. These touches turned out to be deft, but scarcely feminine, inasmuch as they were blows from Rosie's husky mit. Naturally, a bunch of bewhiskered and devil-may-care cowboys resented the innovation of a woman manager, and when Rosie ordered the foreman and all the rest of them to shave their moustaches, it was a little too much for hard boiled Bill and his gang of leather-necked cowboys. Rosie imported a bunch of strikebreakers, some of her own girl pals, who were nicely settled in the ranch house. Bad Bill hit upon the brilliant idea of hiring a bunch of Indians to attack the ranch house, scare the wits out of the eastern young ladies and otherwise maintain the morale of the men folks around Rough Neck Rancho. It was a bad day for the Indians and a worse day for the cowboys, as it turned out, for after Rosie and her cohort of Sure-Shot Susies finished mopping off the Indians out of the barricades of windows, and after three or four Indians had bitten the dust after good old-fashioned melodramatic style, the redskins turned around and licked the tar out of all the cowboys for putting them up to such a hazardous undertaking. By this time one or two of the cowboys had fallen for the lure of the women folks and had sacrificed their flowing whiskers, their sole pride and joy, under the telling fire of Cupid's darts. Red Bill, the burly foreman, was finally vanquished by Rough Neck Rosie in a fist fight which was not exactly fair but thoroughly effective. Bill got the final wallop when he wasn't looking by one of Rosie's pals planted behind a carpet before which the fight took place.

At the end of the second reel of desperate milling Rosie and her pals are victorious and the Rough Neck Rancho settles down to peace and quiet and every clean-shaven cowboy has a little milkmaid on his arm.

ADVERTISING "WILD AND WESTERN"

IF the other Christie specials have gone over for you, especially "Dangerous Nan McGrew," then you will have your patrons looking for the Christie's and you won't need to go into too much detail.

We would tell people that this is a fitting successor of "Nan McGrew." Say that it is even better than the other burlesque Western which they have seen. Give them a little hint of the plot if you want to in this, enough so they will get the humor possibilities of the offering. Use the cuts which have been prepared and can be obtained from the exchange and also bill with the one and three sheet lithographs which are prepared on each release.

For catch lines for your newspaper display try this kind of stuff:

"She was a little rough for the effete East so she went West"—

"As a Gym instructor she was a lemon but when it came to putting cowboys in trim she was there"—

"Rosie was her name. She took Greeley's advice"—

SYNOPSIS OF "HE MARRIED HIS WIFE"

DIRECTION AL E. CHRISTIE.

Story by Neal Burns.

Cast: Edith Roberts, Neal Burns, Eddie Barry.

Edith and Neal have just been divorced and the judge ordered Neal to pay $300 a week alimony. Neal tried to slip out of the country on the first alimony day, but was caught in an aeroplane chase. Then next alimony day he got what he thought was a brilliant idea.

He left his clothes on the beach and pretended to have killed himself. So Edith took possession of the house and the judge started courting her. Then Neal was informed by his lawyer that he was legally dead and his wife automatically inherited everything and in order to get his money back he would have to marry her again.

So Neal disguised himself with whiskers and had a couple of thugs accost Edith so he could play the hero with her. But in the sham fight one of the thugs apologized to Edith for hitting her husband so hard and spilled the beans generally. So Edith took him in the house and nursed him back to health and he proposed.

After telling him how like her poor, dear, dead husband he was, she consented, and he had to wear a suit of her supposed dead husband's to get married in. The "guests" were all detectives, the minister himself being a detective. Just as Edith was about to say "I do," she said "I don't" instead and disclosed Neal's identity. The lawyer arrived just then and said in reading over the old will he found a clause saying that quarrels in the family would have to be patched up or the money would go to charity. So they were married all over again — by the judge of the divorce court.

ADVERTISING FOR "HE MARRIED HIS WIFE"

THIS picture is a straight farce comedy and not burlesque. It is, however, broad in the scope of its plot and has plenty of action.

In advertising this film we would follow the same course that we have recommended for the two preceding releases, give the picture space in your newspaper display, use the lithographs prepared by the producers and obtain plenty of scene stills.

Some excellent exhibitor aids have been prepared for this comedy. Get the September copy of Film Follies published by the Christie Film Co. of Los Angeles. It will tell you all about "He Married His Wife," and prove interesting in other ways too

For your newspaper display we suggest the following for catch lines:

"She said he had eyes like her poor dead husband."
"The bridegroom heard the wedding march twice in the same place.
"He courts his divorced wife."

We would give Edith Roberts the headlines in our advertising as she has quite a reputation as a leading woman.

F. P.-Lasky Gets New Studio for Its Educational Department

Because of the rapid growth of the production activities of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, under the general management of Nathan H. Friend, it has become necessary to engage new studio space. The offices, formerly occupied by the B. S. Moss Company at 110 West 42d Street, have been taken over by the Educational Department for the art and scenario departments of the Paramount Magazine and other productions made by Mr. Friend's staff.

The studio space at 120 West 41st Street, which has been the home of the scenario and art departments of the Paramount Magazine, is now being devoted to the use of directors and other production forces of the Magazine and other branches of the Educational Department's activities.

"Poor Relations," Study in Contrasts, Released Soon

The latest Brentwood production directed by King W. Vidor will be released under the title "Poor Relations." As suggested by its title, "Poor Relations" presents two phases of social American life and the contact between the counter-currents snobbery and sophistication and honest and primitive feelings. The charm and simplicity of the situations it is expected will hold the attention of hardened fans.

The cast is said to include a carefully selected company. Florence Vidor as the talented Dorothy of the Perkins family is stated to be appealing, while ZaSa Pitts in the part of sister Daisy, the romantic and novel-loving maiden, is given full scope to inject those quaint touches of eccentric comedy which have won Miss Pitts considerable popularity.

First National Makes Presentation to Robert Lieber

In appreciation and admiration for the work of Robert Lieber, president of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc., which had brought the Circuit to such a gratifying state of prosperity, stockholders of the Circuit at a meeting at Hotel Astor presented Mr. Lieber with a signed tribute of esteem and appreciation and an order for a Pierce-Arrow limousine.

W. H. Gordon, owner of the First National Franchise for Boston, in a speech of presentation declared that Mr. Lieber's work for the Circuit was of a nature that would stand out in the history of the motion picture industry.

Reports Favorable Progress on "The Corsican Brothers"

At the Gasnier studios at Glendale, Director Colin Campbell is well along with the latest of United Picture Theatres features, "The Corsican Brothers," starring Dustin Farnum.

President J. A. Berst, of United, returned recently to New York City after expressing his satisfaction over the manner in which the celebrated story by Dumas is being staged. Mr. Berst stated that from every standpoint the production promised to be exceptional.

First National's Home Office Undergoes Renovations

As a result of the growth in business of First National Exhibitors" Exchange, Inc., and the increased responsibilities on the home office, the entire seventh floor of the building at 6 West 48th Street is being remodeled for the expansion of the various departments connected with the home office.

Among those offices which will be located on the second floor is the accessory department in charge of S. F. Clark. Part of the floor will be utilized for a shipping room, declared to be one of the most up-to-date in the film industry. The new arrangement will also provide for the need of space by the publicity department. C. L. Yearsley, director of publicity and advertising for the Circuit will move into a new office, and his present quarters will be taken by other members of First National's staff.

In addition to the stock room, shipping room and accessory department, First National's art department will occupy space which is being appropriately designed for that work.

"A Woman of Pleasure" Gets Special Exploitation

According to reports, advertising aids with a special character and originality, in that they are said to combine beauty and sales value, will be the treat in store for exhibitors on J. D. Hampton's production "A Woman of Pleasure," featuring Blanche Sweet, Pathe Special release.

All the matter on this feature from the twenty-four sheet to the slide is reported to have been given particular attention and the money-making help it will render the exhibitor has been the main motive in the creation of the advertising.

Irvin S. Cobb Story for Morey

"The Adventures of Bill," a story by Irvin S. Cobb, is being put into picture form for Vitagraph by Lucien Hubbard, who has just returned from a vacation. It will be filmed during the winter with Harry T. Morey in the leading role.

Exhibitors Make Records on "Back to God's Country"

The public's appreciation for "something different" in screen entertainment, and an indication to producers of the financial values to be found in divergences from the conventional in productions, are two outstanding results of trade interest following first run engagements of "Back to God's Country," the Curwood-Carver production adapted from the story by James Oliver Curwood and released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

A two weeks' presentation at Tom Moore's Garden Theatre in Washington, D. C., established a new box office record for that house, and a new high mark for paid admissions for engagements of similar length.

At the Madison Theatre, Detroit, owned by John H. Kunsky, the special feature played to a gross of $3,210 on the first day of a seven days' run, and this record top for an opening day was exceeded by several hundred dollars on the sixth and seventh days of the season.

Hobart Henley Leases a Studio

Owing to the growing demand for his pictures Hobart Henley has leased a studio at 361-363 West 125th Street, for the next year. Screen fans and exhibitors need no introduction to Henley for he has given to the picture world realistic, strong and vital subjects, told not to secure tremendous profit but to give them a better and a bigger understanding of life and its problems.

In speaking of his plan for his new company yesterday, Henley said, "The main thing in pictures is to present a truthful picture of life as the public knows it and not foster false ideals in the minds of the younger generation. I do not mean by this that I intend producing morality plays."

The second picture to be released as a "Hobart Henley Production" will be "Skin Deep" which is now ready for work. The picture is another of Mrs. Drew's adaptations. He has also purchased other plays.

Hall Room Boys Booked for the Loew Circuit

Jack and Harry Cohn, sponsors for the new series of two reel comedies entitled the "Hall Room Boys," stated this week that the pictures had been booked for the entire Loew Circuit in New York and Brooklyn. The booking arrangements were consummated by H. A. Chadwick, who controls the series of eight two reel comedies for New York State. The films have been evolved from the cartoons of H. A. MacGill, and the characters of Percie and Ferdie are being interpreted by Flanagan and Edwards, well known for their vaudeville appearances in "On and Off."

"Black Gate" Set for Release

Earle Williams has finished his new Vitagraph feature, a play with Japanese atmosphere as yet without a title, and with "The Black Gate," a mystery play by Hilliard Booth, now has two pictures awaiting release by Vitagraph.

Katherine MacDonald's First

Katherine MacDonald's Offering "The Thunderbolt" Announced as her First Production for First National

THE initial photoplay starring Katherine MacDonald, which will be released through the exchanges of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, has been titled "The Thunderbolt," and will be shown at the leading first run theatres throughout the country, commencing the third week in October.

The production was directed by Colin Campbell, who also staged "The Spoilers," "The Still Alarm" and several other notable screen successes, and employs a cast of exceptional strength. Thomas Meighan, whose work in "The Miracle Man" has received the highest praise from the public and critics everywhere, plays the leading role opposite Miss MacDonald. Spottiswoode Aitken, one of the best known character actors of the legitimate as well as on the screen, plays an important part in "The Thunderbolt." Forest Stanley, also well known on the speaking stage as well as in the silent drama, plays a mild heavy, while Adda Gleason and Master Breezy Reeves, the clever child actor, complete the cast.

Unusual punch and dramatic power are said to feature the story of "The Thunderbolt." It is the story of pre-natal influence, a marriage consummated under possibly the most peculiar circumstances ever recorded, a husband who married his wife to avenge the death of his father at the hands of a member of her family, and the final working out of what seems an inextricable tangle by a series of exceedingly tense situations.

In the opening scenes of the production there are shown what are said to be the most remarkable storm and lightning scenes ever shown on the screen. Bolts of lightning are seen to strike a tree, and it crumbles visibly. Another bolt is seen to strike the side of a house, and the very bricks and masonry fall to ruins, while the characters are in the same room. Technically, "The Thunderbolt" is said to set a new mark for realism and effects that have never before been satisfactorily shown on the screen.

The settings of the picture are also said to be exceedingly lavish, furnishing a background entirely befitting the remarkable beauty of the star. Miss MacDonald is declared to have exceeded by far any of her previous efforts in this production, and it is prophesied that her work in it will do a great deal to enhance her already enviable reputation as a really big star with the motion picture theatre patrons.

Banner Week For Realart Firm

New Features Completed; Exploitation Campaign Under Way; Bookings Heavy

LAST week is described to have been a banner week for Realart Picture Corporation.

"Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, was reviewed and announced as the first release of the new corporation.

"Anne of Green Gables," a Mary Miles Minter picture, was completed and reported to President Arthur S. Kane as not only the best production Miss Minter has made but that it is especially notable for persistent action and fine photography.

"The Girl in the Swing," Realart's big electric sign at Times Square, was lighted for the first time and brought a flood of compliments to President Kane.

Announcement was made by the contractor that Realart's permanent offices, on the fourth floor of the Winfield Building, Fifth Avenue at Fortieth Street, will be ready for occupancy by November 1.

The largest number of signed contracts for Realart productions in any week was reported, it is said, by Lewis W. Kniskern, supervisor of contracts.

Henry E. Wilkinson, manager of the Realart branch at Buffalo, visited General Manager John S. Woody, bringing reports of big business in his territory.

The only bitterness in Realart's cup of joy for the week was the inability, because of the pressmen's strike, to publish its color inserts in the trade magazines.

Coincident with the release of the first Realart production there will come the opening of a campaign of special exploitation, it is said, to be conducted by prominent men of the industry and newspaper men. It is planned that these specialists will aid theatre men who have booked Realart films in putting on the pictures and securing publicity.

H. B. Warner to Appear Shortly as a Light-Comedy Artist

H. B. Warner is putting the finishing touches on the fifth of the series of superior picture produced for Robertson-Cole and which will be released through their exchanges in November. Previous stories in which this star has appeared before the camera have had for their setting the romantic background of the Orient and the melodrama fashioned from the conflict of sex and strong wills.

The news now comes that he will essay a role with light comedy touches as the central figure in a purely American comedy-drama, which promises to give him free play to exploit his art as a comedian and player of intensely dramatic and absorbing episodes.

The title, "A Fugitive from Matrimony," of this latest screen story, hints of sweeping movement and topical interest, and is a society drama, having for its locale a fashionable colony on the Hudson.

New Select Head in Chicago

General Manager Sam E. Morris announces the appointment of Ben W. Beadell as manager of Select Pictures Corporation's Chicago exchange, following the resignation of former manager Fred C. Aiken.

REALART'S BOW

REALART announces that its first release will be an Allan Dwan production "Soldiers of Fortune."

Officials of the company are as one in predicting this subject will prove a knockout and give an idea of the pretentiousness of the productions which will in future be released under the Realart banner. Norman Kerry, Ward Crane, Frank Wally, Fred Kohler and Philo McCullough, Wallace Beery and Anna Q. Nillson are a few of the well known players in the all star cast.

And by way of emphasizing his faith in the value of the production, President Kane has announced materially larger exploitation plans than had first been completed. "Realart will back 'Soldiers of Fortune' to the limit," he declares.

Lesser to Finance Producers to Get Better Films

Los Angeles must already be well aware of the presence of Sol Lesser, as since his departure several weeks ago the wires have been steadily humming to the New York offices with reference to the closing of many important deals.

Word has just been received here that Mr. Lesser will finance producers in order to obtain better pictures for his various exchanges throughout the country. Before leaving New York Mr. Lesser expanded his views on the project.

"I am tired of waiting for a really big picture which can be bought on a national state-right basis. The scarcity of pictures is so great that a producer besides establishing an immediate release on his product, can in many cases get an advance on the production. Naturally under these circumstances he cannot be expected to turn over his film on a state-right sale."

Mr. Lesser has promised to announce very shortly the method of distribution he will use on the George Beban production, to which he bought the world rights. This picture is now in the process of completion in California and at present untitled.

Sol Lesser Buys World Rights to New Beban Production

A wire was received from Los Angeles at the New York Office of Sol Lesser to the effect that Mr. Lesser has purchased the world rights for the next George Beban production, now in process of completion in California, and up to the present time untitled. Plans for distribution will be announced soon.

Branton in New York

Among the influx of Mid Northwest visitors in New York recently was G. Ralph Branton, of Amusements, a Minneapolis publication.

Mr. Branton declares that the motion picture business in his territory was never so good as it is at present and reports a wonderful growth in the district.

Biggest Organ Placed In Biggest Theatre

The Estey Organ Company puts up its largest organ in the Capitol Theatre amidst the confusion of bustling workmen and rehearsing chorus girls

THE huge cavern that will be called the auditorium of the Capitol Theatre may some day resemble that, but the morning we saw it, it looked like somebody's backyard along house-cleaning time. And this, we scurry to add, because the management, anxious to satisfy the tiptoed public and stick a pin in the elusive opening date, is trying to do everything at once — erect the physical building, set in a few million seats, paint it all pretty-like, stick up a real pipe-organ — and rehearse the big opening show that is going to stun the world, take it from the press agent!

We really came to see what the biggest theatre pipe-organ in the world looks like — but first we saw — and heard —

Confusion? Pandemonium.

We sat dumb from admiration, blind from excitement, deaf from noise. Crashes of blows on steel, the same on brick, ditto on wood. Shouts — not polite requests, but real he-man shouts — of foremen to their busy workmen. Streams of somebodies ply up and down the planks that make a runway from auditorium to stage, jostle other somebodies off and outshout each other. Workmen swing long planks across their shoulders, make their way swiftly through the busybodies — when a single swerve of said planks would precipitate a whizzing Sennett comedy. Man at piano tries to make his tempo heard above the uproar — two rows of chorus girls learn new steps from Ned Wayburn — he stands four feet away posed like a football coach and yells his orders through cupped hands. White-clad workmen carry hods of caramel paste, (or whatever it is they paste walls together with) stumble among the rows of girls and earn a few Wayburn orders for themselves. Huge gobs of brilliant white light thrown on the chorus reveal a pepper-hash of color — practice clothes of every hue and kind — bathing suit and gingham, evening gowns and sables — all in the hard morning light. Bursts of blinding light and puffs of smoke — flashlights are snapped.

White-clad workmen high upon the scaffolding at the right, apply little leaves of silver, inch by inch, to the huge-fluted columns — while the columns to the left, gilded and naked, await their clothing of the shining metal. Below in the pit, stands the case containing the organ console. Behind that, acres of floor space are spiked with chair-supports like slim trees in a field — seats piled hill-high, waiting. Over all, a cloud of dust from cement and brick and wood, and chilling drafts of air that draw a shiver from even the bathing girl. And the camera-man, hardened to all such, grinds calmly on — and in — these scenes that for once in his career are not set and rehearsed but are a real picture of confusion at its height — in this attempt to complete the biggest theatre in the world and its opening show at the same time.

The first time, perhaps, that a pipe organ was ever set up to piano music! The biggest theatre naturally must install the biggest theatre organ in the world, so this Estey organ has been arriving for weeks in instalments of car-load lots. Now, the console stands in the pit, still encased, awaiting its release and the sensitive fingers of the celebrated organist engaged to bring forth its wonders.

They were unpacking bellows when we arrived, so we persuaded them to swing up some pipes to make a more interesting picture — and so we could see how they ever got 'em way up there anyhow. Down one side of the theatre, long, narrow boxes are piled — long as the caskets of giants. Top ones are torn open and the organ pipes lifted — so slowly and so carefully. Strong ropes and pulleys are attached. A man places himself at each crosspiece of the scaffolding that reaches from the floor to the top of the theatre, in front of the boxes. Slowly, each pipe is swung into the air and steadied by each man as it passes him. It reaches the top. It is placed in the space indicated for it . . . and

Cannibal Islands in New Series

Ten One-Reelers are Scheduled for Early November Release by Robertson–Cole

ROBERTSON-COLE COMPANY announces the release of "On the Borderland of Civilization," a series of ten single-reel adventure productions, photographed by Martin Johnson among the Cannibal Islands of the South Seas.

The ten pictures will be released at the rate of one every two weeks, the first, "Tulagi" being scheduled for issue early in November.

A feature of the exploitation campaign is that co-incident with the release of the pictures, Martin Johnson's own story of his travels in the South Sea Islands will start serially in newspapers throughout the country. Two hundred and eighteen daily newspapers throughout the country are said to have contracted for the story, and it will appear in weekly installments.

The thought and a motive which characterizes the ten reels is well suggested by the title of the series. The effort has been made to bring to the screen living-pictures of a people of whom little is known and whose very existence is veiled from the civilized world by a mysterious haze, the customs, the habits, the strange conditions under which they live.

Besides the interest that is fostered by their novelty, the films bring a message to our civilization which as yet has had its only answer in the missions which stand out like white spots in a great black land. Educators and churchmen everywhere will be interested in this opportunity of bringing to the public in picture, things which considerable study would not impress nearly as well. The activities of the missions of all denominations among the Cannibals tell their own story of the light that Christianity is bringing to these dark places. And it is hoped that the people who have made them possible will see their worth more clearly than ever.

Much effort is said to have been made to produce material which will help the exhibitor exploit these novel productions in addition to the press campaign already described.

Exhibitor Interest in New Fox

"Should a Husband Forgive" said to be Attracting Attention all Over the Country

FOLLOWING in scheduled order the three big special screen productions by William Fox, "Checkers," Evangeline" and "Kathleen Mavourneen," the fourth mammoth Fox special, "Should a Husband Forgive?" promises, according to the reports issued from the home office of Fox Film Corporations to surpass even the tremendous popularity of "Checkers"—judging from the bulk of booking applications arriving in advance of the release.

"Should a Husband Forgive?" branded as the Fox 1920 cinemelodramatic sensation, according to announcement offers to the followers of motion picture classics a pulsating, throbbing pictureization of the problem of the ages reduced to terms of modern life and developed in a multiple reel feature which is heralded as the most magnificent screen attraction of a decade.

Approximately every state in the Union is already represented in the contracts recorded by Fox on this feature, beginning with many New York theatres including houses in the Borough of Brooklyn.

In Brooklyn, the Mardi Gras Theatre has closed for three days, the Sunset for three days, and the Happy Hour for three days.

New Jersey has the picture in Newark at the New Amsterdam for three days, and for a similar period at the Bayonne Opera House and at the Strand in New Brunswick.

Up through New York State, where "Checkers" particularly has created a positive sensation of the season, the theatre men have flocked for "Should a Husband Forgive?" at big prices, taking the picture without question. The Broadway in Saratoga Springs, has closed for it, as has the Hippodrome at Carthage, Canandaigua has it at the Fisher Theatre, and many others are arranging dates to allow their playing of the attraction soon after its release.

At the Steinway Theatre, in Astoria, L. I., where "Checkers," "Evangeline" and "Kathleeen" drew packed houses for the entire length of their runs, this forthcoming Fox special has been booked for a run with the possibility of a return date.

The Southern territory is represented already by exceptional time bookings in Lexington, Kentucky, at the Ada Meade Theatre; in Memphis, Tenn., at the Daisy Theatre; in Charlotte, N. C., at the Broadway; in Newport News, Va., at the Palace.

In each case where exhibitors have reaped the harvest from the big Fox specials already released, "Should a Husband Forgive?" goes in as a matter of course,—as in the case of the entire Ohio territory. Nothing thus far this season has hit Ohio as "Checkers" has done; it is said and with the opening of the campaign on "Should a Husband Forgive?" in Ohio, business was found waiting for the Fox branch managers.

George Byrnes Made Director of Non-Theatrical Department

Following the inauguration of a special drive to develop business along the lines controlled by the Non-Theatrical Department of the Educational Film Corporation of America, Mr. George Byrnes has been appointed as the director of this department. Coincident with this announcement, comes the notice that it is the intention of the company to maintain an educational department in every exchange for the purpose of exploiting and exhibiting those short subjects which have been produced with this eventual market in view.

other pipes are swung to stand, erect and straight, beside it. Thousands of them. Pipes of zinc, pipes of tin, pipes of wood, of whichever metal and timber their use requires. Tiny pipes—some as small as a lead pencil. Huge pipes, that would contain 135,000 of the little fellows. On each side of the first boxes, this host of organ pipes is placed. And between them spanning the width of the huge theatre, is the greatest sounding-board that any theatre organ has ever owned—a sounding-board of a hundred feet! The music that shall pour down through its delicate grillwork will fill the immense auditorium with a golden flood of music that no theatre organ has ever produced.

This is the largest theatre organ ever made by the Estey Organ Company. It is an achievement in the musical world, in the development of the theatre, in the motion picture industry.

But here were strikers! Real, live ones! Of course, we'd read about them, and stepped out of the way of two or three in the wholesale district, but we'd never beheld a real live striker who yelled while he struck. Here he was. And of all people, the contractor himself! Poor fellow—the opening date is on his mind too—the theatre must be finished whether Mr. Wayburn has any show ready to exhibit or not—a promise is a promise—his word and reputation, etc. Breathless, he stops a minute—and his loyal workmen, anticipating his wish, pick Ned Wayburn bodily and carry him on their shoulders in a triumphal (?) exit from the stage—his show can't appear till the theatre is finished—so why not finish the theatre?

But we have a hankering to hear that pipe-organ, and so for once we sympathize with the strikers—we're already mentally standing in line on the opening night waiting to ooze into a seat well back of that sounding-board.—Anne Hirst Curry.

"Blind Husbands" at Exchanges, Available for Screening

Universal announces that its production, entitled "Blind Husbands," is now at its various local exchanges where it is available for private showing. The picture has already received considerable advertising, and exchanges in different parts of the country have been receiving a great number of telegrams and other communications, according to the reports received, containing inquiries about this new Universal feature, and desiring to know when it would be available for release.

The picture which was directed by Eric Stroheim is expected to be a record breaker by the Universal officials. The advertising and publicity campaigns on "Blind Husbands" are well under way. The picture has been announced, it is claimed, in all the leading publications throughout the country, and according to reports, no star or director has ever received so much publicity in so short a time as has Eric Stroheim, Universal's new director.

"Fatal Fortune" Serial Reported Big Drawing Card

The Helen Holmes Serial, "The Fatal Fortune," has hit the trail and according to reports of enthusiastic exhibitors, from all parts of the country, the S.R.O. sign is very much in evidence whenever an episode of "Fatal Fortune" is shown.

After an absence of two years, the fearless Miss Holmes returns to the screen, being featured in a story that is said to have the elements of mystery, romance and adventure.

An idea of the popularity of Helen Holmes, may be judged by a letter from C. R. Beachman, manager of the First National Exchange of Atlanta, Ga., which state she is a box office asset everywhere.

Dorothy Philips in "Ambition" Shows Seven Phases of Life

Like Shakespeare's seven ages, Dorothy Phillips appears in seven distinct phases of life in her new feature, "Ambition," now being produced by Universal under Allen Holubar's direction.

At the opening of the story Miss Phillips appears as a small-town school girl of fourteen. She is next seen as a girl of sixteen who possesses a promising voice and is taking lessons from the village music teacher. Three years later finds her in Italy, studying with one of the masters and hoping for an operatic career, which she eventually realizes as the soprano of a Chinese grand opera, "Hong Mong Foo," in the Metropolitan Opera House.

Walk Leaves Universal Joining Robertson-Cole

Don Walk who has for some time been Director of Publicity for the Educational and Industrial Department of Universal, has severed his connection with that concern and joined the Exploitation Bureau of Robertson-Cole.

Cardinals See "The Confession"

Cardinals Mercier and Gibbons on Witnessing an Exhibition of Film Express Approval

A SHORT time ago at the invitation of the National Film Corporation of America, extended through Joe Brandt, the general representative, Cardinals Mercier of Belgium and Gibbons of America reviewed a motion-picture film and offered its producers their hearty approval, it is said.

The film was "The Confession," in which Henry B. Walthall, is starred. Both primates thoroughly enjoyed the production, and according to reports have offered its producers their approval in writing. The film deals with a great religious theme, in a delicate and straightforward manner. The handling of the theme and the fine scenic effects throughout the production drew considerable praise from the two churchmen, it is asserted.

"The Confession," sales and exploitation for which is being handled by George H. Davis, of San Francisco, deals with a religious theme that also contains unusual moral significance. So much did its producers think of the play as a great moral force, that advantage was taken of the presence in this country of the heroic Belgian primate, Mercier; and with the American Cardinal Gibbons, he was asked to review the picture.

One of the prized possessions of Hal Reid, author of the story, is an autographed portrait of Cardinal Gibbons, and a letter from Cardinal Mercier. On the margin of his portrait Cardinal Gibbons inscribed: "This is the first time I have ever offered my approval of a work of this kind."

Cardinal Mercier's statement is an enthusiastic approval of the picture, and the masterful way in which its theme had been presented.

"The Confession" will be given its New York premier showing within a few weeks.

"Should Woman Tell?" Started

Metro Puts Melodramatic Subject Into Production With Cast Headed by Alice Lake

SCREEN Classics, Inc., has begun production of "Should A Woman Tell?" a big melodramatic special and another of the "fewer and better" pictures. Alice Lake, Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier are featured at the head of an all-star cast and work is now well under way at the company's studios in Hollywood, Cal. These facts became known from an announcement this week by Metro Pictures Corporation, which controls the exclusive rights of distribution of Screen Classics, Inc., productions.

The story of the picture deals with the struggle in a girl's soul upon reaching the point of deciding whether to reveal her past to the man she loves and so risk losing him; or to remain silent, and takes no chances on trying his love too far. Both the story and continuity of "Should A Woman Tell?" are by Finis Fox, of the Screen Classics, Inc., scenario staff. John E. Ince is directing the production, with Sol Polito at the camera.

Special art effects for the setting of the story, which takes place for the most part in a fishing village on the rock-bound New England coast, have been designed and executed by Amos Myers. The entire production is being made under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger, Director General of Screen Classics, Inc.

Alice Lake's highly commendable work as leading woman for Bert Lytell in the Screen Classics, Inc., special, "Lombardi, Ltd.," in which she was seen as Norah Blake; and in "Blackie's Redemption" and in "The Lion's Den," Metro all-star series productions, undoubtedly led to her being chosen for the principal feminine role in "Should A Woman Tell?"

Big Concern Expands Interests

Cibrario and Company at Same Time Change Name to Transatlantic Film Company of America

CIBRARIO and Company, importers and exporters of films, have issued an interesting announcement to the effect that in the future the Film Department of this company will be known as the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc. The policy of this company is to buy and sell pictures for the entire world.

At present, extensive plans are being laid out by Mr. Louis Roach, the president of this new organization. Heretofore Cibrario and Company have devoted their time in the exploitation of American films on the European market. The new policy, however, extends to the American market not only the best output in this country but of productions of merit regardless where they are made. Mr. Roach steps into the distributing organization fresh with new ideas, and plans to accomplish something that was never before attempted by any American distributor. Mr. Roach is not in a position to say definitely what his plans are but assures the industry of periodical announcements so as to keep those interested fully informed, it is said.

The offices of the Transatlantic Film Company of America, which are located at 729 Seventh Avenue present a busy scene, as the duties of organizing an efficient, descriptive organization are by no means a simple matter.

For the past few weeks the purchasing staff of the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., has been kept busy reviewing pictures which it intends shortly to offer. At present great efforts are being made to secure the finest productions which the independent market has to offer.

C. Y. Harrison, formerly associated with successful motion picture enterprises has been appointed American sales manager. His duties will be to buy and sell pictures for American consumption.

The Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., announces a whirlwind campaign commencing November 1st. It is declared it will be to the advantage of exhibitors and State Right buyers, independent exchangemen and all people interested in efficient and effective distribution of first rate pictures to watch the future announcements of this newly organized company.

Metro Head on Inspection Tour

Richard Rowland Pays a Visit to Western Coast to Inspect New Studios in Hollywood

PLANNING, among other things, a complete inspection of the new million dollar Metro studios in Hollywood, Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, left New York last week for California. He expected to remain on the west coast for about a month, inclusive of the ten days required to make the long rail journey both ways. As a traveling companion Mr. Rowland had J. Frank Brockliss, the English motion picture magnate.

Something like two weeks prior to Mr. Rowland's departure for the west he was preceded by W. E. Atkinson, Metro's general manager. The latter has now completed his brief visit to the Metro plant and is en route for New York. Mr. Rowland expected to meet him coming east, in Chicago, where Mr. Rowland, headed west, will make a stop-off of a day or so.

Viola Dana's favorite recreation is eating ice cream cones. Her latest picture is "Please Get Married," under the banner of Screen Classics, Inc.

In addition to his inspection of the new Metro studios, where the big Screen Classics, Inc., "fewer and better" pictures are made Mr. Rowland will confer with Maxwell Karger, Director General in charge of all production at the huge modern plant, with a view to increasing further scope of the company's producing activities.

Since Mr. Rowland's last visit to the studios eight or nine months ago, a number of enlargements and improvements have been made at the plant, and the Metro president is particularly anxious to see what has been done. Among the additions to the big establishment are a spacious dark stage, two huge open stages for daylight shooting and a tripling of the lighting equipment, which necessitated the construction of a reinforced concrete power-house with large dynamos and electrical transformers.

"Sahara" Scores in Long Awaited Baltimore Presentation

Baltimore had its first view of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "Sahara," at the Parkway, and to judge by the outpouring of Oriole City fans the W. W. Hodkinson release lived up to all the praises sung about it by Managing Director Bernard Depkin, Jr., who booked it early in the summer following its successful presentation at Tom Moore's Rialto, Washington.

French Outlook Good, But Yankee Methods Needed — Capellani

Albert Capellani has returned from France and will begin work at once on a series of pictures, starring Marjorie Rambeau which will be released by Pathe as specials. The first, it is expected, will be a great emotional play, which is reputed to have had a phenomenal success on both sides of the ocean.

Mr. Capellani declares that while conditions in France are not very good they are improving. The picture companies there realize that it is impossible to make pictures without American methods.

Mr. Capellani said: "I visited nearly all the studios while I was in France, and I found they lacked such important equipment as electricity, carpenter shops, properties and men to take charge of these various departments.

Continuing, Mr. Capellani added: "Censorship has just been organized in France two months ago. By the French plan, a picture will be censored in the manuscript so that after thousands of dollars have been spent on a scene it will not be necessary to cut out hundreds of feet of film as happens here with frequency.

"French motion pictures will have a big field now. They have the Russian market, the German market and all other markets which were shut out by the war. That will enable the French directors to invest more money in their pictures and make better ones."

Early Christie Release Titled "Mary's Nightmare"

Billie Rhodes, with Cullen Landis, is featured in a Christie Comedy which is scheduled by the Christie Company for early release. The picture, entitled "Mary's Nightmare," which was produced under the direction of Scott Sidney, has never before been shown and although Billie Rhodes has for some time not been connected with the Christie Company, the picture is in no sense a re-issue. It is declared to be one of the best one-reel subjects in which Billie Rhodes appeared and is typical of the comedies in which Billie Rhodes was first presented on the screen.

Playing in support of her in "Mary's Nightmare" is Cullen Landis who has recently been playing leads with Mabel Normand and Madge Kennedy of Goldwyn.

"Infatuation" Starring Gaby Deslys Again in Demand

Following the national publicity accorded Gaby Deslys upon her recent return to the United States, there has been created a renewed demand, it is said, for "Infatuation," the Pathe special in which she was starred.

"Infatuation" is probably the best work of director Louis Mercanton, who produced "Mothers of France" and "Queen Elizabeth" with Sarah Bernhardt. The story is from the work of Marcel L'Herbier and the production is by the Eclipse Film Company.

Pathe announces that it is prepared to furnish a full line of publicity aids on "Infatuation," which include some artistic posters and lobby displays.

NATIONAL FILM HEAD

HARRY M. RUBEY, who has been elected to succeed the late "Smiling Billy" Parsons as president of the National Film Corporation, arrived in New York Friday, October 17th, to get in touch with matters of business through the New York office of the concern. Mr. Rubey plans to stay in New York several days, during which time he will assist in plans for the premiere of "The Confession," featuring Henry Walthall, a production of his company, and for which George H. Davis, San Francisco, is supervising sales and exploitation.

Mr. Rubey has been in charge of affairs for the National on the coast, and reports that Western film producers are watching with interest the rapid development of that company.

National Film Announces the Stage Hit, "The Confession"

"The Confession" from the famous stage-play of the same name is the latest production of the National Film Corporation. Originality of plot is the outstanding feature of the work. A French Canadian kills the supposed betrayer of his sister and confesses the crime to a priest. The man, falsely accused of the crime and sentenced to be hung, turns out to be the brother of the priest. Despite the impending fate hanging over his brother's head, the priest maintains silence rather than violate the sanctity of the confessional seal.

Henry Walthall in the role of Father Bartlett is given an opportunity for some of the most intense emotional acting of his career, it is said. The rest of the cast, including Francis McDonald in the part of the accused brother, have been, according to reports, carefully selected.

Horace Judge Transfers His Allegiance to Universal

Horace Judge, who directed the advertising and publicity for United Picture Teatres the past year, has left that organization for an appointment on the advertising staff of Universal. Mr. Judge, who came to United following an extended experience as manager of the Charles Dillingham, Klaw & Erlanger and George C. Tyler and other companies for whom he handled the tours of stars such as Frank Daniels, Fritzi Scheff, Elsie Janis, Alexandra Carlisle and George Arliss among others, turned out some notable "insert" and other advertising for United and was notably successful in the general publicity work.

Rivoli Again Presents "Blue Bird" at Children's Show

"The Blue Bird", Maurice Tourneur's production was again screened at the children's performance at the Rivoli theatre. The presentation was made possible through the cooperation of Adolph Zukor who is interested in this series of performances.

United Artists Stand on Policy

Hiram Abrams on Trip Finds Evidence of Record Season; Reaffirms Production and Distribution Plans

ON his return from a series of conferences on production matters, held in California by the artists and officials of United Artists Corporation some days ago, Hiram Abrams visited a number of the company's Distributing Depots, and also had several of his field Sales Managers in New York for a business meeting.

Mr. Abrams said that a great many theatre men had met him while on his trip and the outlook for business during the coming seasons was splendid. The theatres are looking for months of capacity houses, and the necessity for long runs on big productions was thoroughly appreciated and provided for in the calculations of the exhibitors.

"Our production plans," said Mr. Abrams, "are all set, enabling us to know just how we can contribute to the big business that the theatres of the country are going to handle during the coming Fall and Winter. And with our producing arrangements so well in hand, and with our artists working as never before in order to co-operate with the theatre men, I was glad to find that our distributing machinery is running like any well-cared for engine should run.

"It is perhaps significant, as an indication of the solidity on which our distributing plans were originally laid out, to know that not in a single particular have we found it necessary, through exhibitor demand, to alter or shift our policies. When we laid our plans and policies at the outset, they were the result of many months of investigation seeking to determine just what changes in then-existing methods would bring about the most equitable and harmonious relations between producers and exhibitors.

"We have now put two big productions on the market under our original plans, the Fairbanks picture, "His Majesty, the American" and Mr. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms." The results, viewed from both the exhibitors and the producer's standpoint, have been thoroughly satisfied, and we shall continue as we have begun.

"It is perhaps unusual in this business of constant shifts and changes, to find an organization that is thoroughly satisfied, honestly satisfied, with the progress of its operation. But to this we must plead guilty. We are satisfied that we are dealing fairly with our exhibitors, and in return they are dealing fairly with us. And the result, both ways, is profitable. That is what the theatres and the producers are in business for.

"We shall continue to rent our productions on a single-picture basis only, so that theatre men may handle each picture individually, on its own merits, and absolutely without bearing on any other production. And we shall continue to deal exclusively with individual theatres. No arrangements whatsoever will be made with booking agencies, circuits or distributing organizations that will in even the remotest way, take the control of our productions out of the hands of either this organization or the theatres that book our pictures. At all times, each individual theatre can feel that its dealings on our productions will be free and unhindered by any consideration outside of that particular theatre's problems.

Motion-Picture Is Stage's Peer

MR. BRITON BUSCH, who for the last five years has been Treasurer of the World Film Corporation, on October 1st assumed the duties of General Manager of the organization. He has given to the motion picture business considerable study and believes that the future of the industry has yet to reach its zenith. In describing the present day conditions and the chances for improvement, Mr. Busch spoke of the way in which the public filled the various picture-houses during the recent stage actors' strike and of the very favorable returns that were made to exhibitors during that period of dramatic inactivity. Mr. Busch said, speaking of the strike:

"While all this was going on the picture houses offered entertainment to the thousands who could not get into the so-called legitimate theatres. The motion picture theatres thrived and prospered. But bigger still than the profits of the motion picture emporiums was the effect on the industry of the halt in the theatrical business as it proved that pictures gave satisfaction to thousands whose visits to the 'movies' were few and infrequent. These people will come again and often. It demonstrated that motion picture is a national institution that will be as permanent as our country itself.

"The picture manager need no longer be apologetic in stating his calling. He has a place in the sun as luminous and important as any Erlanger or Shubert. The store show methods are gone. They belong to the dust covered and archaic ideas of business getting of the past. A new era has arrived. From now on the alert and creative manager will reap the reward that goes to those who lead instead of to those who follow."

John J. Iris Made Sales Manager for Entire New York State

The sales and distribution of the products of the Educational Film Corporation of America for the entire State of New York has been intrusted to John J. Iris, who hitherto has been acting as sales-manager for New York City. S. B. Brunecke will be Mr. Iris's first assistant.

The enormous sign, said to be the biggest of its kind, which attracts attention to the splendid Rothacker plant in Chicago.

Hearst Cartoons In Pictographs

Goldwyn–Bray Pictures Secure the Comedy Characters of Some Noted Comic Artists

JUDGE RUMHAUSER, Happy Hooligan, Krazy Kat, Jerry on the Job, the Shennanigan Kids, all famous characters that appear in the Hearst newspapers throughout the country, are moving to the Bray Studios to ally themselves with J. R. Bray's comedy creations. Through a deal consummated last week between Bray Pictures Corporation and the International Film Co., the screen versions of the popular newspaper personalities in the Hearst family will hereafter reach the public via Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs and other Bray releases, which are handled by the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation. This alliance gives Goldwyn a monopoly of the most widely known comedy cartoon creations in the country.

The cartoons made at the Bray Studios and those of the International Film Service, the cartoon department of which is headed by George Gregory LaCava, are without question the most popular of all the funny little black and white people who come to life on the screens of motion picture theatres. Millions of people now follow the antics of these interesting products of the brains of ingenious comic artists. When it was first attempted to give animation to the pen and ink drawings, the motion of the figures was jerky and uneven; but hundreds of experiments conducted in the Bray Studios have resulted in a process that gives absolute smoothness and life-likeness to the odd little characters.

The Bray Corporation will continue to make all of its series of cartoons which for several years have delighted the picture-going public. These include the humorous adventures of Colonel Heeza Liar, Dud and Us Fellers, and the Out of the Inkwell creations by Max Fleischer.

Not content with having assembled the most popular of comedy characters, Mr. Bray, in accord with his policy of expansion following the alliance with Goldwyn, is perfecting the world's first cartoon in color. This will resemble the colored supplement of a Sunday newspaper, except, of course, it will have the advantage of giving animation to the figures. Another novelty already a part of the Goldwyn-Bray Pictograph, is the animated fantasy, a highly imaginative creation that combines romance and humor.

"The Sporting Duchess" on Way

Famous Drury Lane Play, Alice Joyce in the Lead, Begun at Vitagraph Studio

ALICE JOYCE began active work this week on "The Sporting Duchess," the English melodrama with race track atmosphere, which is to be her next Vitagraph special production. This famous Drury Lane spectacle, which was such a success in London, Canada and the United States will form one of the twelve features based on famous stage plays which Vitagraph will produce as a series. Those already announced include "The Fortune Hunter," in which Earle Williams will play the role created by John Barrymore; "The Climbers," by Clyde Fitch, with Corinne Griffith in the role made famous by Amelia Bingham; "The Great Divide," "The Great Ruby," another Drury Lane spectacle, in which Rose Coghlan starred in this country, and several others equally as famous.

"The Sporting Duchess" as a play is sporting without being sporty. The same distinction also applies to the character of Muriel, Duchess of Densborough, the leading role, which will be played by Miss Joyce. The big scene, of course, is the running of the Derby, and here Vitagraph promises to stage one of the most realistic races ever shown on the screen. All the scenes are laid in London's aristocratic circles, and it follows naturally that there is a splendid display of gowns.

Not alone does the famous melodrama require palatial halls, ball rooms, hunt rooms, stables, race tracks, shooting traps, and city and town houses with extensive grounds, but, it is said, there is an unusually large cast. Actually hundreds of extra people will be required according to reports, in the racing, court room and other scenes, and besides there will be a lengthy cast of principles. "The Sporting Duchess" will be staged by George Terwilliger.

Art of Suggestion Exemplified in "The Hellion," American Film

In a statement just issued in connection with the production of "The Hellion," President S. S. Hutchinson, of the American Film Company, Inc., has undertaken to discuss the art of suggestion as it is related to the turning out of a motion-picture production.

"Rightly employed," says Mr. Hutchinson, "the art of suggestion can create a subtle atmosphere for a picture which makes itself an inherent part of the production as a whole. In the case of an individual scene or setting, suggestion may be used to paint impressions on the spectator's mind that are not actually in the photograph."

As an illustration of his point, Mr. Hutchinson points out the cafe scene of "The Hellion" which is a brilliant dive, containing much of the action in the early part of the picture. You see the inhabitues of the dive, for instance, fingering wine glasses and toying with cigarettes; yet neither drinking nor smoking on the part of the women is actually recorded. Swinging doors lead from the big dance-hall into a bar; yet, practically speaking, the bar is out of the scene. You feel it is there, but it is the art of suggestion that has conveyed that impression to you."

Margarita Fisher, as "Mazie Del Mar," is supported by a cast that does uniformly strong work. George Periolat, as Signor Enrico, the "Hellion" of the title, has been compared in his finished portrayal of the part of the hypnotist to Wilton Lackaye, the Svengali of "Trilby." Emory Johnson is Miss Fisher's leading man. Other prominent members of the cast are George Periolat, Henry Barrows, Lillian Langdon, Charles Spere, Frank Clark and "Bull" Montana.

Cohen Finishes Two Stories for Production by Goldwyn

Octavus Roy Cohen has completed his first two stories for Goldwyn. They are both mystery melodramas, and the author is waiting for the completion of a number of productions before his first story is begun. While both stories are completed, only one continuity has been finished. The other is in the hands of the Goldwyn scenario staff, and will be ready soon. The first story by this nationally known writer will be started within two weeks. Goldwyn's location man, Ray Moore, has already arranged for several unusual exteriors.

Dorothy Dalton Deserts Screen for Stage Temporarily

Dorothy Dalton, Thomas H. Ince's star in Paramount-Artcraft pictures, will play the principal role in Comstock & Gest's spectacular production, "Aphrodite," which opens at the Century Theatre, New York, the latter part of November.

Lost Shipment Causes Fox to Make Delivery by Plane

The Chicago exchange of the Fox Film Corporation delivered a copy of the film, "The Spendid Sun", starring Madlaine Traverse, to the Rialto Theatre in Champaign, Illinois, under unusual conditions, according to reports received from that company.

The reported incident took place as a result of the failure of a consigned print to reach the theatre on time. No train facilities could be used to convey a new print to Champaign from Chicago in time for the performance at which the feature was scheduled to be shown, and it was found necessary, according to the reports received about the incident, to resort to the assistance of the Shelby Air Service at Shelbyville, Ill., in the emergency.

An airplane was dispatched to Chicago with Lieut. Eugene Cecil in the driving seat. Meanwhile the Fox plant in the big city, aware of the arrangement that had been effected hastily prepared a new print of the feature for delivery and hurried it by automobile to the point prearranged for the landing of the plane. The return trip to Champaign is reported to have been made in about an hour and a half.

Tyrad Pictures Have Rights to Bernhardt Feature

Madame Sarah Bernhardt presents Madame Yorska and W. Lawson Butt in her own version of Mme. Bernhardt's "It Happened In Paris." This feature is in five reels, and was made in the Brunton studios in Hollywood, directed by Jack Cunningham under the personal supervision of Mme. Bernhardt. M. Matzene officiated at the camera. World rights are obtainable through Tyrad Pictures, Inc., No. 729 Seventh avenue, New York. Matthias Radin, president and general manager of Tyrad, announces also a complete line of paper on this photoplay.

The one and only Will Rogers, and Pauline Frederick, both Goldwyn stars, staging a "goodbye" for the benefit of the camera at the Culver City studio.

Sid Chaplin Finds Studio Home

Takes Over Unit of Jasper Studios; Seeking Leading Woman for First Paramount–Artcraft Comedy

SIDNEY Chaplin, producer and star of the Famous-Players Lasky Corporation, who recently returned from abroad after having spent eight weeks in Paris filming scenes for his first Paramount-Artcraft picture, resumed work on his production, last week.

The first unit of the Jasper Hollywood studios, Santa Monica Boulevard, has been taken over by Mr. Chaplin and this will be the future home of the company.

Simultaneously with the renewal of his activities before the camera here, the star received the thirty thousand feet of material gathered in France for his picture, this having been turned over by the customs authorities who will inspect the films as soon as it is printed.

The task of finding a leading woman of the type called for in his story has been without result, despite the fact that more than two hundred screen actresses have been interviewed by the star during the past ten days. Although several young women have measured up close to the requirements Mr. Chaplin is emphatic in his desire to get the exact one.

"If I have to search every department store, shop, factory and even go into the high schools, I will not stop until I find the girl suited for this part," said Mr. Chaplin, "There is such a girl and I am going to locate her."

The part over which the producer star is so particular calls for a girl about 17 years of age; she is blonde in hair and with a pretty face. As for her ability to perform under the critical eye of Mr. Chaplin, the star has stated that the right girl is made for the part and the rest will come naturally.

Gradually an organization is being perfected to be known as the Sidney Chaplin Film Company. The general management comes under the supervision of the producer, with Carlyle R. Robinson, studio manager and personal representative of Mr. Chaplin.

Among the other heads of departments are Henry Clive, art director; John Meighan, purchasing department; Dick Johnson, master of properties and Danny Hall, technical director.

It is estimated that six to eight weeks will be required to complete the production, it being the first of a series of four five-reel comedy dramas for which one million dollars will be paid by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Goldwyn Expands Exploitation

Ralph Block Appointed to Dual Position of Director of Publicity and Advertising

FOLLOWING a meeting of the board of directors of the Goldwyn Producing and Distributing Corporation, last week, Samuel Goldwyn announced that Ralph Block, for the past six months the company's director of publicity, had been appointed Director of Advertising and Publicity, which means that Mr. Block is to have supervision of all matters relative to the advertising and exploitation of Goldwyn pictures, including the direction of the press and service men in Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges.

The appointment of Mr. Block to a post in which his ability as an executive and an organizer may be utilized to the full, is in accord with Goldwyn's policy of co-ordination of all departments made more necessary than ever by the growth of the company and the broadening of its plans, which now include national advertising on a large scale, a more extensive world distribution of the Goldwyn product, a producing organization in London and studios near New York, in addition to the Culver City plant.

Under the direction of Mr. Block all of the departments concerned with the publicizing of Goldwyn pictures and assistant exhibitors in presenting them to the best advantage, will be kept in close co-operation. The reorganization plan, now being worked out, calls for department heads for the advertising, publicity and exploitation branches of the organization, the work of each to be outlined according to the general policy adopted by the advertising and publicity director.

Through this focusing of effort at one definite point, clearly comprehended by all branches of Goldwyn's exploitation forces, it will be possible to do away with the wastage in effort that is bound to occur in a big organization where the work of interlocking departments is not thoroughly unified. The enlargement of the Goldwyn Corporation during the past six months has been so great, and the scope of its publicity activities has become so broad, in consequence, that the appointment of one executive familiar with all phases of the plans to bring Goldwyn pictures to the attention of a world-wide public, became imperative.

Next Mary Pickford Vehicle is "Heart of the Hills"

The next release of Mary Pickford through First National Exhibitors' Circuit, will be "Heart of the Hills," adapted from the story by John Fox Jr., has been completed and is now receiving the finishing touches which will make it ready for release in the near future.

Among those who are supporting Miss Pickford in this release are: Harold Goodwin, Allan Sears, Fred W. Huntley, Clare McDowell, Sam De Grasse, William Bainridge, Jack Gilbert, Betty Bouton, Henry W. Herbert and Fred Warren.

J. Stuart Blackton and His Ideal : : : :

WE believe it was Oscar Wilde who gave that delightful definition of Charm — that if a woman has it, she doesn't need anything else, and if she hasn't, nothing else will help her — and we couldn't help thinking of this when J. Stuart Blackton told us yesterday that Charm was the quality he was striving for in his pictures. Mr. Blackton has certainly set for himself a high ideal, the most elusive, the most indefinable and the most universal that we can think of. But then he has already proven that it is well within is powers of achievement, so perhaps he doesn't feel that way about it.

"It isn't the amount of money that is spent on a production, nor the popularity of the players in the cast, that make a picture worth seeing," the Commodore maintained in his quiet, even voice, "unless there is charm in the story or in one particular character or in the message the picture carries, the film, to my mind, loses the chief purpose of its being. I want my audience to go home feeling a little happier and a little more ready to take up the next day's work. If they do, I consider the picture a success, and if they don't, I deem it a failure, no matter how spectacular or magnificent it may have been."

"Pictures are not in their infancy," Mr. Blackton went on, "in spite of the frequency with which one hears the statement. The industry has made enormous strides and some really remarkable pictures have been produced, pictures quite worth anyone's enthusiastic praise. Of course there will always be room for improvement, there will be new developments and ideas, but it's absurd to say that the greatest strides have not been made. Picture making has become a distinct art, even more different from that of the theatre than is the art of painting. In fact I have found that a knowledge of the latter is an invaluable help in arranging objects that are to go under the studio lights, while the technique of the stage is altogether unlike that of the films."

J. Stuart Blackton, one of the standbys of the industry.

Mr. Blackton works very slowly, paying the greatest attention to details. After giving his players their positions on a set, he studies the scene from every angle, frequently making one or more changes again and again. He has the true artist's appreciation of the value of the smallest item with which he works. We were very much interested in some methods for gaining desired effects that we had never seen used before. They were "shooting" a scene before a huge open fireplace, in which a big fire was supposed to be blazing. But the fire itself was not big enough to cast shadows in the brilliance of the studio lights. To obtain the desired effect of firelight flickering on the walls and people, a shining reflector was placed on a line with the fire, just outside the camera's range, and on this was thrown a powerful spotlight. While action progressed some energetic individual waved a cloth in front of this reflector, and the shadows thus created rose and fell in just the proper manner.

"We have found this the only satisfactory way of getting a natural effect," the Commodore explained, "if the light itself is turned on and off, it is too spasmodic and jerky, and too strong. It must come from the reflector and the waving cloth seems to make it soft and shadowy."

Mr. Blackton had a very high tribute paid to his position in the film world not long ago, when the well-known artist, Frederick Lascelles, asked permission to do a sculpture of the Commodore's head, and include it in his collection of Americans, prominent in our representative industries. Just as he chose Carnegie and Schwab as the steel magnates, so he selected J. Stuart Blackton as a motion picture pioneer. The sculptured head is certainly well worth adding to any collection, and Mr. Blackton deserves the compliment. He was indisputably among the first to see the possibilities in the industry that has grown to such importance through the efforts of such men of talent and genius as himself. As is well known, he organized the Vitagraph Company in 1900, founded the Motion Picture Magazine in 1910 and was the first president of the Motion Picture Board of Trade of America in 1915. He made his first picture in 1897, and in spite of the twenty-two years that he has spent in the production of films, he is still enthusiastic about his profession. He enjoys his yachts and his painting, but he is happier in his Brooklyn studio creating stories and stars than anywhere else — Marguerite Jones.

Not An Interview — Just a Conversation

THIS is not an interview, but merely a conversation with Hampton Del Ruth. He was asked what he would consider a funny situation, and he came right back with the statement:

"Wouldn't you laugh if you saw a cripple run down by a hearse, especially so if the hearse had a flat tire?"

Just what the answer was is of no moment, because whether or not Del Ruth thought this was a funny situation does not matter, for we merely mention it in order to illustrate the trials of a comedy producing manager.

"The comedy producer and the maker of dramatic subjects as well must provide entertainment that will sink into the mentalities of the audience through the eye, and the situations must be so conceived that subtitles are almost unnecessary, because 10,000,000 people in this country cannot read the English language, and of that number five and a half million cannot read any language. And another thing might be added — the man who makes drums and horns for the children might not like them or want to play with them, but nevertheless there is a demand, and so he makes them. There are more people like slapstick comedy than straight comedy, and so it is being made. For my part I like comedy drama the best, but I believe I can make better slapstick comedies, and so I am doing it."

And then the conversation ended, because his cigar went out.

Henry King to Direct Warner

Henry King has joined the forces of the Hampton studios and will in the future direct the H. B. Warner pictures produced for Robertson-Cole. Mr. King has entered enthusiastically upon his new duties, and the reputation that has preceded him as a director in the film field hints of his successful handling of the new material selected for this popular star.

Ahead of the Game with Clift

DENISON CLIFT, in the forefront among writers for the screen, has recently gained prominence by his appointment as scenario editor of all feature productions to be made in California by William Fox, as recently announced in the MOTION PICTURE NEWS.

Clift, who is a young man, is a graduate of Stanford University, and before coming to the motion picture field he was well known as a novelist, short-story writer and dramatist.

"Just before entering upon work for the silver sheet," Clift says, "I was an advertising man, writing more newspaper copy than any other advertiser on the Pacific coast. No other training that I know of fits one better to write directly for the public than the advertising game.

"Advertising brings you directly in contact with your audience; you must study their likes and dislikes; their emotions and prejudices; and just in proportion as you understand your public can you deliver the message that will move them.

"But during my advertising years I had the irresistible desire to do the thing I liked best—write for the screen. Cecil de Mille had handled some of my dramatic work in New York, and I was fortunate in receiving an invitation from that master of screencraft to associate myself with the Lasky Company.

"Later I came in contact with Thomas H. Ince, truly one of the wizards of the screen, and there wrote 'Wolves of the Rail' for Hart, and a special feature, a drama of the police and Chinatown, 'The Midnight Patrol.'

Denison Clift, University Club, Los Angeles, Cal.

"One of the shortcomings of screen writers today, especially among men with a reputation in the literary field, is that they approach pictures with a sneer of contempt.

"That is a great mistake. Unless sincerity of purpose dominates a writer he can never do notable work. Far from being a medium below one's efforts, the very finest work of a writer is hardly good enough. The only philosophy that will put one at the top in the game tomorrow is to make every story one's supreme effort. In that way a writer can remain ahead of the game, which in the average case catches up with one quickly enough, and, unless you guard against it, passes you in the race."

Since entering the picture field Clift has written over twenty feature successes in a period of two years.

Short Notes

Ruth Clifford refuses to use any sort of safety devices when she leaps out of windows or climbs down the roof or is grabbed off a galloping horse into a flying motor car. Occasionally, while rehearsing, she wears a safety belt with a rope attached to some strong support, which would make things easier in case of a slip, but when the camera begins working, Miss Clifford leaves everything to Fate, and actually takes the chances that the audience believes she takes. Just now she is playing in "The Invisible Ray," a Guy McConnell story, with Jack Sherrill.

Helen Ferguson has completed work on the latest McManus picture, under the direction of Sidney Olcott, and has left for California, where she has been engaged to play in the Rex Beach picture "Going Some" at the Goldwyn studios in Culver City.

Here and There

Claire Adams has finished several important parts for Zane Grey, and is still on the Coast at work on forthcoming productions for the same company.

Wyndham Standing has the leading role in Leonce Perret's picturization of his own story, entitled "A Modern Salome," which is being made at the Ideal Studio.

Constance Talmadge is said to have been gathering some interesting statistics on the subject of kissing. The Talmadge sisters have generally put a good deal or realism into their osculatory experiences on the screen. Constance's attitude being, "if you're going to do a thing at all, do it well," and Norma's, "the nearer you get to truth, the nearer you get to art." Now word arrives that the police of Japan do not like to see kissing in public, and Constance, upon investigation, finds that in the past eight months the censors removed 2,650 kisses from American films. Only one kiss was allowed to remain—one granted to Columbus by Queen Isabella, and even that was shown in Tokio only, and withheld from the provinces. Constance has eliminated Japan as a possible choice for her next vacation.

Wilfred Lytell says he likes the view from the Kalem Studio at Cliffside very much indeed. He can really enjoy that wonderful sky line that New York boasts about so much, but which very few New Yorkers ever get far enough away to know anything about.

Marguerite Clark's company, including Rod LaRoque, is at Loon Lake, N. Y., where the exteriors for "Easy to Get," the star's next feature, are being filmed.

Burton King seems able to direct anything, the only definite prophesy that one is safe in making with regard to a future undertaking of his, being that it will be successful. He produced "The Lost Battalion," which was shown at the Cohan Theatre, after which came the Hallmark production "Wit Wins," then "A Scream in the Night" for Selznick, and now he is busy with the serial "The Lurking Peril."

Elsie Janis is hard at work on the scenario for her next picture. It is said that the energetic little lady takes more interest in the production of her films than all the other people responsible for their success put together, and now, she is putting in the time before she begins work again, writing her next story.

"The Gray Wolf's Ghost," Railroad Tale of Southwest

N. B. Warner turns to the romance of the early railroad building days in the great Southwest in the "Gray Wolf's Ghost," the Robertson-Cole feature picture, to be distributed through their exchanges. Bret Harte's "Maruja" has furnished the basis of the screen version in which Mr. Warner displays his dramatic ability for the negotiation of intense emotional moments as well as electric and quick-fire melodrama.

"The Gray Wolf's Ghost" is the fourth of the series of the Superior brand of pictures made for Robertson-Cole by the Hampton studios. The supporting company, it is said, includes other favorites.

One of the best and most thrilling episodes in "The Gray Wolf's Ghost" concludes the big moment in this tense play, where in the midst of his commanding efforts to hang the hero, the Gray Wolf is diverted from his purpose by the shrieking whistle of the first train ever seen in isolated plains of the Southwest. Appalled at the sight of this monster, which to his distorted brain seems to be the God of the cursed foreigners, he madly challenges the Unknown and on plunging steed lassos the dread object and the inevitable happens!

Prizma Camera Inventor Honored

What has been described as one of the most signal honors ever paid to any man identified with the motion picture industry was accorded to William Van Daren Kelley, the inventor of the Prizma camera which made it possible to take pictures in nature's colors. A convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers this year was held in Pittsburgh, and on Monday evening last at the banquet given at the William Penn Hotel, Mr. Kelley was presented with a gold medal as an evidence of appreciation of his genius by this scientific body connected with motion pictures.

Pathe to Issue "All At Sea"

"All At Sea," the second of the Rolin Company's new series of one-reel comedies, will be released by Pathe on November 2nd. Original comic situations introduced by Hal Roach will be combined with a new type of under-sea photography, according to reports. "Snub" Pollard and Mildred Davis will officiate in the leading roles.

Short Shots

Roger Lytton has decided that he must be too realistic a heavy—otherwise he cannot account for an incident that occurred the other day at the entrance of one of the Fifth avenue shops. Mr. Lytton, it seems, was leaving at the same time that an unknown lady was entering. The matron glanced in Mr. Lytton's direction, her features suddenly became terror stricken, a horified exclamation slipped from her lips, and she fled wildly back to the street. Mr. Lytton's only surmise is that she must have seen one of his picturizations, and that he was so associated with crime in her mind that she unconsciously gave way to fear.

Sidney Franklin seems to be vying with Madge Kennedy in the number of his cross continental trips. Now he is back east directing Constance Talmadge. The leading man is Conway Tearle.

Stuart Holmes is working on a white marble bust of his mother, that he intends to have placed on her grave when it is finally completed. His talent as a sculptor is so generally known that it seems unnecessary to comment on the fact that his dressing-room is a veritable studio, and that his free hours are passed in working with a chisel.

Much mystery surrounds the making of lighting effects declared to be of a novel character, which will be used by Director Wallace Worsley in his production of "The Street Called Straight" by Basil King, for Goldwyn. The author and director are in daily consultation over the material being made from the book into picture form.

Well Known Cinematographer Writes from Africa Before Starting Inland

SOME time in June we commenced a series of articles by Earl W. Rossman on "The Making of a News Cameraman." Only one installment was printed, for the reason that soon after preparing it Mr. Rossman was sent to South Africa by Prizma, Inc., with which firm he was connected as a prizmatographer. Now we have received a letter from him written just before his start into the interior after natural color films. Because his letter is interesting it is printed below. It gives an excellent picture of some of the places at which the expedition stopped while on the way to Johannesburg.

JOHANNESBURG, S. AFRICA, August 28, 1919.

"DEAR BRAGDON:

"This is really my first opportunity to write to any one as things have kept me humming since leaving the States.

"From what little I have seen of Africa so far, it is a wonderland. The grandeur of its picturesque mountains — its colorful Karroos — its beautiful trees and flowers — the quaint old-fashioned customs of the natives. The beauty of some parts of this country is in a measure almost indescribable except by motion pictures in natural colors and as you know we Prizmatographers are on the job here too as elsewhere.

"Now a little about the trip enroute to Africa. It took us about 28 days from New York to Capetown. We only saw land once on the trip and that was about 11 or 12 days out. We made for the land and I learned we were heading for the Cape Verde Islands, Port of St. Vincent, which is a coaling station and situated in the South Atlantic about 500 miles off the coast of French West Africa. The Cape Verde Islands are a mountainous group, some of which are almost devoid of vegetation and a Portuguese possession.

Earl W. Rossons

"Upon reaching St. Vincent I readily discovered that it was practically the most perfectly isolated city in the world and for this reason there is no newspaper, no cars, no subways, not even a Ford nor a motorcycle nor even a bicycle and movies. Good Lord! everything here is primitive and with it all this place has a population of 2,000 inhabitants of which there are nearly 100 white people. The black or colored population is a mixture of half breed Portuguese, semi-civilized natives, mongrels and riff-raff.

"The native women who are only partly clothed do nearly all the manual labor on the islands. They carry heavy loads balanced on their heads, sometimes as much as 150 lbs., and in many instances also a baby clinging to their backs.

"However, it doesn't seem to bother them, nor do they grumble at their lot for they seem to take solace in smoking an old corn cob and chanting a native tune. Verily! I say one-half of the world knows not how the other half lives — Selah!

"For each load carried more than half mile these women receive the princely sum of one penny English money.

"The male species work at the coal dumps — that is some of them — they are a dirty, filthy, lazy-looking lot and their rate of pay for this work is two shillings daily. There is no coal mined on these islands but it is brought here from England and is owned by an English concern under grants of the Portuguese.

"We are not far from the Equator here and it is some hot. The most peculiar thing outside of native life and customs is the cloud formations about the mountain tops. Some of the peaks, here pierce the sky at an altitude of over 8,000 feet. Then with the clouds hanging like a murky pall over everything at noon and the scorching rays of the sun beating down unmercifully penetrating the cloud formation now and then — it gave one the impression that the breath of hell has surely been turned loose upon the universe. In spite of the low hanging clouds there is seldom rain.

"I had some novel and interesting experiences during the two days coaling here and to write about all of them now would take more than ten thousand words, because they were all humorous incidents and will keep.

"We crossed the Equator on August 3, 1919, and of course Father Neptune and his daughters (not Annette Kellerman) paid their respects or rather we did to them. It was great sport and I have to laugh every time I think of what happened to Neptune after he had finished with his victims. Did we pay him in his own coin? We did.

"We saw scores of schools of flying fishes, many schools of porpoises and a few spouting whales enroute but none were close enough to be photographed. I want to call your attention to something I noticed regarding the beautiful color of the ocean. At times it was distinctly a brilliant blue, at other times a very deep blue then again there were times when the water was green and now in the equatorial zone it is all olive green. Only once did I see what you would call green water and that was when nearing land at the Cape Verde Islands and at Capetown, S. Africa.

"At the present time we are preparing to leave in the morning for the interior and a gentle time for all is not promised. Well we are prepared to bring home the bacon and we will.

"My kindest regards to all my friends. More when I get out of the jungles. Here's hoping to see you by Xmas or New Year.

"Best Wishes, Cordially,

"EARL ROSSMAN.

"P. S.— Will you please call up Mr. Stokes at Prizma and say Hello to him for me. Thanks.

"E. W. R.

"'Scuse pencil, etc. You know how it is.

"E. W. R."

A Few More Words on Exchanges

Technical Editor, Motion Picture News:

I have just finished reading this week's News and as I had ideas on some of the subjects that I've been holding in for some time, they just busted loose this time.

First, about the Fox Exchange. What I have to say on this matter is from no personal motive of malice or bad feeling. Mr. Fox is undoubtedly a first-class showman and he seems to believe in advertising. I've read the story of his rise in the game and that of his new building he is planning in New York City. What a wonderful section the News carried on these grand objects and how Mr. Fox has pressagented them. A magnificent studio to produce costly motion pictures with reading rooms, shower baths and lunch rooms and rest rooms for his employees. All because they contribute a few percent to their efficiency.

Oh, why can't a seemingly intelligent man get it through his head that his careless, inefficient, unbusinesslike and unworkmanlike Exchanges are ruining his productions, not a few per cent but 40 or 50 per cent or more to the majority of audiences.

Doesn't he realize that fans appreciate good projection and that good projection has been impossible many times with the sort of prints I have had from Fox Exchanges.

In his Philadelphia Exchange, four or five girls "inspect" an average of 150 to 170 reels a day and sometimes more. The "Mut and Jeff" cartoons are never inspected from the time they leave the laboratory until they hit the junk heap (except when the projectionist does it himself). Out of six weeks straight I had five cartoons with neither censor seal or end on them.

Co-operation is the keynote to success in any business and in the film industry which has so many component parts it is this lack of co-operation which is holding it back. Any man who permits such a lack of co-operation as Mr. Fox has absolutely no right to claim the progressiveness he claims. It isn't even good business.

I wish I could send this letter to him instead of to you but if he is like his representatives he would laugh and throw it in the waste basket. He wouldn't carry out my ideas (but the office boy would). Couldn't you send him a copy? Then he might pay a little attention to it then.

As regards Brother Garvin's complaint of us city workers, I would say that it isn't the fact of where a man works that makes him a projectionist or even an operator—it is how he works. Unfortunately we all have that evil—the punch hole artist—among us and running him a close second we find the kid "assistant" to whom the "operators" entrust their film repairing. Personally I would rather let my assistant watch the screen and machines a few minutes while I repair the film—and I do.

By the way, has anyone heard from Perry Sherman since the cyclone hit Corpus Christi, Texas. Let's hope his letters will continue to appear in the News.

Yours for the Projection Dept.,

Edward W. Large,

Collingswood, N. J. Local 307.

Comment:

It is seldom that a letter comes in to which we agree as completely as we do with this one by Large. One thing we are sure of and that is, that he waits too long between letters. In other words, he allows the pressure inside him to rise to the limit before he allows himself to "bust loose." Which means, in simple English, that we hope he writes again soon.

Although as head of the company that carries his name, Mr. Fox should know all the facts about his business. We do not believe that the present condition of inspections as carried out by Fox Exchanges can be laid at his desk. There is someone in his organization who is the lord of all Exchanges and there in the person of that individual you will find the reason for the decay of Fox films. We do not know who he is. It is difficult to get at the man. A letter sent to the Fox company some time ago on the subject of Film Inspection was probably opened by the secretary to the secretary to the secretary of the Exchange Superintendent and tossed by him into the basket.

One fact we have unearthed. We have discovered that as far as the producing company is concerned there is no such individual as a projectionist. The men in charge of the big concerns consider the Manager of the house as the ultimate user of films. This is the reason why protests from projectionists are never considered seriously. As long as the manager doesn't register a whole-hearted kick against the condition of films the producers are not worried. The latter look on the projectionist as "a born kicker anyway." If this is so there is but one way to make the heads of producing companies "see the light" and that is to interest the manager and urge him to do the official kicking.

Burns Holes in Condensers

C. T., Midland, Mich.:

I have just read your answer to my inquiry about condenser breakage and hope that it is not imposing on your good nature to write again so soon.

I would like your suggestion as to the combination you think would be best to remedy my trouble.

I am now using a 6½ and 7½ combination, plano convex.

I am sure my trouble is not caused by bad ventilation nor by draughts in the booth but by the flame from the carbon. It is a question of getting it back, I am sure.

I have to pull my arc close enough to get the proper spot and in doing this the flame strikes the upper edge of the back condenser. As long as I pull a very close arc and keep the flame at a medium length it seems to be better but if the arc is kept at the proper length the flame is too long, consequently the above result. I don't like the idea of almost "freezing" my carbons to keep the flames down.

I am never troubled with the front condenser. It is always the back ones. If left long enough the arc burns a hole completely through the condenser.

Answer:

A 7½-in. condenser lens in place of the 6½-in. lens you are now using would allow you to draw back your lamp from the front face of the glass. There would be a slight decrease in illumination on the screen due to a reduction in the cone of light intercepted by the condenser of longer focal length. But it may be worth while to accept this slight difference in screen illumination providing the condenser breakage is eliminated.

If the new combination does not work to your satisfaction try out the meniscus bi-convex layout. With the meniscus lens next to your arc you will be able to shorten the distance between the two and incidentally to include a larger cone of light. Many of our readers have tried out the menicus bi-convex condenser after all others have failed and found it to be the only remedy. That last sentence of your letter indicates that perhaps there is another cause of your condenser breakage. How about the carbons you are using for the current you are consuming. Too small carbons will cause a flare of the gas stream which might be enough to burn those holes in your condensers. Since you didn't tell us what current you were using nor your carbon trim we can only suggest this as one possibility which should be looked into before making extensive changes in your optical train.

Whatever your luck after following out our suggestions, please write in again so that others may learn from your dilemma.

Blemish on Screen

T. H. R., No. 1098:

What will remove "Spanish White" from the Gold Fibre Screen?

Reply:

Nothing. Whatever you use on a Gold Fibre Screen will make the affected spots look worse than before. The only remedy is to send it back to the factory and have it refinished there.

How About It, Westerners?

T. M. S. No. 390 is after information:

Am a reader of the Projection Department in the NEWS and I believe these columns are the best friend the projectionist has. Would like to ask a little information about a good locality for a projectionist. It has always been my desire to go West. Would like to know the chances for an operator out there. Have always heard that the chances for a young man was much better out West in other lines but not in the line of projection. "Reel" life has grown within me so I could never quit and would like to take the best chances. Am thanking you for any information in this line. I also wish to thank the NEWS for all the advice and pleasure I have received in reading the Projection Department.

Gilbert Heatwole, of Clifton Forge, writes as follows:

Just a few lines from an old league member. Am enclosing slip filled out from Mr. Jacobs, S. Boston, Va. So you see I am still doing a little missionary work. Am still on the job and getting along fine. Mr. Jacobs wishes to become a N. A. M. L. member. He saw one of my labels on a film-can and wrote me asking particulars of the League, so I sent him the pledge and slip, so he filled same out and I am sending it in hoping he will be accepted. He asked me in the letter what the MOVING PICTURE NEWS was, so I have written and told him, so please mail his membership card and button and also a sample copy of the News. And hope he will become subscriber. He has sure been in hard luck without it. In closing I wish you and the League best of luck.

Mr. Jacobs has wrote me about his equipment and probably we can get him to do so for the Projection Deptment. I wrote him asking what was the matter with the Virginia Boys in joining the League, but I see they are coming right to the front. I noticed two of my old friends' names on the Roll last week. Mr. Herring and Higgins from Harrisonburg. I was working there when I joined the League. Let us get together and make the League stronger yet. And I will do all I can to help. Best regards.

ANSWERS: Your friend's application has been received and passed. Many thanks for suggesting his name. The League is growing steadily and becoming stronger week by week.

Let us hope Mr. Jacobs writes the Projection Department a complete description of his equipment, just as he wrote it to you.

No, Mr. Large, the head of the Fox Company does not realize that good projection is impossible with present Fox Stuff because he keeps his eyes on the balance sheets. As long as your manager continues to book "Mutt and Jeff" cartoons in their present ragged condition, Mr. Fox has nothing to cause wrinkles in his forehead.

You never said a truer word than your statement that "it's how a man works that makes him a projectionist or an operator." There are too many men who fail to understand this fact. As we said in a reply to someone a few weeks ago, "there is as much damage done to film by highly paid but careless city projectionists as by the 'lowly' small towner."

It isn't the size of the town, nor the theatre, nor the equipment that counts. It's the MAN himself.

Watch and see if P. Sherman doesn't bob up soon. You can't keep a good man's head under water — even under a tidal wave.

N. R. N. of Opelika, Ala.: I will thank you to tell me how I may join the Operators' Union and where. I have been a projectionist for eight years.

REPLY: The nearest Local to Opelika is at . . . Write to the Secretary at that place and state your qualifications. Ask him for information on entrance requirements. These vary somewhat in different places and the only safe way is to get in touch with the local where you would eventually become a member.

Converter Overheats

F. J. C., No. 131:

What might cause the bearings of a Wagner Converter to overheat? The oil is new and bearings have just been cleaned with kerosene.

SUGGESTIONS:

Look for two possible causes; roughened or scored bearings and unequal air gaps between armature and field coils. The latter is caused by bearings wearing unequally due to soft spots.

"The Only Camera That Stands Up"

The Official Movie Photographer of the Screen Sketching Service on the National Motor Truck Development Tour, covered 4,000 miles in all kinds of weather and over all kinds of roads; and made 10,000 feet of perfect film with his Universal. He had several cameras but the Universal was the only one that stood up under the hard work and rough usage.

This is only one of the reports we have had of the Universal's performance under the most unusual conditions. In fact, the Universal in addition to its reputation as an instrument of precision, has also gained a reputation for "camera strength." This is because it is built right—built to give the finest results all the time and any time. It is a camera on which you can depend.

Camera men, explorers, travelers, educators—people who use moving picture cameras for any purpose are according the Universal "The Blue Ribbon" for Camera Performance.

We have a booklet telling all about the Universal Motion Picture Camera, how it is made, what it will do and what it costs. Before you buy a camera you should investigate the claims of the Universal to be your camera.

Three-Wire Systems

R. R., No. 901, asks a set of questions:

1. If the throw is 119 feet 10 inches and the picture is 16 feet 10 inches wide, what is the E. F. of the projection lens and what diameter lens should be used for 40 amps. D. C., 75 amps. D. C. and 60 amps. A. C.?

2. If you were using the three-wire Edison system of lighting and one fuse blew out what would have to be done to still keep your light if you had no extra fuse?

3. What distance should the shutters be placed from the projection lens?

ANSWERS:

1. The formula for finding the E. F. of a lens is obtained by simple proportion. The picture on the screen will be as many times wider than the aperture as the distance from lens is greater than the e. f. of the lens. Since for all purposes the aperture is 1 inch in width the formula is commonly written all dimensions must be the same, i. e., in either feet or inches but it is usually simpler to reduce feet to inches. Therefore, since we know the throw to be 119 feet 10 (1,438 inches) and the screen width to be 16 feet 10 inches (202 inches) the formula reads:

$$1{,}438 = \text{e.f.} \times (202)$$

$$\text{or e.f.} = \frac{1{,}438}{202} = 7.1 \text{ inches equivalent focus.}$$

With a focal length of 7 inches you will want to get the largest diameter lens available which will probably be slightly overs 2 inches. It wont make any particular difference what amperage you use since your problem with a long focal length lens is to gather and use all possible light from your arc.

2. This question of yours, we take it, was based on the assumption that your machines are placed across the outside wires of the three-wire system. In communities where the light companies are careful of the balancing of their three-wire systems, it is not allowable to tap each of the machines across one leg of the system, that is, between one outside wire and the neutral.

Assuming then that your machine is across the outside wires when the fuse blows, with no other fuse to replace in the block, there is only one thing that could be done, and that is to connect your machine across the 110 volt leg, if this is permissible. But even here you may run up against additional trouble as very often the neutral wire is not run into the projection-room, because of the fear that the projectionist may do exactly what you would be likely to do in cases of emergency. If the ntutral is not accessible you are up against it. We do not advise "metalling" the fuse merely to continue the show. It is better for the projectionist to admit his guilt in not having spare fuses on hand than to run foul of inspectors by breaking city ordinances.

On the other hand, if your machines were connected each across one leg of the system and the fuse on one machine blew, it would be a simple matter to make emergency connections so as to run both machines (but not at the same time) off one leg. The circuits are unbalanced enough when one machine alone is run on a leg, but with two projectors drawing current from the same outside wire, and the neutral the voltage regulation in stores and other theatres that might also be taking current from your service would be so poor that they would undoubtedly make a vigorous kick.

3. The shutter should be placed at the point of convergence of the light ray if this is possible. Sometimes with an unusual optical system, the shutter shaft is not long enough to allow this. In that event, there are two alternatives, either get a shaft extension from the maker of the machine or set the shutter at the best possible location.

It may be that when the latter stunt is attempted the light beam is found to be too wide for the width of shutter blade. This would necessitate either a wide cut-off blade with a proportional decrease in light efficiency or the purchase of a longer shaft as mentioned heretofore.

Pitted Condensers; Mazda Projection

C. W. CARSTANPHEN asks:

1.—How can back condensers be kept from pitting when using "Silver Tip" lowers?

2.—Give me a good formula for cement.

3.—Have you any data on Mazda Projection?

ANSWERS:

1.—As far as we know, there is no way to keep the rear lens from becoming pitted by particles of the coating from "Silver Tips." Carbon makers claim that tests of pitted condensers show that the pits have practically no effect on the efficiency of the optical train. Be that as it may, there is a way to keep the pitting down to a minimum and that is to clean the condenser surfaces after each show with a solution of acetic acid or just plain vinegar. This acid has the effect of eating off the tiny particles of the coating before the heat has driven them into the glass.

2.—A good formula for cement is: Equal parts of Collodion, Sulphuric Ether, Amyl Acetate, Aceytic Ether.

Why bother and fuss with a home made mixture when cement of an equal grade if not better can be purchased at any supply house. The success of the home made cement depends on your care in mixing the various ingredients and the truthfulness of the chemists scales in measuring them out. In cost, as well, we doubt if the commercial product can be duplicated by any "home made brew." However, we are giving you the secret prescription that has made others happy. Try it and see what luck you have.

3.—During the last six months there has been considerable matter in this department on the subject of Mazda projection. It is too big a subject and contains too many "ifs" and "buts" to discuss in detail here. Send in questions on Mazda Projection and they will be answered to the fullness of present knowledge. Or if you want to know if the incandescent lamp is suited to your theatre, give us all the necessary details and we will give you our opinion either in these columns or by personal letter.

Axial Chromatic Aberration

C. G. P. asks "Explain Chromatic Aberration." There are really two kinds of chromatic aberration, axial and oblique. Axial chromatic aberration is the one usually encountered in projection work.

If a ray of pure light such as A B strikes the lens as at B, the glass acts to a certain degree like a prism and breaks up the ray into the primary colors, red, orange, yellow, green, blue indigo and violet.

Each of these elements has a different wave length, red being longest and violet shortest. Red, therefore, is brought to a focus farthest from the lens as at the point C. The remaining components arrange themselves along the axis according to their wave lengths.

The amount of axial chromatic aberration depends on the dispersion of the glass and the focal length of the lens. By combining glasses of certain refractive indices and dispersions axial chromatic aberration is reduced to a minimum.

But sometimes when all the colors are brought to the same focusing point, the separate colors may have different equivalent focuses. This means that each color may give a different sized image which produces the color fringe. This is known as oblique chromatic aberration.

1—They can be used without damage to receiving material.

2—They enable you to standardize to wood or machine screws in all material.

3—They are made of brass and will not rust under atmospheric or moisture conditions.

4—ECONOMY—They save more time value than the holes cost.

5—You get them for nothing and are paid for using them when you count time saved.

6—Screw holes have been needed ever since the first screw was used.

7—Special tools are NOT needed in using them in any material.

8—They can be used in any place a screw can be used.

9—By using screw holes, screws can be used in many places, and in many materials where it is impossible to use screws without them.

10—These are the only ready-made screw holes in the world.

11—No special screws are needed. These screw holes fit any wood screw or machine screw now in stock.

12—They make the neatest possible job in any material.

13—Every store where screws are sold must carry them in stock, because the line of screws is not complete without screw holes for them.

14—Every shop and factory where screws are used must also have these screw holes to fit the screws.

15—They are endorsed by all dealers in screws and by all users of screws.

16—Screw holes are entirely new and the world supply is yet to be furnished.

17—This is a progressive Old World of ours, and every active person in it must adopt all improved methods, and all new articles that will help him keep in the front line of progress.

18—Be among the first to stock up in screw holes if you are a dealer in screws.

19—Be among the first to install screw holes in your shop or factory, as you begin to save money soon as you use them.

20—In spite of the high cost of brass, screw holes are yet cheap.

21—We are letting the world know that screw holes can now be secured, by means of extensive advertising in all the principal Trade Journals that have the largest circulation among dealers in screws as well as users of screws.

22—Do not let your customer ask you for screw holes before you have them in stock. BE A LIVE WIRE.

23—They make everlasting holes in any material.

24—They mean "Plug-No-More" screw holes.

25—They are the result of Necessity being The Mother of Invention.

26—Anyone who can drive a nail can use screw holes.

27—Send for a sample and convince yourself.

28—Mechanics who see them say, "What do you think of that?"

29—In fact there are NO REASONS why screw holes should NOT be used.

Each of these reasons are enough to sell Screw Holes. There are many other reasons.

Mazda Cracks Condensers

M. C. S., No. 1050:

Why do condensers crack with a Powers Excelite Lamphouse? I am unable to move bulb any further back.

When bulb is set to extreme and lamp-house is back as far as possible, how can I reduce size of spot on aperture plate?

REPLY:

The absence of condenser breakage has been used as one of the arguments for the Mazda Lamp. But here you come along and tell us of a case of persistent breakage using the incandescent bulb.

Ordinarily the heat from the Mazda lamp is not great enough to crack the condenser lens unless as it probable in your case there is a draught of air blowing on the glass. Poor ventilation or clogged vent tubes might also cause the trouble. Also, examine the condenser mounts to be sure that the lenses fit loosely and evenly at all points of contact. It is seldom that the Power's condensers mounts have caused breakage but in your case the mounts may need attention.

Although we have given you all the possible causes we feel quite certain that the trouble is in the sudden cooling of the condensers by blasts of air.

There are two ways to reduce the size of spot on aperture plate: by getting longer lamp-house rods from the manufacturers or by changing your condenser combination.

Send us the data describing your installation that is, the e. f. of your objective, present distance from condenser to aperture plate, size of condensers, length of throw and size of picture. We will take the figures you send in and make suggestions that will better your projection. It is impossible to do so without knowing more about it.

You Need Instruments

After carefully describing certain trouble he has been having with the electrical circuits in his projection room, a reader ends his letter with this sentence, "There isn't an ammeter or voltmeter in the whole town."

It is impossible for a man working under such conditions, i. e., with no instruments to guide him, to produce a uniform show day after day. This fact has been emphasized before in these columns and we take this occasion to mention the fact again.

How many automobiles, for example, does one find today on which instruments for several purposes have not been installed?

They have not been placed there to ornament the cowl or dash, but because experience has proved them necessary. Thy do not make the engine run better, but they do indicate when the machine is running correctly, or conversely, when something is beginning to go wrong.

The same reasons hold with instruments in the projection room. When machines are running as sweetly as ever in their life and the screen shows a picture that is worth a million dollars to the box-office, the projectionist never thinks of an instrument.

But a day or two later, when the screen begins to grow dull, when carbons positively refuse to burn as their makers intended they should, when the motor generator set regulates like a model of 1899, THEN is the time when the instruments are sorely needed.

Every projection room, no matter how small, nor how many projectors it contains, should have an ammeter and voltmeter. If they were not purchased when the machines were ordered they should be bought now. In times of trouble there are no two devices that will be of more direct aid to the projectionist than two little meters such as those illustrated. They are of value in locating faults, grounds, and similar troubles; by their aid a man can eliminate certain possible sources of trouble and thus arrive at the real source so much sooner.

Ammeters and voltmeters can be purchased for as low as $10 to $15. With decent care instruments of this type will last for a considerable time.

If two meters of this type are secured it is advisable to connect them permanently into the machine circuit. In case but one set is provided for the two machines a double throw switch can be arranged to connect the instruments to either projector.

But besides connecting them into the machine circuits, some arrangement should be made so that when it is desired to test out circuits the meters may be disconnected from the machines and connected to flexible wire leads.

Ammeters and voltmeters are mighty important pieces of projection room equipment. When everything is serene your manager may not believe you need them, but when you have trouble in your room, take the opportunity to tell him how much quicker, and oftentimes cheaper, you could find the trouble and fix it if you only had a pair of these small measuring instruments.

Formulae for Reversing Negatives

C. A. S. writes:

I understand that some time ago you published a formula for making positive from a negative film. Would you furnish me with this formula? If there is any cost to obtaining same would gladly pay for it.

A formula is hereby given which will do the trick together with working instructions.

In exposing negatives to be subsequently reversed more exposure time must be given to avoid extreme contrasts in the finished positive. With process here given half a point more time should be allowed. This, if normal exposures were f. 11, place the diaphragm indicator midway between f. 8 and f. 11.

The formulæ for the ensuing operations are given in small quantities as tests should be made on short lengths of film until you have gotten the process working satisfactorily.

SOLUTION No. 2

Caustic Potash	1 oz.

Use equal parts of solutions 1 and 2. Wash for one minute in running water. Immerse in a 10 per cent. solution of Ammonium Persulphate for one minute.

Having developed the film to good density, which does not take long in this solution, wash the film for a minute in running water and then place in a 10 per cent. solution of Ammonium Persulphate (in water) for a period of one minute. The film is again washed for a minute in running water and will be ready for reversal.

Reversal and all operations following must not be done in the dark room, but with the lights on, or in a daylight room preferably.

REVERSAL OF IMAGE (IN DAYLIGHT)

SOLUTION A

Potass. Permanganate	36 grains
Water	20 oz.

SOLUTION B

Sulphuric Acid	160 drops
Water	20 oz.

Use equal parts of Solutions A and B.

Place the film in this and let it remain until the images have entirely disappeared, which can be told by looking at the back or celluloid side of the film and noting when all the black has gone.

Now the film must be redeveloped in a solution compounded as follows:

REDEVELOPER

Sulphite of Soda	14 oz.
Water	10 oz.
Amidol (or Metol)	30 grains
Potass. Bromide (5 per cent. solution)	1¼ oz.

Fix in 20 per cent. Hypo solution and wash well.

The film is now redeveloped until good density is attained, which should not take long, allowance being made for the usual slight loss of density in fixing, and washed for about two minutes.

Now fix the film in a solution of 4 oz. of Hypo to 20 oz. of water or in other words a 20 per cent. Hypo solution. After the film has had a good washing such as is always given after fixing, it may be dried and is ready to be viewed. As with all reversed negatives the edges or sprocket holes will now be black instead of clear as in regular positive prints.

Reversed negatives cannot be expected to equal a good positive print, and most examples of such work show the whites badly veiled over. With sufficient practice the formulæ here given will, however, give reasonably clear highlights and yields positive of good projecting quality.

"Bullin the Bullsheviki"

(Eff and Eff Comedy-Four Reels)

THE first requisite in a comedy is an idea. And when it is found it should be satirized or burlesqued in as humorous way as possible. "Bullin the Bullsheviki" falls far short of the mark despite the sincerity back of the effort. Frank P. Donovan has striven to follow Carlyle's advice—"To countenance with Seriousness ridiculous Propositions Engenders danger—Better method is Laugh it out of existence"—One cannot, however, laugh this Russian Proposition out of existence insofar as it is visualized here.

There is nothing funny about Lenine and Trotsky. Editorials, cartoons, and other departments of the press have been used in concentrated propaganda to ridicule them into oblivion. And the press has failed. You can't laugh anything out of existence when you can't find anything to laugh at. In fact it appears that the Russian twins are laughing at other nations' attempts to laugh them out of existence.

So Mr. Donovan does not hit the mark with Carlyle's philosophy and he falls short even with the advice left out of consideration. Dressing a mob in Russian costumes and sending it helter-skelter in all directions is not productive of laughter. There is no comical character drawing discernible, nor any humorous foundation for the antics of the ensemble. The man who impersonates Trotsky cuts a sorry figure as a comedian. He orates and orates and orates. And Marguerite Clayton, as the girl, who eventually kills the Russian clown (he may go down in history as a sage) runs a poor second to Louise Fazenda as a mirth provoker.

Even if the idea to laugh 'em out of existence was conceived for its full humorous value it is doubtful if it could 'get over,' Because the proposition is too remote, too far away. And a local application CANNOT hope to reach the wound and heal it. "Bullin the Bullsheviki" carries a humorous title. That about lets it out. Decrepit horses, fake whiskers, trick cannon, and other devices are too antiquated in this day of ideas. Mr. Donavan deserves praise for being a disciple of Carlyle. He is sincere at least. Joe Farnham's titles are the redeeming features. And even they smack too much of Broadway, if the film is to be sent out in the hinterland.—LAURENCE REID.

"The Trail Of The Octopus"

(In Fifteen two reel episodes starring Ben Wilson and Neva Gerber Released by Hallmark exchanges)

If the first six episodes can be accepted as any criterion this can be branded a corking good serial. In other words it possesses the mystery element and the "bring-'em-back" punch at the end of each episode.

Not that this is one of the greatest serials ever made, but if your audience likes serials you can bank on this one pleasing them greatly and you can assuredly count on them coming back for more.

Of course there is a disappearance now and then and evidences of crime and stealth and also many fights. But these are all extremely essential in a serial and impart the necessary melodramatic thrills.

The plot is a good one and the "chase" factor is ushered in from the desire of two groups to possess themselves of every one of the daggers necessary to open a certain treasure vault. And the chase is international as at the end of the sixth episode the leading characters are on a steamship bound for China.

Ben Wilson shines effectively as the master criminologist and Neva Gerber is a pretty and active heroine.

If you need a serial you can bank on "The Trail Of The Octopus" being a safe and sane bet.—TOM HAMLIN.

"The Stream Of Life"

(Seven-Reel production of Plimpton Epic Pictures Inc. for Plymouth Film Corporation)

HERE we have a preachment in about seven thousand feet and the theme is applied Christianity.

It portrays the career of a child until his death at three score years and ten. The title is carried out as "The Stream Of Life" from the fact that every little while a flash is given of a babbling brook, or a larger stream, and then a roaring torrent, to the finale of a placid lake.

The boy is born on a farm with a Christian father and mother and a nice old grandfather. Blessings are said at every meal and the family bible reading and evening prayers are never neglected. The yearning to visit the large city is upon him in his youth and he goes with the blessings of his folks.

Becoming a successful business man and finally the possessor of a charming wife he is apparently very happy. When his old mother visits him she realizes that he has neglected many of his early religious habits. But when he loses his little child he almost becomes an infidel.

It is then that the wife enters a small church prayer meeting and becomes converted. After a long siege she finally wins him back to the church also. Through these good influences he sacrifices his entire fortune to repay the depositors in his bank who stood to lose their life savings through the radical speculating of one member of the board of directors.

The old couple then retire to the country and find contentment. He passes away at a ripe old age several years after the wife had preceded him.

The excellent direction and exceptional photography are handicapped by the fact that the picture naturally drags. For there is not a fight, an eternal triangle, a murder or a mystery in it. It is just a narrative and a preachment and commercially it will have no appeal to the regular motion picture fans. However it is a wholesome picture and an ideal production to show on Sundays where no Sunday shows are permitted. For it preaches the gospel and if properly exploited among the church people would draw many new faces into the theatre,—at least once.

It brought back memories to the reviewer of the days when he warbled in a little Methodist church choir.

So if an exhibitor books this picture he should use the church lists and also improve the presentation by securing a choir leader to lead the audience in community singing.

"POOR RELATIONS"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Carries a Few Entertaining Moments

THERE is a human quality about this homespun tale of "plain folks" which will carry it by as a fairly satisfying entertainment regardless of its limited dramatic appeal. King Vidor, the sponsor of the piece, is keen for bringing out the frailties of the human family that would go by unnoticed with the majority of directors. He makes an effective plea for one's country relatives, that they are closer to humanity than their city cousins, and that their simplicity and sincerity are virtues which make them far more genuine than the residents of congested communities.

The story offers an unusually simple theme which does not contain a single dramatic situation or climax. It exudes sentiment and heart interest, and naturally, a wealth of local color. Of action and suspense it has none; but it does have considerable character drawing. And a lesson; don't forget that. What it loses in situation and climax is more than made up in the homespun quality of the theme, and the lifelike attitudes struck off by the director and the players.

This picture will not offer you any moving moments. It is exceedingly quiet. Yet it is true to life and its homely sketches and humorous touches should please those who do not ask for a great deal. The piece is well interpreted by Florence Vidor and a good supporting cast. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Poor Relations," a Robertson-Cole production starring Florence Vidor, will be the attraction at the ——— Theatre, on ——— of ——— week. This is a story which capitalizes the homespun people of the country. Honesty and sincerity are their virtues and which make them appreciated after one has grown accustomed to the artificial life of society. King Vidor, who wrote and staged this photoplay, has brought out admirably that one need not scoff at his poor relations despite their lack of refinement and breeding. Their hearts are always in the right place.

Florence Vidor is an ideal selection for the young wife who teaches her aristocratic husband how to choose the gold from the dross. As Dorothy Perkins, one would not pick her as an unsophisticated country girl. She is gifted with an adaptability for the ways of society and possessing a talent for drawing, it isn't long before her ambition drives her to the city and into an architect's office where she meets unbounded success. And after a short courtship she marries Monte Rhodes, who prides himself on his family tree. Dorothy's country relatives come to visit her and their homespun ways are a shock to her husband. So much so, that he upbraids her for being quite common.

Naturally she returns home where she is sure of a grand welcome. The simple customs of her own people bring solace to her troubled mind. And her absence makes Monte appreciate her virtues and those of her poor relations. The result is he seeks forgiveness and things are as they should be. The play abounds in local color and atmosphere and the moral is strongly established. An excellent cast supports Miss Vidor.

CATCH LINES

Suppose you were from the country and you married into society and all your poor relations called and presented themselves in their homespun mannerisms. Would you be embarrassed?. See how Florence Vidor conducts herself in "Poor Relations."

A picture of homely people—a picture of poor relations who are not gifted in deportment but whose hearts are simple and charitable. They don't measure up against their city cousins in refinement but you will like them better when you look into their hearts.

He ate with his knife and wore his hat in the house. And he gave cheap perfume to the girl of his heart. The city people scoffed at him but his honesty showed them up in all their hypocrisy. See "Poor Relations."

PROGRAM READER

A picture very close to the heart will appear at this theatre shortly. It is entitled "Poor Relations" and stars charming Florence Vidor. Now, every one is blessed with poor relations and occasionally one is ashamed of them. Dorothy Perkins had plenty of poor relations and they were always welcome at her house no matter whether they were dressed in their homespun clothes and didn't have the least conception of table manners. If she was embarrassed she didn't show it, but her husband upbraided her for having poor relations. However, her people were honest above everything. Life wasn't a sham to them.

Her husband didn't have any poor relations. He would have been more charitable otherwise. What happened? You must find out for yourself when the picture is shown. Rest assured it is a picture of genuine men and women and some who are not so genuine. You will see life revealed with admirable simplicity.

SUGGESTIONS

Since you have no outstanding situations to play upon here it would be best to concentrate upon the theme and outline it in brief arguments. Be sure to emphasize that it is a story of the heart—a simple story of a simple people. Bring out the value of the title in all your advertising and lay stress upon the simplicity of the theme. Play up the fact that

"THE MOONSHINE TRAIL"

(BLACKTON-PATHE)

Will Entertain in Many Localities

WHILE this picture in the beginning is set among the moonshiners in the mountains of eastern Kentucky it quickly changes to New York City where the mother and daughter arrive after the husband and two brothers are killed by revenue officers. From then on it looks like prohibition propaganda, showing the youthful hero with the hereditary taint of strong drink. Some beautiful scenery is shown in the mountains.

The heroine is so strongly against liquor, owing to her own sad experience in losing her father and brothers, that she returns the youth's engagement ring. When the arch-plotter, who is the employer of the hero and heroine, finally becomes remorseful through the death of his beloved daughter who "has the mind of a child," he ceases his villainy. The "shadow" is an old drunkard, who proves to be the father of the hero, and the old man shoots himself.

This is the story in a nutshell. Many attempts have been made to inject the real human element and a little comedy to afford relief here and there and the director succeeded in several places. The film as a whole seems to have been produced in a former period, as the style of handling it appears to have been in vogue a few years back. An average picture that will register quite strangly in some districts and very weakly in others.—Length, 6 reels; released, October 19.—TOM HAMLIN.

Directed by J. Stuart Blackton.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Moonshine Trail" is to appear at the ——— Theatre for a ——— day's run beginning ———.

This is the big six reel production made by J. Stuart Blackton for Pathe and reveals the situations created by the inherited taint of strong drink. While this is heralded as a melodramatic story it also has a strong love element and is described as being a thoroughly human picturization of the difficulties in the romance of a young couple whose engagement is broken many times because of the youth's futile battle against temptation.

Sylvia Breamer is the star and she has the role of a young mountain girl whose father and two brothers have been killed during a revenue raid against their illicit still. When she goes to New York City she meets a youth whose father has been a drunkard all his life.

A plotting scoundrel, who is the employer of the girl and the youth, is attracted by the girl's beauty and tempts the youth to drink whiskey, and the inherited desire soon gets the youth in difficulties. At the last moment the daughter of the villain dies and this brings him to a realization of just what is right and what is wrong.

He, therefore, helps the hero and heroine and the romance ends happily. Through all this is also pictured the obstacles against the curse of excess drinking that a large family of other persons have to overcome in the lower walks of life. And this family also conquers and overcomes the big handicap.

PROGRAM READER

Many persons would refer to the Johnston Flood in trying to remember certain dates. Other persons refresh their memories by stating that such and such an event occurred two years after the Civil War. Others revive their memories by referring to the Chicago Fire or the San Francisco Disaster.

The tidal wave at Galveston also serves as a reminder to some and the late armistice is more recently referred to in recalling later events.

But who will ever forget June 30, 1919?

Next week at this theatre comes a reminder of the days that were.

"The Moonshine Trail," by J. Stuart Blackton, a Pathe Picture, starring Sylvia Breamer.

It has a message and is a melodramatic romance.

SUGGESTIONS

When you look at this picture it is advisable that you mention the producer's name very prominently as J. Stuart Blackton's name has been attached to pictures that in the earlier days were shown in practically every theatre in the country and were generally considered big special productions. Sylvia Breamer's name as the star should be worth considerable in most locations.

Outside of this the theme is the handicap considered imposed upon a youth who has inherited the taste for strong drink. Use this according to the popularity of the anti's in your immediate neighborhood. But always bill it as a melodramatic romance so as to remove the impression of propaganda.

CATCH LINES

One youth is handicapped in life through a hereditary thirst which it took a great love to conquer.

"THE MYSTERY of the YELLOW ROOM"
(REALART)

Absorbing Mystery Melodrama Defies Solution

THE first Realart picture, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," can be put down as excellent entertainment, thanks to the artistic hand of Emile Chautard. This director has been going forward until he has reached — what seems to us — his great achievement. There is no doubt about it — he knows how to build a mystery story so that it defies solution. Which is the prime requisite in this type of subject. The picture will unlimber one's deductive powers and at the same time keep him on the anxious seat with a strong measure of suspense.

Chautard has very skillfully woven the mysterious threads together and built up his case. A girl is attacked in a room and the criminal escapes even though there is no apparent means of exit. Complications develop until nearly every character falls under suspicion; and you would never suspect that the master detective is the criminal unless you are up on French mystery stories and appreciate that the man who is selected to solve the crime is usually the guilty character himself.

Mr. Chautard has intensified the action with an assortment of thrills and his photography aids in the scheme. Among the players whose work is conspicuous for its excellence are Lorin Baker, who as a reporter, solves the mystery, Ethel Gray Terry, and George Cowl. The picture may not be logical, but logic is not looked for in a mystery. Its aim is to keep the onlooker guessing and it succeeds beyond expectations. Length, 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Mystery of the Yellow Room," the first of the Realart Pictures, will be the main attraction at the ———— theatre beginning ————. This photoplay, an adaptation of Gaston Leroux's famous novel of the same name, has been directed with infinite skill by Emile Chautard. As its title indicates, it is a mystery story which concerns the master criminal in France, The spectator is completely puzzled until the denouement is reached, for it is impossible to pick the GUILTY MAN among the characters. Each one seems to have indisputable evidence of his innocence.

When Mathilde Stangerson is strangely attacked and certain documents taken from her father's safe, the master detective, Frederick Larsan, is called to solve the crime. The assault takes place on the eve of the announcement of her engagement to Robert Darzac. And no one seems to be able to solve the mystery. The star reporter of "The Globe," Rouletabille, however, is persistent, and he follows down every clue. But even he is completely baffled, for this mystery is followed by another which concerns a murder. The gamekeeper, known as the Green Man, is the victim. Suspicion points so strongly at Darsac that he is arrested and placed on trial. But he remains silent.

When events loom up black for him, the reporter bursts into the courtroom with the mysteries solved. He refuses to give the name of the guilty man until the latter has had time to escape. After four hours, he tells the Court that Larsan, the detective, is the criminal. And as he unfolds his evidence the two mysteries are enacted by the characters. Truly, a remarkable mystery story and one which defies solution.

CATCH LINES

There was no apparent means of escape. The room had only a window and a door. Both were securely bolted from the outside. Yet the UNKNOWN QUANTITY got away. How? See "The Mystery of the Yellow Room."

"THE WINCHESTER WOMAN"
(VITAGRAPH)

Pleasing in Spite of Much Coincidence

ALICE Joyce is twice falsely accused of murder in this. The plot for the most part is along conventional paths, the philander viewing the innocent maid with evil intent and the heroine compromising herself to shield the ingenue. Director Ruggles has succeeded in making the feature entertaining.

The methods employed to accomplish this purpose are of A-1 variety. In the first few sequences your curiosity is aroused by the inference that something is to come from the deductions of an amateur handwriting expert. Then follows the information, via a newspaper clipping insert, that Miss Joyce has been acquitted of murdering her husband which suggests mystery. Finally you get to the place where the star induces the villian to write a letter and you begin to expect something from this sequence. Then bang! the villain falls out of the window and kills himself and Miss Joyce is again accused of murder.

The direction is excellent, the star appears to good advantage and the support is adequate. Length, 5 reels.— J. S. DICKERSON.

THE CAST

Anne Winchester Wharton ..... Alice Joyce
David Brinton ..... Percy Marmont
Alan Woodward ..... Robert Middlemass
Alma Fielder ..... Jean Armour
Julia Brinton ..... Lucy Fox
Simon Scudder ..... Joe Burke

Story by Charles Stokes Wayne.

Directed by Wesley Ruggles.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Alice Joyce will appear in her latest photoplay, "The Winchester Woman" at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

The feature is said to be one of the most entertaining this popular star has ever appeared in. The story concerns a young woman falsely accused of murdering her husband who attempts to hide in the country that she may escape the notoriety accruing from the trial. In her new home she finds true love, after fate has again brought her under suspicion as causing the death of another man with whom she has become associated in the effort to protect the young daughter of her lover.

Miss Joyce has a congenial role and the picture skillfully constructed is acted by a strong cast. With its locale in the country, much beautiful scenery has been secured as a photographic background and many great types have been introduced in roles good for hearty laughs.

Lucy Fox a pretty and talented ingenue plays the role of Julia Brinton, while Percy Marmont is Miss Joyce's leading man in the part of David Brinton, a middle aged widower with a young daughter of boarding school age.

Joe Burke a talented character man contributes to the success of the feature with some excellent comedy scenes.

SUGGESTIONS

We would bill this as an original and unusual story where fate is unkind enough to twice accuse an innocent woman of murder. Tell them that no one will be able to foresee the outcome of this feature until the very last sequences. Announce that some of the best rual scenes they have ever seen form the photographic background and then let everyone know that this is an Alice Joyce picture and that in it she has one of the best roles of her career.

You might give Wesley Ruggles a little of your billing as he has made quite a good showing in the capacity of director and some of your people will probably remember this fact.

We would not publish too much of the plot of this as it is peculiarily constructed, much that promises to be the unraveling of the mystery of the first murder leading to no particular end, being used to create suspense. It is this quality that carries the interest to the really important scenes of the story which concern the second death and the star's subsequent implication in it by circumstantial evidence and her clearance by a rather good twist.

PROGRAM READER

Coincidence might seem to be overworked when a photoplay brings about circumstances where a woman is accused falsely of committing two murders yet in "The Winchester Woman" starring popular Alice Joyce such is the case and the picture is still plausable and also intensely interesting. There is much mystery which has to be unraveled before the finale and you will find yourself deeply engrossed in the problem of freeing the star from the toils of the law for of course she is proven innocent in both instances.

You will like the romance which develops and when the feature closes you will feel sure that Mrs. Brinton nee Mrs. Winchester will live happy with her husband. We can't tell you much concerning the story for that would spoil your enjoyment of the picture. Take our word for it that this is a cleverly constructed photoplay and that you will like Miss Joyce in her role.

CATCH LINES

The heroine at last decided that she would confess her secret and thus pull the fangs of the scandal snake.

It is not possible to hide from the past but it is possible to confess it and still retain the respect and love of a true man.

The woman proved that by withstanding all the tests of character one may withstand all the evils of fate.

Accused of two murders, yet she lived to enjoy her life with a worthy husband.

"CRIMSON SHOALS"

(MONOPOL)

A Typical Francis Ford Melodrama

IF your audience fancies Francis Ford, this one runs true to form with fights and scuffles galore. Smugglers of coral off an island owned by the hero's family are finally thwarted. The star attempts protean characterizations in the three roles respectively of grandfather, father and son.

This is aided considerably by clever camera craft in double exposure, augmented by skillfully laboratory work. Continuity seems a trifle confusing at times because of the effort made to provide suspense but the final outcome is like an open book to the confirmed fan.

Of course in his three roles the star is almost the whole cast and at times the "three" are the only characters in a scene. This looks weird, as the personal resemblance is so marked. If your audience enjoys hand-to-hand gang fights, and a picture that the gallery gods of the old ten-twenty-thirty days would eat up greedily, this is the picture for you.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, less than average puller and not generally pleasing; Elite, ordinary puller and not pleasing; Family, less than average puller and not generally pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing. Story and Direction
By Francis Ford

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Crimson Shoals" is scheduled for a ——— days' run at the ——— theatre beginning ———.

In this screen melodrama Francis Ford appears in a triple characterization, that of the grandfather and the father, and also the young son. In several scenes he appears in the three roles at the same time.

Crimson Shoals is an uncharted island rich in coral and owned by Thomas Fielding. His son Frederick determines to develop the hidden wealth and leaves the United States bound for the island. He has been married secretly to Marguerite Quinn who later dies after giving birth to a son. Her father named the boy Jack Quinn, not knowing that his daughter was married to the son of his old time enemy, Thomas Fielding.

As this son grew up he journeyed to the island with his old father, and was placed in charge of the concern. In the meantime Frederick Fielding had moved to the United States and was clearly satisfied with the wealth the island was now bringing him. He grieved for his wife, but never knew she had given birth to a child.

When the receipts from the island began to drop he suspicioned that all was not right and determined to discharge the young overseer, Jack Quinn. His father, Thomas Fielding, journeyed with him to the island and they ran afoul of a gang of coral smugglers. From then on there are many thrilling fights. A submarine and an airplane are utilized in the struggle.

Finally, with the aid of a beautiful young girl acting as a detective, young Jack Quinn succeeds in breaking up the ring of the smugglers. It is then that it is discovered that he is the legitimate son of Frederick Fielding.

PROGRAM READER

If your father owned an uncharted island somewhere in the far Pacific and you suspicioned it was rich in coral you would probably do just what Frederick Fielding did.

He developed the island and returned twenty years later to the United States to find the girl whom he had secretly married was dead.

How was he to know that the young man he had left in charge of the island was his son. Even his wife's own father did not know that she had married Fred Fielding.

When the receipts of the island fell down so quickly after he had left the island Fred Fielding determined that crooked work was being carried on and journeyed to the island again with the declared intention of discharging the young man in charge.

The many thrills in the final denoument are shown in a special feature coming to this theatre next week entitled "Crimson Shoals."

Francis Ford is the star and he appears in a triple characterization as he portrays the role of the grandfather, the father, and also the son in what is termed some of the most startling triple exposure camera work ever known.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture the exploitation should center on the star, Francis Ford, as he has been in motion pictures so many years. And when you mention him you should not fail to call particular attention to his triple characterization and announce that he plays the part of the grandfather, the father, and the youthful son.

Then mention that this amazing triple characterization shows in many of the scenes the three men together at one and the same time. Pronounce it as one of the most amazing examples of triple exposure that the camera has ever accomplished.

CATCH LINES

"Who does this boy so remarkably resemble?" asked the grandfather.

"It's like looking into a mirror to look at you," declared the father.

When three generations met with one a stranger, although actually a chip off the old block.

"THE ARIZONA CAT CLAW"

Colorful Performance in Familiar Story

EDYTHE STERLING looms up in World's latest as another female Bill Hart. Her performance of a Western girl, who has been brought up to take care of herself, is the one high light in a story not conspicuous for its originality. In fact it presents the familiar formula of hard riding and straight shooting with a girl as the goddess of the machine. In the title role Miss Sterling won't stand for any nonsense from the lone rustler who is ignorant of her good right arm and left. And she befriends a pitiful figure of a girl who loves unwisely and too well.

The picture is mostly an exposition of the chase—with the star doing most of the chasing. Her ability to handle a gun like Annie Oakley and ride like Tom Mix are sufficient to tide the feature over as fairly satisfying. A thrill is furnished when the rustler is hurled over a steep canyon by the girl's cowboy lover. And there is a serial-like touch in the stunt which depicts a cable tram carrying her and the horse through space. A short cut to head off the villain. Shades of Helen Holmes!

The picture is obvious in regard to idea and execution, but its characterization is interesting. And it carries a picturesque appeal in its colorful backgrounds. William Bertram directed the picture from a story by Charles Mortimer Peck.—Length, 5 reels.—Released, October 27.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Arizona Cat Claw," a World picture, featuring Edythe Sterling and supported by a capable cast, will be the attraction at the ——— theatre on ——— of ——— week. It pictures the far west and is a drama of the cattle country with a cowgirl as the heroine.

Blossom is a typical girl of the cattle country. She rides and shoots as well as any of the cowboys. In many ways she is more man than woman but despite her manly traits has great sympathy for the unfortunate. Amelia Young, a half-witted girl, who lives near Blossom, has been deceived by a mining engineer named Stimpson. He is a suitor for Blossom's hand and a rival of a neighboring rancher, who is also in love with her. While riding with the rancher one day she encounters Amelia, who tells of her trouble with Stimpson. Blossom sends her escort back to the ranch for the men while she pursues Stimpson.

Stimpson makes for the nearest border. An exciting chase follows with Blossom steadily gaining on him. He is finally overtaken at a river bank, where the mud threatens to swallow both horse and rider. At this point the rancher and cowboys arrive and rescue both horse and rider.

At the point of a gun Blossom drives Stimpson back to the village and compels him to marry Amelia. This leaves the field clear for the rancher, who calls a minister to marry Blossom and himself.

CATCH LINES

They called her the Arizona Cat Claw because she could bite and scratch. "Look out for her," the boys said. When HE failed to follow the advice, what happened? See "The Arizona Cat Claw."

She could ride and she could handle a gun. And woe to the man who crossed her path. A cat claw is a plant not to be trifled with. A woman can be a cat claw, too.

Come to the ——— theatre next ——— and meet the Arizona Cat Claw. Whew! but she can fight! Ride? You bet!! Handle a gun like a Hart? You bet!!!

PROGRAM READER

"The Arizona Cat Claw," which comes to this theatre shortly with Edythe Sterling as the star, is a drama of the cattle country with a cowgirl as the heroine. The picture abounds with many thrilling situations enacted against a typical Arizona background. Miss Sterling is a noted equestrienne and is said to have won international fame for her skill on horseback. The story is that of a cowgirl whose "big heart" compels her to help a girl friend who is in trouble.

Amelia, a half-witted girl, has been deceived by a mining engineer. She tells her troubles to Blossom (Miss Sterling). The heroine is thoroughly aroused and sends for the cowboys, who pursue the villain, corner him and bring him back to the village.

At the point of a gun our heroine compels the scoundrel to marry the girl he wronged, and she is married to the man of her choice.

SUGGESTIONS

Here is a Western that presents a unique characterization. A girl takes the place of the familiar cowboy—a girl who is every bit as resourceful in taking care of herself. So bring out her personality in all your copy. Ask your feminine patrons to come and see how girls are raised in the West. And use catch lines in attracting them to the theatre. Tell them that they will have a chance to see a female Bill Hart in this picture. Tell them that this girl can shoot as straight and ride as hard as any cowboy actor on the screen.

You might get up some interesting copy how girls are proving every day that they are able to do the things that heretofore have been identified with the masculine sex. This is sure to arouse feminine interest. Feature the star and use stills of her in her cowboy regalia. Play up the title. A cat claw is a dangerous plant. And the heroine is called a cat claw because she is dangerous when aroused.

Rollicking Farce Makes Satisfying Picture

"FAIR AND WARMER," the rollicking farce by Avery Hopwood which had the entire country laughing when it appeared upon the stage, has been made into a satisfying picture. Of course a gread deal of its vitality is naturally lost in the translation. Which is to be expected when the sparkling dialogue is eliminated. And there is nothing within the scope of the camera to furnish a worthy substitute.

The idea of a neglected wife and husband, whose respective spouses believe in cutting up capers, compromising themselves in order to teach the prodigals how to keep their marriage vows, is rich in its mirth-provoking possibilities. And the fun starts when the innocent bride and the guileless husband proceed to get intoxicated. This scene is deftly handled by the players, so that it will not offend the most sensitive prude. The picture travels along sending out a spray of humor here and there.

Yet the impression is gained that the farce could have been done a great deal better. It drags interminably at the start but once it hits its stride in the inebriated "business" and it finishes with plenty of nerve and vim. It may be that the players have not appreciated the farcical values, for their work is not wholly spontaneous. They seem to pause at times which is fatal for such a line of action. However May Allison is personable as the innocent spouse and does very well indeed with a difficult comedy role. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Fair and Warmer," a breezy farce-comedy, featuring May Allison, will be the main attraction at the ———— Theatre beginning ————. This is from the sparkling pen of Avery Hopwood, one of the most prominent playwrights in the business and affords the star a splendid chance to display her abilities as a comedienne. As "Blanny" Wheeler, the innocent wife who decides to play her husband's game, she enters upon an adventure which involves her in matrimonial difficulties, but which in the end brings about the reformation of her better half. "Blanny" has implicit faith in Jack and thinks him the most perfect husband in existence. Little does she know that he believes in the philosophy that to keep a wife guessing will insure marital happiness. And when he runs off to a poker party (the Mystic Shrine to her) "Blanny" is forced to while the evening away with Billy Bartlett, whose wife holds to the theory that husbands should be left at home when lovers are about. And Billy, in his stupid way, tells "Blanny" that he is going to play a game just like her husband. And so the truth dawns on her that Jack is not perfect. Not by a jugful!

And "Blanny" and Billy proceed to get uproariously drunk and when their respective better halves arrive home the scene that greets them is a compromising one to say the least. The result of the affair finds Jack thoroughly tamed and Laura content to remain a dutiful wife. The picture unfolds a plenitude of high-spirited action that is skilfully handled by the author and the scenes offer the players good opportunities to bring out their fun-making powers.

CATCH LINES

"And I thought him perfect and all the time he was running around having a glorious time"—with this remark the little bride decided that she could play her husband's game. And she played it so strongly that he became perfect in the end. See "Fair and Warmer."

The innocent bride and the guileless husband mixed a glorious cocktail, and they proceeded to compromise themselves. Why? Because their better halves were out having a gay time. "We'll show them that we can play their game." And so the fun started. See what comes of it.

See "Fair and Warmer"—the rip-roaring farce by Avery Hopwood, which had all New York laughing when it appeared on the stage. See it as a picture. It is rich, rare and racy.

The neglected wife and the forlorn husband put their heads together and decided to play the same game as their better halves. But where did it lead them? See "Fair and Warmer," with May Allison.

"So Jack thinks he is fooling me, does he?" Well, I'll show him that I can fool him, too!" What happened? You will find out when that delightful farce, "Fair and Warmer" comes to the ————. Ninety in the shade and getting hotter.

PROGRAM READER

"Fair and Warmer," the latest picture to feature May Allison, will be seen at the ———— Theatre in the near future. Written by Avery Hopwood, one of the most brilliant playwrights of contemporary drama, it presents a thoroughly amusing tale of a marital mix-up. Now, "Blanny" Wheeler thought her husband perfect, but in reality he held the theory that to keep a wife happy you must keep her guessing. So he proceeded to have a good time. Laura Bartlett, on the other hand, realized that she married a deadly bore, so she proceeded to have a good time with his knowledge.

Conglomeration of Plots Looks Like a Serial

HAVING profited by "Checkers," R. A. Walsh has been commissioned to try his skill in producing a picture as near like it as possible. The result is a curious mixture of plots and counterplots, incidents, conveniences and what not. He has resurrected material that has done yeoman service in melodramas of the past and among the assembled ideas nothing seems to have been forgotten. The inquisitive character of the title would lead one to suspect that the picture had something to do with sex.

The vital question, however, is a thing apart. It couldn't be anything else with the plethora of melodramatic scenes which are incorporated. The picture has all the earmarks of a serial for there is enough action unfolded for at least thirty reels. You will see a duel, a runaway wife and — what's the use — To outline the action further would be courting trouble. One would become lost in a maze of words. Mr. Walsh has strained at a gnat and swallowed a camel in several instances but particularly where his heroine is concerned.

There are no truths sounded. Instead you see a visualization of lurid action. Two incidents stand out among the conglomeration of ideas. These are a prize fight and a horse race. Miriam Cooper has a task to shine in such a maze of events. That she does it is proof of her ability. Percy Standing and Vincent Coleman are as natural as circumstances permit. PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Should a Husband Forgive?" the much-heralded William Fox special, written and directed by R. A. Walsh and starring Mignon Cooper, will appear at the ———— Theatre beginning ————. This is a spectacular production if one takes into consideration the plentitude of scenes and yet there is a real, human interest story woven into it which keeps pace with its scenic investiture. It may be best described as a problem play cast along lines of melodrama. But nowhere does it lose its entertainment values through any message that might be indicated in the title.

A shadow is cast across some lives and over the threshold of others because a good wife elects to remain silent concerning her past assuming that husbands do not forgive. The shadow lengthens when years later the woman's son gives up the girl he loves because of appearances against her. And though the title sustains itself in the drama one sees unfolded a plethora of dramatic scenes. Ruth Fulton has been brought up amid racing people and horses, and despite her associations she is completely ignorant of the ways of the world. Left alone, she is beset by evil men, but Fate guides her into safe channels when she falls in love with a Southern boy, and the very son of the man who refused to forgive his wife.

He eventually forsakes her when gossip tells him that she has a past. Despite this she saves him from financial ruin by riding his horse to victory, after learning a plot which would have reduced him to poverty. The picture is a gripping one and it makes a universal appeal because of its many angles. The scenes of sporting life include a sensational horse race and a boxing match.

CATCH LINES

Would you forgive your wife if she failed to reveal her past? You may condemn her but what about yourself? Are you perfectly innocent? See how it is answered in the 1920 cinemelodrama, "Should A Husband Forgive?"

See "Should A Husband Forgive?"—a thrilling drama, answering the great problem of the ages, now presented in terms of modern life. Don't miss it.

"Should A Husband Forgive?" You'll never forgive yourself if you miss this thrilling, absorbing, vital, vivid picture. A picture of heart interest and spectacular scenes. See the sensational horse race and the boxing match. Sixty minutes of rich entertainment.

Come and see the quality picture "Should A Husband Forgive?" You will be thrilled, you will be amused, you will be entertained. A picture for every man and wife, sister and brother, lover and sweetheart.

Adventure and romance — thrills and sensations — sentiment and pathos — action and suspense — and humor, too. You will find all these things in "Should A Husband Forgive?"

PROGRAM READER

"Should A Husband Forgive?" has been termed the perfect cinemelodrama by those who have seen it. Surely it is a spectacular picture insofar as its scenic investiture is concerned, yet it contains a vital theme which is unfolded with a wealth of heart interest.

"WHAT EVERY WOMAN LEARNS"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Picturization of an Average Drama

WHILE the reviewer protests that he is not hard boiled he somehow or other could not enthuse over this one. The girl was advised by her grandfather on his death bed to live only for the joy that may be had out of life and so she refuses to wed an ambitious young attorney because of his staid habits and marries a parlor cut-up.

Her choice soon shows that he is of the shallow and worthless type and finally tricks the young attorney into their home where in a drunken spell he shoots him and is later dramatically shot and killed by his wife. The young attorney recovers and after the wife is acquitted of her husband's murder he claims her for his own. The star's role carries no appeal and the murder cannot be justified.

The settings are correct and nearly all interiors. Cast just about measures up to the story. The women may like this picture better than the men. A picturization of an average drama.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, good puller and fairly pleasing; Family, average puller and quite pleasing; Labor, average puller and partly pleasing. Length, 5 reels; released, November 9.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Enid Bennett in "What Every Woman Learns" is the Paramount-Artcraft picture produced by Thomas H. Ince that comes to the ———— Theatre for a ——— days' engagement beginning ————.

This is heralded as a dramatic story of a disillusioned bride who happens to choose the parlor cut-up in preference to the staid youth who was practicing law.

When the girl's grandfather died he admonished her to get all the joys possible out of life and thus she refuses to wed a young man who had just been admitted to the bar. He was too staid and was continually talking about his first case instead of trying to amuse her.

But she marries a young breezy sort of chap who is funny, it seems, all the time; a regular parlor clown. He begs her to allow him to amuse her all through life and she marries him.

The girl is disillusioned a few months after, but bravely bears up. She finds that her husband's comedy was a thin veneer and that he was really a worthless fellow. And he loved to gloat over the attorney because he had won the girl.

In a drunken spell one day he tricks the young attorney into his home and shoots him. Then comes the dramatic situation that the young bride took such a prominent part in. The husband was telephoning the police to tell them that he had discovered the attorney with his wife and had shot him.

But a bullet from the direction of his wife cut short his speech. This is described as being one of the most dramatic productions that Enid Bennett has appeared in for some time.

PROGRAM READER

She refused to wed the staid youth because he bored her at times. The girl felt that she wanted a man who would continually amuse her.

But she drew one that continually abused her instead.

There's a moral here, girls. Beware of the lounge lizard and the parlor clown.

He may have just a thin veneer. When the honeymoon was over one girl knew she made a fatal mistake.

At this theatre next week "What Every Woman Learns" will be shown with Enid Bennett in the star role.

It is a Thomas H. Ince production — a Paramount Artcraft special.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this one the star, producer and brand should of course be emphasized in every announcement. Then use as many catch lines with the title for sniping and throw aways. An invitation mailed to "the lady of the house" may have a special appeal if you "urgently call their attention to the fact that they should give their young unmarried lady friends a treat and help them along in life to make the right choice if they will accompany the lady of the house to see 'What Every Woman Learns,'" etc.

CATCH LINES

Girls should put on their armor and guard against the encroachments of the lounge lizard.

Young women should beware of "geaks" who come bearing smiles because this may be but a thin veneer.

One susceptible debutante actually chooses the parlor clown in preference to the staid but sterling youth.

Every girl has a problem and if she does not decide upon the right man she has a whole lifetime to repent.

"THE BLACK CIRCLE"
(WORLD)

Fast Moving Melodrama Will Please Majority

FRANK REICHER, the director of the World picture, has kept everyone in the cast on their toes every minute and as a result we have a very swift moving melodrama with the essential romance and many pleasant light comedy touches.

Many of the incidents have the fight and escape punches generally found in serials, and being melodrama, it is entitled to become rather far-fetched in spots, especially where a star with a feather weight physique is able to carelessly topple a big brutal heavyweight.

But this is a good story with a pretty love sentiment and is well directed. It is capably enacted and has a clear continuity. Scenically, and for settings, photography and laboratory work, it is up to standard. The hero and heroine, discharged from a big city daily, take charge of a small newspaper in a mountain town and clean up a gang of whiskey runners. A fast-moving melodrama that will entertain the majority.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, less than average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Labor, big puller and entirely pleasing. Length, 5 reels; released, Oct. 19.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Creighton Hale and Virginia Valli are featured in the World picture which comes to the ———— Theatre for a ——— day's engagement beginning ————.

Mr. Hale appears as a young cub reported on a big daily and Miss Valli has the role of a young woman reporter from a small city newspaper trying to get the big city atmosphere by reporting for the metropolitan publication.

When they trade assignments and she is called upon the carpet for the angle of the story the young cub promptly confesses that he wrote the offending story and they are both discharged. As her father is going to run for Sheriff in the mountain district town he wants a bright young man to run his newspaper during the campaign and the young couple go to the small town where they run into all sort of difficulties.

For there is a battle on between the whiskey runners and the good people of the district. Very melodramatic incidents occur in fast succession and there are plenty of fights between the contending elements.

Finally the girl's father is elected and the gang rounded up. And many former officials are exposed. The hero and heroine are then ready to start housekeeping in a clarified atmosphere.

PROGRAM READER

He was only a cub reporter and she was a cubbess reporteress on a big city daily.

When they traded assignments she got in trouble about the story he wrote for her.

City editors are just horrible things anyway and this ambitious young couple quit because they were discharged.

When they visited her father's home town in the mountains and started to run his paper things happened. And they happened fast. They were melodramatically thrown against a gang of whiskey runners with rifles and all sort of exciting things happened to the hero and heroine.

"The Black Circle" comes to this theatre next week and is cleverly enacted by Creighton Hale, Virginia Valli and a notable cast. It is a World production.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture you should exploit it as a melodrama of newspaper people and whiskey runners in a mountain district. Creighton Hale and Virginia Valli should be mentioned to secure whatever pulling qualities they have for your box office.

For a striking advertising stunt a black circle in which is merely inserted the words: "At The ———— Theatre ————" you have an attractive appeal without even naming the feature. Just print the theatre name and date of showing inside the black circle.

CATCH LINES

Here's where a "Cub" puts the "Rep" into "Reporter" which wins him an editorship and troubles innumerable.

"Oh, for the life of a newspaperman," he cried — and he many times escaped losing his own life on the job.

Thrills and romance in the life of a live newspaper editor in the mountains where whiskey runners operated.

"CROOKED STRAIGHT"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Will Suitably Entertain Majority

THIS is a little more dramatic than the general run of Charles Ray offerings. The quaint comedy touches are not so frequent although the pathos and human elements are present and have their appeal.

There are some highly melodramatic incidents portrayed here, and a slight love sentiment. Mr. Ray again proves that he is an accomplished actor and his followers will undoubtedly enjoy this picture.

The country boy is robbed of his life savings when he arrives in the big city and then turns crook until his partner is shot when he goes into the country again to take care of his pal's children.

Although this cannot truthfully be branded as a great picture it possesses charm and will suitably entertain the majority. Direction, continuity and cast are up to present day standards.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and generally pleasing; Elite, good puller and generally pleasing; Family, good puller and entirely pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairy pleasing. Length, 5 reels; released November 9.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Charles Ray in "Crooked Straight" is the attraction billed at the ———— theatre for a ———— days' run beginning ————.

This is a Thomas H. Ince picture produced for Paramount-Artcraft and the author of this story also wrote "The Egg Crate Wallop" and "Bill Henry," recent screen successes of Mr. Ray.

The star appears as the country youth who has saved a thousand dollars and is going to the city to make good. He is gathered in by a confidence team and the money is taken away from him on the day of his arrival.

Hungry and discouraged, he is driven to become a partner to an expert safe blower, and for several years this strange partnership lasts. One night the youth catches sight of the confidence man who had robbed him and a fight occurs. This same man hears the youth and his partner planning a safe burglary that same night and tips the police.

When the house is raided the partner is shot and by a series of thrilling escapes and encounters the youth succeeds in getting the body of his wounded partner through the cordon of police and escapes.

After his pal passes away the youth goes to the country to take care of the two children of his late partner. It is then that romance enters his life.

But his past rises up to confront him again when the county fair brings city crooks, one of them the confidence man, who is trying to swindle the father of his sweetheart.

There is said to be pathos and thrills with romance in this latest Charles Ray picture, "Crooked Straight."

PROGRAM READER

He was standing out in a terrific rainstorm without a friend in the great city — and stone broke.

The youth from the country town was hungry.

It was night and he was gazing eagerly into the lighted window of a lunch room where a tempting array of pastry was displayed.

This boy was straight — and then,

Temptation entered his life and he grasped the dangling line in desperation. For a long time he was "Crooked Straight" until a piece of cold lead cut off his pal.

And then a girl appeared.

"Crooked Straight" is the title of the Thomas H. Ince picture coming to this theatre next week.

It is a Paramount-Artcraft and it stars Charles Ray.

SUGGESTIONS

When you have booked this picture the appeal is, as every exhibitor knows, on keeping the star's name prominent, as Mr. Ray is reputed to have a very large following. An then mention of course that this is a Paramount-Artcraft and produced by Thomas H. Ince, all familiar names.

Your next best bet is announcing some of the former pictures in which Charles Ray appeared, such as "Bill Henry," "The Egg Crate Wallop," "Hay Foot, Straw Foot," etc. Tell them that "Crooked Straight" is the story of a country boy who came to the city, went wrong, and then — "came back."

CATCH LINES

A country boy runs against the hard knocks of the big city and then deal around a few knocks himself.

When you are hungry and friendless in a rainstorm on a dark night,— well, that's no place for a respectable bakery window.

A piece of cold lead took lodging in the torso of his pal and this set the youth thinking,— but it took a girl to save him.

(POOR RELATIONS)

Ask your patrons to come to your theatre and learn how to solve a difficult problem. Emphasize that it is a heart story — a story of the country and its simple ways.

Make mention that it is written and staged by King Vidor, the man responsible for "The Other Half." Mention that Florence Vidor takes the leading role. As there are no dramatic moments it would be best to concentrate upon the title and bring out its value in catch lines. But make much of the theme and its homely character. You might advertise it as a picture of the heart and home.

"THE TREMBLING HOUR"

(UNIVERSAL)

Well Knit Drama of Crooks and Mystery

THIS is the mystery crook story at its best with an excellently developed continuity of an unusually original plot.

There is a reason for everything and everything is within reason. Romance is relegated to second place in so far as devoting much footage to love scenes is concerned, most of the six reels being given over to the story of what happens when a gang of confidence workers attempt to put over a job that is complicated by the murder of the man selected for the "gyp."

The plot begins with the hero in prison for a major crime of which he is guilty and moves steadily forward with absorbing interest due to the fact that the element of mystery is carried along to the climax and because a logical reason is shown for each step in the story's unfolding, including the hero's reform. We don't believe any audience will be sure of its "guess" concerning the outcome of this one. Therefore we can but label "The Trembling Hour" a success. It holds interest and its outcome is is unfathomable.

The acting of the entire cast is good. The direction is excellent the staging is faultless and the titles used sparingly, are in good taste. Length, 6 reels.—J. S. DICKERSON.

THE CAST

George Belding.....Henry Barrows
Bull Barnes.....Willis Marks
John Belding.....Clyde Hopkins
Alice Belding.....Edna Shipman
Margy Webb.....Helen Jerome Eddy
Mrs. Byrnie.....Gertrude Astor
Pauline.....Anna May Walthall

Story by Kenneth Clark.
Scenario by Doris Schroeder.
Directed by George Seigmann.

SUGGESTIONS

In view of the fact that this is an unusually absorbing story with no great name in the cast we would get out in the open and advertise this as an example of "fewer and better pictures" and a proof that "the play's the thing."

We believe that this picture will make good with any audience which likes mystery stories, which most people do.

We would bill this as a dramatic gem, one of the few features which will hold water when the acid test for logic is applied. We would say that it is as good as "Under Cover," "Through the Wall," an old Vitagraph, or any other good mystery picture you have played which pleased. Compare this with some picture which did please so you won't have to base all your appeal just on your say so. You shouldn't tell them the story of this picture or any other mystery production, because that kills interest.

If you go in for personal guarantees or wish to begin, this is a good feature to work on. We wouldn't use too many scene stills that tended in any way to give away the plot. It is a good subject for a "teaser" campaign, providing you think this method of advertising is good stuff, especially on a serious picture.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Trembling Hour," an example of what may be expected of "fewer and better" pictures, has been booked for showing at the ———— theatre beginning ————.

The management believes it is offering a photoplay in this new special production which will please every person who enjoys the mystery picture at its best. Especially will it recommend itself to those who like pictures where the outcome is difficult to foresee and where there is a logical reason for everything which is done in building to a picture climax. The management will personally guarantee that this one will "hold water." In fact we will defy any person to guess who committed the murder which is the big question in "The Trembling Hour." This is an all star cast production with perfect types playing each of the several big roles in the feature. In fact we have labelled this as one of the banner productions of the season. Those who do not see it will miss a rare dramatic treat. Don't think "The Trembling Hour" is melodramatic. It is mystery drama at it's best with no heroics injected to spoil it's true to life flavor.

CATCH LINES

"A man is murdered. Any one of several persons might have committed the crime including the hero who would have been exonerated because he is suffering from shell shock. We can't tell you more about this plot without spoiling your enjoyment if you see the picture. Just take our word for it that it is a worthwhile production."

"This is an entertaining and absorbing mystery photoplay which will please every lover of well-constructed screen stories. A crime is committed. Who is guilty? That is the principal theme of this picture. There is a romance too. You will like this production."

(MYSTERY OF THE YELLOW ROOM)

identity of the master criminal. But did he succeed? Did the girl recover? And what of her fiance; was he under suspicion? Clue after clue was offered to untangle the web. What came of them? Were they punctured and found to contain no evidence to solve the crime? These questions will be answered next ————, when the first Realart picture, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," is shown. We consider this the best mystery story ever screened. It completely baffles solution. You think you can place your hand on the GUILTY ONE, and, lo and behold! you are wrong. Come and see this wonderful picture — a picture directed by Emile Chautard.

SUGGESTIONS

You can bill this picture and feature it in the columns of your paper as the best mystery photoplay ever made. You can't go too strong on this.

The Hours a Man Spends Alone With His Projector

DURING the hours when the show is on, when the projectionist is alone with his machine, he finds plenty of reasons for appreciating its good qualities and quickly learns of its bad ones. If the machine causes him to spend unnecessary time in adjustments and leaves him in a perpetual state of "expecting something to go wrong," it renders him fretful—nervous and upset.

WHICH MEANS LESS EFFICIENCY
IN THE PROJECTION ROOM

This condition will generally cause a loss of interest in his machine and a constant desire to "try something else." It is well to remember that the average man will always do his best when he is equipped to do so.

The Simplex is so constructed as to meet every projection room requirement and our claim of universal satisfaction is based on the fact that the men who use Simplex never change, for it is built as they themselves would build it.

When again you learn of a man who contemplates changing his old machine, ask him what he intends installing.

Throughout our electrically-operated laboratory we utilize wonder machines — machines of highest mechanical perfection.

But, machinery is brainless — chemicals are fickle — so at the points where mechanical devices fail, stand guard our skilled artisans whose verdict against the less-than-perfect is: "they shall not pass!"

So, by proper use of scientific implements combined with the best human equation, we obtain results not otherwise possible.

IN THE largest auditorium in the city, on Saturday afternoon, a great crowd of men and women watched in silence the last scenes of a pictured drama. The music of an orchestra died away, the paling vision on the screen faded into darkness, and there breathed from the still throng a half-suppressed sigh. It lasted but a moment. Then the spectators streamed out into the sunlight, in a strange quietude, but with eyes that shone. Curious effects, one would say, to follow what is called an entertainment—at best, no more than a fancied tale, told thru the cunning combination of human and photographic mimicry. Yet the mood was something finer than the mere exhilaration or contentment that may be created by any appealing exhibition of artistry. These people were not only impressed; they were genuinely moved. None of them, we think, will deem it strange that we turn for a day from the stirring or momentous or tragical themes of material existence to glance at this unique product of imagination. For it has the distinction of being an artistic and moral achievement. The photoplay is called "The Miracle Man." It is a miracle picture.

Its elusive yet unforgettable quality is revealed in the fact that the story may be told in two sentences, yet might not be conveyed in words filling as many pages. A gang of tenderloin criminals hear of the strange powers of a "patriarch" in a remote village, whose beauty of life and faith have helped to bring health and peace of mind to the suffering; assuming innocence and belief, they surround him, and stage a pretended "miracle," thru which they plan to exploit the sightless healer as a business enterprise. Their cunning succeeds beyond all their hopes. But unconsciously they fall under the spell which they had sought to use—they are themselves transformed, lifted by faith from depravity to a cleansed, ennobled manhood and womanhood.

That is all. A theme of elemental simplicity, yet as complex as the human heart; as modern as yesterday's news, yet as old as the hills of Galilee. It is the simplicity of the story and its telling that makes the picture's success so striking. It has none of the magnificent settings and ingenious theatrical illusions of those spectacles which have evoked acclaim and wonderment. Its subtle power is comparable only to that of one other production, "Broken Blossoms." And that searching drama has the special appeal of an idealized foreign atmosphere, of a suggestion of livid horror which stirs by sheer pain the depths of feeling. But the magnetism of this story lies in its scenes of beauty and tranquillity no less than in those of sordidness and ferocity. Its passion is masterful, but its quietude is irresistible. It steals into the heart like an exquisite poem, lives in the memory like a haunting song.

Artistic photography is today no exceptional thing. Acting which the magic of the camera can translate into visualized emotion is not unusual. But here the arts of human and mechanical representation have been blended by genius into a new accomplishment. The makers of this picture have all but photographed human thought. One sees portrayed upon the screen the spiritual conflict between good and evil which is the essential drama of the soul and of all human existence.

Thus the magic of the camera produces effects for the description of which words alone provide no effective medium of expression. There are episodes in the Chinatown dens which would be memorable by reason of their appalling realism. Like glimpses of a dehumanized world are those contortions of the pretended cripple, whereby he preys upon the mercy of passersby; the cold villainy and rapacity of the leading criminal, who plans to debauch goodness itself; the feral cunning and depravity of the girl who is the lure. Yet these things pass from the mind as the panorama carries the vision to scenes of gentleness and innocence.

Masking their purpose with studied similitude of meekness and appealing need, the four creatures from the underworld insinuate themselves into the life of the "patriarch." Speech and hearing and sight gone, his spirit is already half withdrawn from the world, and he is easily made the instrument of their design, altho even thru the silence and darkness that envelop him there reaches his soul some haunting sense of the evil that envelops him. He has no armor against it save his purity, no weapon save his faith. Yet with these he overcomes.

The pretended "miracle," adroitly wrought before the eyes of a bewildered crowd, is a triumph of spectacular falsehood; as the loathsome "cripple" crawls painfully up the cottage path to the motionless figure of the old man, then slowly wrenches himself, with feigned convulsions of anguish, into human shape, one thrills to the emotions of the rapt throng.

But even while the creature fawns in a simulation of gratitude his face stiffens in lines of amazement and terror. He sees toiling toward him another victim, not listed in the criminals' drama of deception—a tiny village child, with twisted limbs and crutched arms that can barely support the frail little body. He has seen the "miracle," and believes. Faith touches his childish soul and draws him forward. His gaze fixed upon the uplifted face of the patriarch, he drags himself, like a wounded bird, up the narrow path. The pitiful little figure falters, lurches on, halts again; drops one tiny crutch and all but topples over—then see! the other crutch falls, the child stumbles, rights himself and runs forward with wavering steps to clasp the outstretched hand. A mere trick of clever stage play when told in words, the pictured scene is reality itself to the spectators; thru the darkened theater there runs the thrill as of a soundless prayer of thanksgiving.

Here might easily have been fashioned a climax from which the succeeding episodes would drop away in fatally diminishing conviction and appeal. The triumph of the story is that what follows seems to give authenticity and still deeper significance to the audacious conception. To those under the spell of the picture the incredible has become real—they have seen physical infirmity yield to the power of faith; yet no less enthralling, no less miraculous, is what they witness now in the sway of that power over minds diseased and natures perverted by criminality. The supreme heights of the drama are reached as it portrays the silent conquering of hardened wills, the physical and spiritual regeneration of those who had thought to debase and exploit the loftiest instincts of humanity.

Those who contributed to the creation of this miracle picture have earned all the rewards it may bring them, for they have revealed potential values in the photoplay which only genius might develop. The acting itself could have no higher praise than the statement that it gives reality to scenes which might easily have been made ludicrous or offensive. Thomas Meighan as the master criminal, Lon Chaney as the repulsive "cripple" and Joseph Dowling as the patriarch give portrayals that realize the very spirit of the theme. One would like to know the name of the boy whose lameness was reflected, as one sees it in real life, even in his drawn, smiling face. But perhaps the most appealing bit of portraiture is that of Betty Compson. The transformation which she shows—from the feline creature of the tenderloin to the awakened and purified woman at the end—is far more than a trick of make-up and manner; she suggests the cleansing of the girl's whole being. The subtleties of pantomimic art have had few finer manifestations than that which appears in the fleeting changes of her expression; one sees the mask of innocence, assumed at first in mocking masquerade, become the outward sign of a veritable transfiguration within.

Yet to give expression to the admirable work of these artists there was needed the creative genius of a master direction. This was the contribution of George Loane Tucker. Its most striking evidence is the investing of a tale of daring fancy with the searching power of verity—the literal picturization of the miraculous. But hardly less notable is the restraint and discrimination with which the subject is handled. There is no false idealization of vice, no mawkish pretense that it is not essentially cruel and corrupt and treacherous. Nor are the episodes of regeneration made offensive by degrading sacred themes to the uses of theatrical interpolation.

It is precisely because of this spirit of high-minded artistic endeavor on the part of the producer that one must deplore the marring of the harmony by a stupid censorship. Not only have scenes of vital significance been cut to satisfy arbitrary rules, but titles which expressed essential characteristics have been altered so as to obscure the story they are supposed to illuminate. Having seen the picture in its first public state, before it passed under the heavy-handed editing in this state, we can affirm that except for one picture—shown only momentarily and later eliminated, we believe, by the producer himself—there was not a single episode or line to detract from the wholesomeness of the story. Not the least proof of the genius of the production is that its beauty and power shine even thru the disfigurements perpetrated by official ineptitude.

When this picture was first shown in New York one newspaper critic made the profound observation that it might interest immature minds but would have no appeal for "the sophisticated audiences of Broadway." Yet it filled a theater on that highly intellectual thorofare for three weeks at $2 a seat, and is still being shown at cheaper houses in the same cultured territory. The picture derives its reality from the fact that it expresses unuttered feelings and aspirations of the multitudes who witness it, emotions and sentiments which lie deep in the hearts of men and women everywhere. Its appeal is sentimental; but so is the human mind.

It has been shown that thru the magic of the motion picture the people can be dazzled by pageantry, thrilled by magnificent spectacles and the simulation of dramatic perils. But they become sated with these mechanical ingenuities and extravagances. It is when the secret places of the heart are opened to them that the response is greatest, as to this revelation of the silent power of faith and purity, in a story unfolding in the beauty and fragrance of a flower.

We would not envy the man or woman, however intellectual, who could see this simple drama unmoved, who would not confess deriving from it a new sense of kinship with humanity and a deeper understanding of the spiritual forces of existence.

BRENTWOOD PRODUCTIONS

The four great Brentwood pictures of this season have towered like giants above the mass of photoplays. They have met universal approval and the highest praise by press, public and exhibitors. "Greater than Excellent" is the popular verdict.

"The Turn In The Road" was acclaimed the second greatest play of the year. "Better Times," "The Other Half" and "Poor Relations" were all declared its equal. This is another Robertson-Cole series of success.

Critics said it was a wholesome, homely telling of a great truth, the unmasking of the snobbishness of a culture founded on dollars. It is so true that almost every man and woman in the country will feel that some part of it is from his or her experience.

The stamp of a great and simple Americanism of the genuine sort is indelibly wrough into the story. A real treat for the patrons of the silent drama.

The Other Half

Tom Hamlin, the critic of the Motion Picture News, in reviewing "The Other Half" said:

"A drama of peculiar timeliness and of most wholesome appeal. A compelling human interest story splendidly directed and with clear continuity. The photography and sets are perfect and the cast is exceptionally well fitted.

"The reviewer considers this one of the best pictures produced for several months. It is in a class by itself. It is natural and absorbing. This picture should draw heavily."

But wives are suspicious of things that are risque,
They somestimes drop in at the verge of a kiss.

Then a soft headed youth is frequently prone,
With a blunt paper knife to carve his wish bone.

Each morn she appeared in her dainty silk hose,
As you easily can note; they're all at her toes.

The boss takes her out to learn how to shimmy,
She shows him herself, she does by Jimminy.

A PICTURE full of snap and ginger on the latest love angle, which fascinates every human being by its vital pertinence. It is the second Constance Talmadge "First National" release, following her tremendous success, "A Temperamental Wife."

She vamps them at work,

And if they don't tumble,
she falls at their feet.

And does she use art? She does, you can bet;
This virtuous vamp lands them all in her net.

Classifying Your Theatre

MANY years ago the beloved "Pop" Lubin would on semi-annual occasions issue a statement, the keynote of which was:

"Motion picture theatres must become classified — and they will become classified. There must be theatres for the higher type of production and others for the moderate priced offering."

In those days little attention was paid to "Pop" Lubin's forecast. The indifference of the industry to the question of classification may be ascribed to two reasons. For one thing, the quality of productions did not vary so widely. Also, ten cents was considered close to the maximum in admission prices, and between the five cent house and the ten cent theatre with the available supply of pictures taken into consideration there did not seem to be much room for classification.

That was the situation in the dimly remembered years of 1912 and 1913.

THIS week Hiram Abrams declares in an exclusive article in MOTION PICTURE NEWS:

"Every line of merchandise, be it automobiles or rugs or clothes or what not, is divided into shopping districts, so that people know where to buy the highest priced goods, the popular priced goods or the cheap goods. Every line of merchandise — except films. We throw all of our productions on the market and expect the public to smile when they pay high admission prices for inferior goods."

This is the keynote of Mr. Abram's article which again brings to attention the subject of theatre classification.

We are anxious to hear the views of our exhibitor readers on the opinions set forth by Mr. Abrams. The problem is an exhibitor's one; for, by his direct contact with the public, he is the party to suffer first and most if the present method of exhibiting pictures is wrong.

EXHIBITORS will probably agree whole-heartedly with Mr. Abrams' general theme; but they will disagree on the means of curing the ills which he points out. Their differing opinions should bring forth a most interesting discussion.

For instance, exhibitors as we know them will rush to emphasize the declaration that there is danger in a varying scale of admission prices; a high price on one day to meet a high rental, a moderate price the next day for a cheaper offering.

Such a course, for example, plays havoc with the "theatre-going habit" — and exhibitors tell us that the "habit" means a great deal in the box office figures when totalled for the year.

Varying admission prices also bring complications in that an exhibitor can never tell when a picture he is showing to-day for a twenty-five cent admission is not apt to provide greater satisfaction than the "special" which was exhibited the day before at a fifty cent scale. Patrons can't figure how this can happen — and when in doubt they criticize.

BUT the exhibitor who dodges this danger runs into the further obstacles that Mr. Abrams points out. His standard admission price is not counterbalanced by a standard in quality of entertainment.

How does this affect the patron?

Is there any boomerang in charging a standard admission price for entertainment that is apt to disappoint the patron one day and make him wildly enthusiastic the next?

Mr. Abrams says there is. And he says the answer rests with the exhibitor.

It would seem that this situation prevails already with the larger first-run houses of the country. The feature attractions at these houses may vary in quality, but the wise showman has seen to it that through his music and other features the program as a whole adheres to a certain standard of satisfaction.

The problem of definitely classifying a theatre becomes more difficult when we step from these fifty-odd first run houses to the large neighborhood house and the theatres that are leaders in medium-sized cities. Still further complications enter the problem for the small town man. Or, on the other hand, the present year's rentals are automatically solving the problem for the town playhouse.

"What Is Wrong With Films Today?"

Hiram Abrams of United Artists Answering the Oft Repeated Query Declares Fault Lies Not With Films But With Manner They are Offered to the Public

The following article, a dissertation of the query "What is wrong with films?" together with a prescription logical in its reasoning and probing in its searching ingredients, has been written exclusively for MOTION PICTURE NEWS, by Hiram Abrams, President of United Artists Corporation, and one of the most dominant and experienced men in the industry.

By HIRAM ABRAMS

FROM many sides the question "What's wrong with films?" is thrown at us. We see it in reviews of photoplays; we hear it from exhibitors; we get it in our conversations with the public.

People talk about the mediocrity of picture production. They speak of the dead level of films and jump to the conclusion that good pictures are not made any more.

As one who believes in films and in the present and future possibilities of the picture business, I have found myself on the defensive time and again, but it is only recently that the realization has come to me that there is perhaps a just ground for the criticism. When a man asks me to-day "What's wrong with films?" I can unhesitatingly say "Nothing," when I know that there is something radically wrong with our method of exhibiting pictures.

Yesterday, to-day and to-morrow, and as long as motion pictures are made, three kinds of films will be shown to the public. We will always have poor films; we will always have fair films; we will always have some great films. If people see only the poor films, we can understand their criticism; if they see only fair films, we can understand their criticism; if they were to see only the great films, there would be no criticism.

Now, the merchandising of films is no different from the merchandising of any other commodity. We sell to a public that is made up of all classes of buyers and for that reason we must always supply cheap films, medium-priced films and high-priced films.

But we make our tremendous mistake in showing all three kinds of films on a flat basis of admission prices to the public, irrespective of the quality of the films that we are showing. In other words, this week a theatre shows a picture that costs hundreds of thousands of dollars to produce, and say $1,000 to rent, and the audiences are satisfied. Next week, the same theatre shows a film that cost, perhaps twenty-five or thirty thousand dollars to produce, and maybe $200 to rent, yet the admission prices for the cheaper film are just the same as the admission prices for the big film.

Is it any wonder that audiences criticize the picture business when they find themselves compelled to pay high admission prices for cheap films?

Suppose the Metropolitan Opera House runs Grand Opera this week at Grand Opera prices; next week, at the same Grand Opera prices, the house runs a burlesque show; the week after, at Grand Opera prices, a jazz musical comedy is put on. How long would the Metropolitan Opera House, on such a basis, retain any patronage at all?

Yet we are doing exactly this kind of thing, when we run big, expensive films and cheap films in the same house at identical admission prices.

I am not leading, in my argument, to the elimination of the popular-priced house. I am a firm believer in the theory that the motion picture industry has been built on low admission prices — the poor man's amusement — and I would be the last one to advocate the taking of motion pictures out of the class of popular amusements.

But the making of motion pictures has grown. We have gone beyond the dead level of production but we have not gone beyond the dead level of retailing our product. There is an enormous public that wants the highest type of entertainment and is willing to pay high prices for such entertainment. It has been demonstrated repeatedly that the motion picture camera can and does furnish entertainment of this quality. The dissatisfaction of the public grows, not out of high prices for good films, but out of high prices for cheap films.

There is within our immediate grasp a sure remedy for this faulty method of retailing, and the sooner we adopt the remedy, the sooner will we have a satisfied public.

I believe that the theatres with high admission prices should dedicate themselves absolutely to showing only the biggest and most expensive productions. These productions should be put on for long runs, so that both the producer and the theatre may get the fullest possible return on the investment.

Let the houses with popular admission prices show the cheaper films. In this way the public will be able to gauge the quality of a film by the admission price charged. It is certain, therefore, that when they pay low admission prices, they will expect to see a cheaper film and will then be fully satisfied that they have gotten just what they paid for.

I need only point to the many houses that change their admission prices with different grades of film, as an indication of the underlying truth of my argument. These houses are attempting to meet the situation by charging their audiences in accordance with the merit of the film. Whether or not, however, an exhibitor can be more successful on a one-price admission basis, or a sliding scale of admission prices, based on the film he is showing, he must determine for himself.

This much I hold to be absolutely true, however; the exhibitor who maintains a fixed scale of admission prices from which he will not depart under any circumstances, must either show his public exclusively films that are worth the admission price he charges, or he is selling ill will to his patrons.

The picture houses with high admission prices can cater exclusively to audiences that want to see the best in films and are willing to pay admission prices warranted by such productions.

Now, no producing organization has a monopoly on quality productions. I am confident that there are enough splendid films made each year to supply the theatres charging high admission prices with more than enough product for their programs.

It means, of course, that theatres must keep themselves free to procure every desirable film that justifies the admission prices charged and the length of run contemplated. Theatres that bind themselves, so that they must run pictures as they are served to them, will continue the evil that is causing the public dissatisfaction, by showing good, bad and indifferent films on a high, one price basis to the public, and every time a bad or indifferent film is shown at the same admission prices that are charged for the good films, the public dissatisfaction will grow.

Every line of merchandise, be it automobiles or rugs or clothes or what not, is divided into shopping districts, so that people know where to buy the highest-priced goods, the popular-priced goods or the cheap goods. Every line of merchandise, except films. We throw all of our productions on the market and expect the public to smile when they pay high admission prices for inferior goods.

Let the picture theatres divide themselves in shopping districts and cater to the public absolutely without misrepresentation. Then the theatergoer will know that for a high admission price he will not see an inferior picture. This done, and films sold to the public on an exclusive basis of quality, you will find that this talk about "What's wrong with films?" will cease.

Famous-Lasky Makes Big Stock Issue

Special Stockholders Meeting Called to Authorize Issue of $20,000,000 Convertible Stock at 100 par and to Increase Common Stock by 250,000 shares

IN order to provide for the extension of its business the Famous Players–Lasky Corporation has called a special stockholders' meeting to authorize an issue of $20,000,000 8% cumulative, convertible preferred stock $100 par, and an increase in common stock of 250,000 shares with no par value.

It is the intention to issue at this time $10,000,000 of the preferred stock. Of the 250,000 shares of additional common stock approximately 182,000 shares will be set aside to provide for the conversion not only of the $10,000,000 preferred stock now to be issued, but also of the $10,000,000 authorized but unissued preferred.

Finance Committee of Bankers

Subject to the necessary stockholders' action, holders of record November 13, 1919, will have the right to subscribe at par up to November 28th to one share of the new convertible preferred for each two shares of the common held. On or before November 28th payment in full must be made to the Empire Trust Co.

The $10,000,000 preferred is being underwritten by a syndicate headed by Dominick & Dominick and Hallgarten & Co. acting in conjunction with Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

A finance committee has been created on which large banking interests will be represented. H. D. H. Connick, Vice-President of the American International Corporation, has resigned that position in order to become an active executive of Famous Players-Lasky where he will be chairman of the Finance Committee. Other members of the Finance Committee will be Frederick G. Lee, president of Irving Trust Co.; Gayer G. Dominick of Dominick & Dominick; Maurice Wertheim of Hallgarten & Co.; and Adolph Zukor, president of the corporation.

The new Preferred Stock carries the privilege of conversion, at the option of the holder, into common stock at $110 per share up to and including November 30, 1920; at $115 to November 30, 1921; and at $120 thereafter, with an adjustment of dividends. Provision will be made, also, for a reduction of the conversion price if additional common stock is issued at less than $100 per share.

The balance sheet of the Corporation as of September 27, 1919, giving effect to the sale of $10,000,000 of Preferred, shows net assets, not including good will, of $22,326,443 or 223 per cent of the total amount of Preferred to be issued. Net Earnings before taxes for the first six months of 1919 amounted to $2,439,337 or at the rate of nearly $5,000,000 for the year.

In addition to the facts submitted above, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has issued a detailed statement to its stockholders wherein are set forth, among other things, the following items of special interest. A finance committee is to be created to supervise capital expenditures, salaries, advances and loans; without its consent no additional shares of common stock can be issued. This finance committee, after the annual meeting of 1920, shall consist of three persons elected from among the directors annually by the preferred stockholders and two by the common stockholders.

The books of the Corporation shall be audited at least once during each fiscal year by a certified public or chartered accountant.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation was organized under the laws of New York, July 19, 1916, and upon organization it acquired the entire capital stock of Famous Players Film Company and Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, Inc., and later, all of the stock of Bosworth, Inc., Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Paramount Pictures Company. All these companies are now merged into the present corporation, and additional interests have been acquired from time to time in further collateral enterprises.

In addition to distributing its own product, the Corporation has the exclusive right to distribute the out-put of several other well-known producers. In the United States alone there are estimated to be about 15,000 motion-picture theatres, of which the Corporation counts as its customers over 11,000. It has film exchanges in twenty-eight of the principal cities of the United States, and maintains a separate selling organization for its foreign trade.

Buffalo Exhibitors Bar Soliciting in Theatres

DURING the Red Cross drive there will be no speeches by Four-Minute Men or other workers from the stages of Buffalo's motion picture houses, nor will there be any solicitations for contributions in the aisles of the theatres. The exhibitors have decided on this move because of the complaints received from patrons who were annoyed during the Liberty Loan, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A. and other campaigns, because it breaks the continuity of the show, because patrons come to the theatre to be entertained and not to be annoyed by solicitors, and because the emergency has passed. In the future the only place where workers may approach patrons of Buffalo theatres will be in the lobbies, outside the theatre proper and there only on certain nights to be decided on by the managers.

Capitol, World's Biggest Theatre, Has a Gala Opening

The long-awaited premiere of the Capitol Theatre took place Oct. 24th, after nineteen months' of preparation. The crush for seats proved so great prior to the opening of the box office that the glass doors were broken down by the throng and considerable damage done. No one was hurt, however, in the shower of glass, although traffic was interrupted.

The opening programme at "the largest theatre in the world" included Douglas Fairbanks in his first independent motion picture, "His Majesty, the American," Ned Wayburn's Demi Tasse Revue and the concert features by Arthur Pryor's Capitol band, in addition to numerous motion picture and stage novelties.

A reception, giving opportunity for an inspection of the structure, was scheduled for 7 o'clock and the performance started at 8. Ordinarily two performances will be given daily, including Sunday, with continuous performances from 12:15 noon till 5:15 and from 5:45 in the evening until 11:15 o'clock.

First National Exhibitors Hold Meeting in Cleveland

There were over sixty Ohio exhibitors present at the meeting of the stockholders of the First National Exhibitor's Circuit of Ohio, which was held in Cleveland the first two days of last week. At this meeting reports of the year were read and approved, especially that part wherein a sizable dividend was declared. Stockholders were delighted with the way First National pictures are coming, and were still further pleased with the new pictures, "The Thunderbolt" and "Back to Nature," which was screened privately while the meeting was in session.

Important Trip by American Film Man

Harry Roth, secretary and treasurer of the Forward Film Distributors, Inc., is leaving New York on Tuesday, October 28, for an extensive trip through Europe and Great Britain on behalf of his corporation. His object is to sign contracts with various foreign concerns with whom tentative arrangements have been made to act as resident buyer for them in this country.

He is also taking with him sample prints of the first two subjects acquired by this company, "The Forfeit," featuring House Peters, and "The Unbroken Promise," featuring Jane Miller.

His trip is expected to take at least three months.

First National on Hulsey-Lynch Dea

In No Wise Affects Hulsey's Position With First National and Circuit is Amply Protected Despite all Rumors; First National Franchise of Binding Character

FOLLOWING the announcement by E. H. Hulsey, of Dallas, that he has consolidated his theatre interests in the Southwest with those of S. A. Lynch in the Southeast, an official statement is made by First National Exhibitors' Circuit which explains its refusal to deny or affirm rumors of the amalgamation.

"There was no aspect of the proposition," says J. D. Williams, manager of the Circuit, "that in the least degree affected Mr. Hulsey's position with First National. Every member knew that he was absolutely loyal to the organization, and that whatever affiliation he made would only serve to strengthen the Circuit's theatre representation in the territory for which he owns the franchise. Satisfied of this, we saw no necessity for intruding on Mr. Hulsey's plan with any statement of explanation which, at best, could only anticipate one of two things — either that he would consolidate, or that he would not.

Hulsey's Position Unchanged

"First National's home office has the privilege of accepting or rejecting any and all contracts for bookings, and because of this, the Circuit was amply protected in any contingency, had one arisen. Had there been any truth in the reports that Mr. Hulsey was disposing of his theatres to Mr. Lynch, the situation, so far as First National was concerned, would have remained unchanged.

"No First National franchise can be disposed of, by any member, without first respecting the rules and regulations controlling it, and these are of a character that preclude any possibility of changes in our territorial strength that would be detrimental to the Circuit. Mr. Hulsey's franchise is equivalent to a rating of four and one-half per cent of First National's total holdings.

"He continues as a member of the Board of Directors, and this fact, in itself, is an obvious indication that his consolidation with Mr. Lynch does not bring any change in his official connection with First National, and that it does not affect in the slightest his outright and individual ownership of the Circuit franchise for his territory.

"The amount of rumor that attended his affiliation with Mr. Lynch was due largely to inspired propaganda which had no foundation in truth. In effect the consolidation has a result to First National almost identical with that which followed the affiliations between N. H. Gordon, our New England franchise owner, and another circuit of theatres in his territory. It simply added more theatres to the large list already owned, controlled or operated by First National members."

Foremost Theatre Designer Moves into New Offices

C. Howard Crane, architect, who has designed and erected over one hundred theatres, among which are many of the largest and finest in the country, wishes to announce that he has moved to his new offices in the Huron Building, southeast corner of Griswold and Congress Streets, Detroit, Mich., where he has the entire fourth floor.

Baremore Appointed to Direct Publicity of United Theatres

J. A. Berst, President of United Pictu Theatres of America, Inc., announces th appointment of R. W. Baremore as Dire tor of Publicity and Advertising who bega his duties this week.

Baremore is a firm believer in the "bo office angle." He figures out his publicit and advertising on a picture with the sol idea of getting the people into the theatr but at the same time making friends an future patrons of every one that buys a admission ticket. His campaigns are bui up to encourage future patronage, to s the people talking about a theatre and s get that invaluable "word of mouth" ad vertising that means money in the bank fo the theatre owner.

United Picture Theatres of America wis their exhibitors to know that their Adver tising and Publicity Department is read at all times to offer suggestions and co operate on any special campaign.

Banquet of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers at the William Penn Hotel, Pittsburgh, at which leading projection experts dined and made merry

THIS AND THAT

Frederick Mercy, of Yakima, Wash., plans to erect a new $150,000 motion pictur theatre in Yakima. The new theatre which will be called the "Liberty" is to have a seating capacity of 1,500. The structure will have three stories, and the upper floors will be converted into offices. Work is to start on the new theatre next summer as soon as the lease of the present tenants occupying the site on East Yakima Avenue is terminated.

The "Dayton Theatre," at Dayton, O., opened last Saturday evening for its initial performance. The new theatre is described as a palatial structure, equipped for the production of stage performances as well as motion pictures. The theatre cost $204,000 and seats about 1,000 persons.

Reports from Allentown, Pa., advise that the "Aurora Theatre" at Pennsburg has opened with a seating capacity of 600 persons. William L. Snyder is the manager. The "Hippodrome Theatre" in Allentown has closed for three weeks pending the completion of extensive alterations.

R. D. Craver, owner of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Atlanta and Richmond, announced this week that negotiations have been completed for the building of a $300,000 motion picture theatre in Norfolk, Va., the theatre to have a seating capacity of 2,400 and to be located at 320-330 Granby Street, at the centre of Norfolk business activities.

"Circle C," is the name of a brand of Western subjects to be filmed by a new company financed by John T. Murphy, a former cowboy, who will be starred in the pictures. Wallace Colburn, who is author of a number of books of poems, and known as the "cowboy poet," will write the scenarios. James Youngdeer has been engaged as director.

Joseph Grossman, who recently sold his theatres in Cleveland, Ohio, is making a tour around the world accompanied by Mrs. Grossman, and while on this trip is now spending some time in Los Angeles getting acquainted with film conditions.

Joe La Rose, production manager of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres is back from his month's bear hunting vacation. The bears are still on their vacation, but Joe brought back a beautiful picture of a trick cat with its head in a dog's mouth. It's a still.

Joe H. Mayer, Universal's special exploitation representative, returned yesterday from Ohio where he has been exploiting "The Right to Happiness" and arranging for the exploitation of "Blind Husbands." Incidentally, Mr. Mayer spent part of his time at Cincinnati arranging for the moving of his household goods to New York. Mrs. Mayer and the two little Mayers accompanied Mr. Mayer on his return trip. They will make their home at Mamaroneck, N. Y.

Picture Ads Discussed by Flinn

Director of Publicity and Advertising for F. P.–Lasky Addresses New York State Mayors

MOTION Picture Advertising" in all its many phrases, was the subject of an address which John C. Flinn, Director of Publicity and Advertising of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, delivered Friday morning before the Motion Picture Committee of the Conference of New York State Mayors, assembled at the Hotel Astor, New York.

W. D. McGuire, Jr., executive secretary of the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, presided, and among those present were officials from Milwaukee, Newark, Washington, D. C., and many other big cities.

Illustrating his talk with a display of national advertisng done by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Mr. Flinn said:

"Paradoxical as it may seem in view of the fact that my department is maintained to exploit Paramount-Artcratt motion pictures, the tone of our national advertising in the past has been not exclusively to sell Paramount-Artcraft pictures as to sell the motion picture. We realized that there was a certain class whose desirability as patrons of the motion picture was unquestioned, but which did not attend as freely as we wished, so we set out to win them over. Then again, as you will notice in our advertising, we are striving to make the motion picture theatre a family affair. Under the old order, the man of the house can go to his lodge, but he must go alone; the woman of the house can go to her literary club, but she must go alone; and the children must find some form of recreation of their own. But in the modern motion picture theatre the entire family, young and old alike, has a mutual amusement, something that appeals to all of them equally. And that is the big value of the motion picture we have been trying and will continue to try to point out to the public.

"Unlike any other great enterprise, we have nothing to sell but service — service to the motion picture public and to the exhibitor. We get approximatcly two hundred still photographs with each production. From these we pick out those which convey an idea of the story best and which contain the necessary element to pique one's curiosity. This is a selling point which is absolutely indispensable. After all the motion picture producers are in the business to make money, and our advertising, while it must and it does stick to the truth, must be such as to make the production a successful one from the box office point of view.

"Motion picture advertising has reached the point where it has become standardized. In other words, the lobby display photos which we get out for the decoration of the theatres' lobbies are of the same size as those put out by Metro, Universal, Fox, etc. This is done so that the exhibitor can have permanent frames in his lobby and all he need do is to change the photos every time he changes his show. In the same way, our lithographs are the same size as those put out by the other companies.

Following Mr. Flinn's talk, a general discussion was entered into during which the question of regulating or censoring exhibitors' advertising came up. Several cases were cited and copies of the advertising matter shown where exhibitors deliberately put out exploitation of a salacious character which misrepresented the picture and tended to injure the industry and nullify the effect of the National Board of Review's work. It was admitted, however, that these instances were few and far between.

Mr. Flinn suggested that the newspapers which take advertisements of that character are as much to blame as the exhibitors and that if the newspapers did a little censoring of their own advertising columns this evil would quickly be eliminated.

Edwin Carewe announces that he has changed the title of his coming picture "The Rightful Heir" to "The Web of Lies." In this picture Dolores Cassinelli plays her first dual role. Work was completed on the production yesterday and the film has been turned over to Pathe for November release.

New Picture Palace For Frisco

Eugene H. Roth Announces That New House Will Eclipse Even Famous California

WITH a recent announcement from San Francisco of the Association of the California Portola and Imperial theatres, comes the information of another big development of this progressive enterprise. Eugene H. Roth, who is in New York at present, attending the affairs of the company, makes the announcement that President H. L. Rothschild and director Herman Wobber completed the plans for another palatial theatre for San Francisco. The same is to be erected on the site of the present large Prager Department store, northeast corner of Market and Jones Streets, directly opposite their successful Imperial theatre. The plans call for a seating capacity of 3,500, practically 700 more seats than their beautiful California theatre. The facade and interior architectural treatment is to be of the Spanish character. Many innovations will be introduced, perhaps one of the most effective will be the mezzanine box section, completely circling the balcony, a lavish expenditure will be made here, to insure absolute comfort and luxury. This section will contain 450 seats, while the ground floor orchestra section is to have 2,200 seats; the balcony to contain approximately 900. The wonderful lighting effects of the California theatre will be magnified many times in beauty. Much consideration is to be given to the stage. The proscenium opening is to be 58 feet wide, while the extreme depth of the stage is to be 75 feet. Due to the favorable location of the stage on the ground, the stage will form a complete triangle, the space under the sidewalk on either side is to be utilized; this space being 22 feet wide and is available for 150 feet, giving approximately 300 feet runway on either side of the stage, for big spectacular presentations. An extra large pit will be provided to accommodate a large orchestra contemplated. And due consideration is being given to the instalation of a huge organ. The main entrance and outer foyer will have an opening of a width of 48 feet, 64 feet deep, leading into a dome rotunda of 58 feet in diameter. Easy gradients will lead off the rotunda to the various sections in the mezzanine and balcony hallways. The architect, Alfred Henry Jacobs, whose artistic ability is displayed in the California theatre, will have complete charge of the plans and decorations. The new photoplay edifice is to be christened the "GRANADA." It is expected that this theatre will be opened approximately October 1, 1920. Associated with Mr. Roth in the management will be Mr. Jack Partington, who, for many years so successfully managed the popular Imperial theatre of San Francisco. With the completion of this theatre, the California syndicate will have the four largest theatres in San Francisco, all in the busy downtown district. Another announcement is to be made shortly, of a further development of their plans.

Rothermel's Fine Record Abroad

ONE of the last motion picture executives to return from overseas after a strenuous two years spent in the service of the A. E. F., for the Community Motion Picture Bureau, is Mr. Royale V. Rothermel of New York City, formerly president of the Filmcraft Corporation and a well known film man of the middle West.

With him Mr. Rothermel brought nearly 100,000 feet of film taken under his direction by the Community Motion Picture Bureau showing some of the amusements of the A. E. F., their favorite sight-seeing points in Europe and the canteen, recreational and motion picture service rendered the troops with the money raised for that purpose by the welfare societies. Mr. Rothermel and a staff of assistants who accompanied him back from France, including Alfred Shellenberger, Charlotte Bell Mann, Jean Chamblin and C. B. Blackwell, are now titling and editing this material for general distribution through the Community Service.

At the time of unification of all cinema activities for the American forces in France under the direction of the Community Motion Picture Bureau, Mr. Rothermel was busy struggling with a man's size job at Brest where he had organized and built up an efficient cinema service for that immense port and the surrounding country for a distance of a hundred kilometers.

This territory included the big receiving camps of Pontanezen and Fort Bougen, the naval aviation stations along the Brittany coast, the navy base at Brest and transports in the harbor to say nothing of the labor camps, stevedore outfits and base hospitals.

With such other duties as installing a complete high-tension, 11,000 volt electric light line a distance of six kilometers to Camp Pontanezen under almost impossible conditions; acting as official interpreter and liason officer with the French military, naval and civil authorities; installing water, electric light and sewerage systems; and in his spare time, driving autos and trucks down from Paris to Brest, it was no wonder Mr. Rothermel welcomed the advent of the Community Motion Picture Bureau's unified command of the A. E. F.'s cinema service and promptly took a two months' rest in Naval Base Hospital No. 5.

On his recovery from a breakdown that necessitated two operations, Mr. Rothermel was successively in charge of the motion picture work in the Midi, at Marseilles, and with the Second Division and the Third Army Corps on the Rhine.

Under the direct supervision of James W. Early, the Oakley Super-quality Productions, Inc., has started picturizing the Early series of society satired under the direction of Clyde McCoy. The cast is headed by Florence Grey and Walter K. Perkins.

New Amusement Publication, "Screen and Stage," Issued in West

"Screen and Stage," a San Francisco publication, made its bow to the public and the trade with its mid-October number.

A 24-page publication, attractively got up, and with an avowed purpose to furnish information and amusement to the public to the end that it would get in closer association with the picture industry, this magazine will henceforth be issued semi-monthly.

David C. Kinkead is editor, M. S. Vidaver, associate editor, and M. Stearns, secretary.

The first issue is interesting, and clean. For the future we wish all good luck to "Screen and Stage."

Moss Acquires Property to Build $750,000 Playhouse On

Announcement is made from the B. S. Moss Offices of the purchase of the entire block bounded by Tremont, Webster and Carter Avenues and East 176th Street, the Bronx, New York. Mr. Moss will begin at once the construction of a mammoth vaudeville and photoplay theatre on this site. It is said that the cost will be $750,000, and that the new playhouse will open next season.

Mr. Moss' holdings in New York City already comprise five houses — the Broadway, Hamilton, Regent, Jefferson and Flatbush, with several others in process of erection. It was stated that further announcement concerning additional enterprises would soon be forthcoming.

Second All-Night Theatre Opens in Cleveland; Venture Pays

The all-night movie show is getting a firm foothold in Cleveland, according to reports, and there are now two downtown photoplay houses operating continuously for twenty-four hours, where there was previously but one.

The Princess, Euclid Ave., started the innovation several months ago, and made some money, according to Manager Wolcott. Now the Wonderland, East Ninth Street is operating all night, too, and while fortunes are not being made by this operation, still, there is sufficient revenue coming in to make the experiment pay. Recently a reporter on one of the dailies went into these two houses at various hours during the night and his report on conditions was interesting. This is what the reporter found: "A large number of patrons appear to be factory men or laborers who work at odd shifts. There were few women, and those who were there were all escorted. Quite a few men in each house had suitcases, showing they were waiting for early morning trains. Some were there because they couldn't get a room in a hotel."

Hallmark Remodels Offices for Enlarged Clerical Forces

Owing to the increased amount of business passing through the executive offices of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, has had the floor space of its offices at 130 West 46th Street, enlarged to accommodate a big increase in Hallmark's clerical forces.

Hallmark's New York Exchange was moved last week to the office at 1600 Broadway, formerly occupied by Exhibitors' Mutual. This space has been remodeled and altered and will accommodate the accounting auditor and purchasing departments, with private offices for the publicity, advertising and exploitation departments.

Europe Looks to Us for Pictures

Such is Finding of Harry J. Cohen of Metro; We Must Supply Seventy-five Per Cent of Amusement

HARRY J. COHEN, manager of Metro Pictures Corporation's foreign department, has returned from a three-months' trip abroad, in which he made a personal survey of the motion picture situation in England, France and Sweden. What he saw in Europe confirmed and emphasized the impression obtained by the Metro president, Richard A. Rowland, who preceded him abroad and returned before him — namely, that the old world is a rich field for American photoplay exploitation.

Mr. Cohen came back with a bundle of famous European plays, which the Metro officials now have under consideration as vehicles to round out the "perfect thirty-six" celebrated dramas and notable novels from which Screen Classics, Inc., is to produce its 1919–20 output of "fewer and better" pictures.

Perhaps the most illuminating of Mr. Cohen's observations upon his return was the statement that 75 per cent of Europe's entertainment for the next two or three years must be supplied by American producers. This applies particularly to motion pictures. Metro's foreign department manager found that English and continental entertainment is woefully short in quantity because of the slackening of industry caused by the war, the scarcity of raw materials for production and the generally chaotic state of the labor market.

"While the United States must contribute at least 75 per cent of the entertainment needed to divert the peoples of Europe," said Mr. Cohen, "it was my observation that this entertainment must be of the highest grade. There is absolutely no room for the cheap picture. And by that I mean the picture that is cheap in theme, vulgar or devoid of that artistry which Europe rightfully has come to expect of American cinematic productions.

"On the other hand, with the peoples of the war-stricken lands hungering for amusement, there is every opportunity for entertainment that meets their artistic standards. They want, in short, pictures of the fewer and better sort; and it is to meet this European demand as well as the pressing wants of the home market that Metro is bending every effort."

Australia is to be the next field for Mr. Cohen's business investigations. He is planning a trip to the antipodes within 30 days, so soon as he is able to clear up the mass of office detail that had accumulated in his absence. The Metro foreign department manager purposes to make an exhaustive survey of the territory, believing that it should be as fruitful for American enterprises in general and Metro enterprise in particular, as he found Europe to be.

One Who Knows Exchanges

Enclosed find my check for $4, chalk my subscription up for two years. I might have writers' cramp when she comes due the next time and I want the paper to continue its visits to me regularly.

The Motion Picture News gets better every week and we don't need any other paper to keep us posted. I read everything in it and the experience letters suit me so well I would like to see more of them in it. I am fifty-seven years old and I am the operator for the Elite Theatre here and the owner of it. I started when the pictures first started so far back we forget the date, but I don't know it all by any means. They, the letters, tell so many thing that are true and helpful that I would not miss them for several prices of the paper and I would write some, only they are better writers and I can learn from them — and do I know the film exchanges? I just guess I do and then some. My experience is, they all are devils or have some devils working for them. If I were to say what I know about them they wouldn't ship me any more films. Man, they are the limit when it comes to business and some are worse than others. The truth is, they do business in so many ways that sometimes it looks like children playing doll house. Changeable is no name, there is no business in the world but the picture business that can do as they do and still live, and did you notice they don't live always? There must be a big profit in it or they would not last one month and now they are fixing it so they will do business on the Exhibitors' money. Pay two or three months in advance or they will give it to your competitor and if he don't take it, put up a show. Gosh ding it, these film exchanges are some cats!

Tootle, Well Known Publicity Man, Among Last Out of Uniform

Among the last of the motion picture advertising men to return to New York after getting out of the army is Harry King Tootle, former advertising and publicity manager for the Gaumont company. He was abroad for eight months as a lieutenant of artillery, during that time having served as assistant adjutant of the 351st Regiment of Field Artillery, aide-de-camp to Brigadier General W. E. Cole, and acting adjutant of the 167th Field Artillery Brigade under Brigadier General John H. Sherburne. Mr. Tootle returned in the spring, and since then has been taking a vacation in West Virginia.

"Even the motion picture men who go to California finally come back to New York, but I did not have to get that far away to feel the lure of the metropolis," confessed the former Gaumont representative. "Nor have I lost my interest in motion pictures. In fact, I remained on the farm longer than I had intended, awaiting the development of motion picture plans in which I had been included. As these now seem unlikely to come to maturity in the near future, I find that I must turn to other fields if I am to remain identified with the industry."

Exhibitor Service Bureau

Every Exhibitor Tells the Same Story

Three Exhibitor Articles on Admissions

Here are three exhibitor articles on admissions, all of which recite the same story, increased overhead and high rentals. The first letter is by A. J. Moeller, managing director of the Theatre De Luxe, Detroit, which has just increased its admission after, as Mr. Moeller states, "much sharpening of pencils." The second story is by Edgar E. Duncan, manager of the Colonial, of Lincoln, Neb. Mr. Duncan is evidently one of the "hard boiled boys" for he is still getting by on an admission of twenty cents top.

The third letter is by Miss Dolly Spurr, President of the Mutual Theatre Company of Marion, Ind., lessees of the Royal Grand, Lyric and Indiana theatres at Marion, Ind. Miss Spurr says she is "between the devil and the deep sea" and then she tells why she is in a quandary. Read each letter carefully. They are important.

One from Moeller

Beg to acknowledge receipt of yours under date of the 12th instant.

The matter of increased admissions, is something worthy of a great deal of thought and consideration, and it is not without considerable sharpening of pencils and many figures that we finally decided, that it was no longer a matter of advisability, but rather one of necessity.

To sum up the situation, and to make it as concise as possible, the following taken from our files, shows some of the reasons why we found it necessary, all the increases as stated being effective since our present price of admission was established.

Five per cent revenue tax on film rentals, 25 per cent increase on salaries, of musicians, stage hands and operators, increase in cost of maintenance approximately, 30%, increase in fuel 25%, increase in adv. rates ranging from 8 to 33 per cent, higher taxes, I have in the past two weeks received letters from exchanges increasing rentals approximating 50% on short subjects, additional notices have been received increasing prices on advertising accessories 15%, all these increases must be met, and there is but one source from which they can accrue, viz.: increased admissions.

Our admission prices at this writing are 15, 20 and 30 cents, plus war tax, beginning on the 28th instant, the prices will be 25 and 40 cents including war tax, which is only sufficient to cover the added cost in operation.

No one can deny the fact that the Motion Picture is the entertainment of millions, and the success of any theatre depends on the number of people who patronize it, consequently due consideration must be given, as to advisability, but this can best be judged, by the individual, depending on the location, competition, etc.

The matter of a fluctuating price policy or a standard policy must also be governed by local conditions, as no two communities, cities or towns, are alike, the result is that it resolves itself to the judgment of the individual manager for each theatre or community.

Personally I favor the standard policy, my reason being that, I believe the patrons of any theatre should be as conversant with the price of the particular theatre they are attending as they are with the time of the performances.

It is not always the better pictures on which the price of admission is increased and a great many exhibitors are governed by the rental price they pay rather than by the quality of the production. It being a great deal easier to obtain the additional rental thru increase in admission for a particular picture than thru exploitation. But this mode of procedure does not add continued patronage to the theatre, and surely common sense would signify that the successful outcome is dependent on increased patronage, and there is no surer way of increasing that patronage than thru pleasing the majority of your own patrons.

A satisfied patron is the best of advertising mediums because he is a booster, but sting him two or three times and the result is he becomes a knocker, but can you blame him. He purchases without seeing, and what he pays for is either there or is not there, and that is the basis of value, a patron usually knows what he wants and whether or not he or she is getting it, that is the reason they either patronize your theatre, or the other fellow's.

Standardize your prices, your program, and if you have an exceptional feature give your patrons the benefit of it and try to get new faces into your theatre thru exploitation, increase your box office receipts thru patronage rather than thru increased prices, individualize your theatre, make them talk about it and the attractions you are showing, the results should show for themselves.

Very truly yours,
A. J. MOELLER,
Managing Director.

Duncan Letter

Answering yours regarding admissions, will take up the question as asked:

My admissions were 5 and 10 cents afternoons and 10 and 15 cents evenings, with war tax additional.

The first day of Sept., I raised as follows. 6 and 11 cents in afternoon, 10 and 20 cents evenings. You will notice that I lowered the children at night one cent and raised the adults three cents. Prices include war tax.

By doing away with penny change we have saved about as many kicks as we made by raising the prices.

The very next week I jumped on "Checkers" to 10 and 15 afternoons, and 10 and 25 cents evenings, including tax, and received only one kick about the price and that was from a patron who had not seen the picture.

I have discovered that the public will pay the price without a murmur if you have what they want and do not take advantage of them. I have never advanced prices on any program that did not merit it.

I can't say that it was absolutely necessary to advance prices at this time, but with increased salaries to every employee of the theatre and higher film rental, it seems to me that we are entitled to a slight advance.

I expect a slight increase in film rental but, believe me, they have to show me first that they are making better pictures before they get my name on a contract.

I expect to raise prices about six times this season but every feature must pass muster before I do it. I would rather lose money than advance on a star.

After trying out the new scale of prices I am satisfied that I have not acted unwisely and shall keep them as they are now.

Yours very truly,
EDGAR E. DUNCAN,
Mgr. Colonial Theatre.

Miss Spurr Writes

In answer to your letter of the 19th. My policies for the coming season are set but I don't know how long they can last. I'm charging 25¢ and 30¢ top now, and conditions are such here that a raise is not to be thought of at present. Too many strikes, and a general howl about raise in prices on everything.

On the other hand my film service has gone up from 50 to 200 per cent, employees 25 per cent all the way around, and heaven only knows what things are coming to. If I had Sunday shows, I could stand it, but I have'nt, and its a case of being up in the air proper. Between the devil and the deep sea — film rentals twice and three times what they were, and we don't DARE raise admissions.

The film exchanges realize this in some localities too, but it don't make any difference in quoting prices.

Theres an answer somewhere to this question. What is it?

Sincerely.
MISS DOLLY SPURR,
President, Mutual Theatre Co.

Your Idea and Ours

THE Peoples theatre of Portland, Oregon, has framed a most effective display for "The Gray Horizon" in this six column, ten-inch ad. Using stills as a basis, the ad man has succeeded in making a scene cut and two closeups of the star command the attention of the reader and the appearance of the display unusual by the black and white lines beginning at a point and widening diagonally across the sheet.

We wouldn't recommend this sort of thing, especially the white and black lines, for many pictures, but for one of Hayakwa's productions it does very nicely since this actor stands in a class by himself and you get what might be termed a Japanese atmosphere from the display.

The use of two or three stills framed together as has been done here is always good ad construction especially where you do not want to use too much reading matter.

The Peoples has done some very nice work in the boxes and can be rated with having created something quite a lot different from the usual run of newspaper displays. This ad will certainly attract attention if for no other reason except its eccentricity.

The way to tell a movie actress from a Broadway flapper. The actress doesn't use so much rouge. It photographs black.

IF the Colonial (Toledo, Ohio) had used some selling talk in the space devoted to listing the cast in this display for "Checkers" we would consider this about the best ad we have seen on this picture. We say "if" because there are very few names in this cast which mean anything to the fan and the feature is one which gets business because of it being a really big production from a most famous stage play. In other words the production overshadows the cast and, therefore, the only value the advertiser gets from the space he has devoted to this part of the ad, is from the fact that it is an unusually large one and would tend to impress the reader that the feature is a big picture. We would have used this space for a more extended account of the spectacular events which are a featured part of the film, given Thomas Carrigan a little selling talk, mentioned Jean Acker as the heroine of the story and asked if the reader remembered "Tammany Young" who has quite a hit with patrons of theatres in eccentric characters along the line of the one he does in "Checkers." We would have told of some of the other events on the bill, especially the music and stated the time of screening of the feature picture and urged people to get in for the opening.

Of course this is a good ad. There can be no doubt that it sold the feature. What we have said is only our idea of what would have made it better, only our idea, however, and since this advertising game cannot be measured like calico we are always laying ourselves open to being accused of being hypercritical.

This display was just a foot square.

THE Sunday News-Leader of Cleveland, Ohio, is one of the most progressive of the big publications in the way it co-operates with the motion picture theatres of its city. Here is an example, only one of several co-operative advertising stunts which was used during the run of "The Westerners" at the Grand theatre.

This was a quarter-sheet poster which was displayed liberally about Cleveland by the newspaper during the film's engagement. It was conducive of most unusual amount of interest for the film and the Grand reaped a rich financial harvest. The News-Leader devoted several pages of its October 6th edition to the book and picture and ran the story complete as a part of weekly offering to its readers.

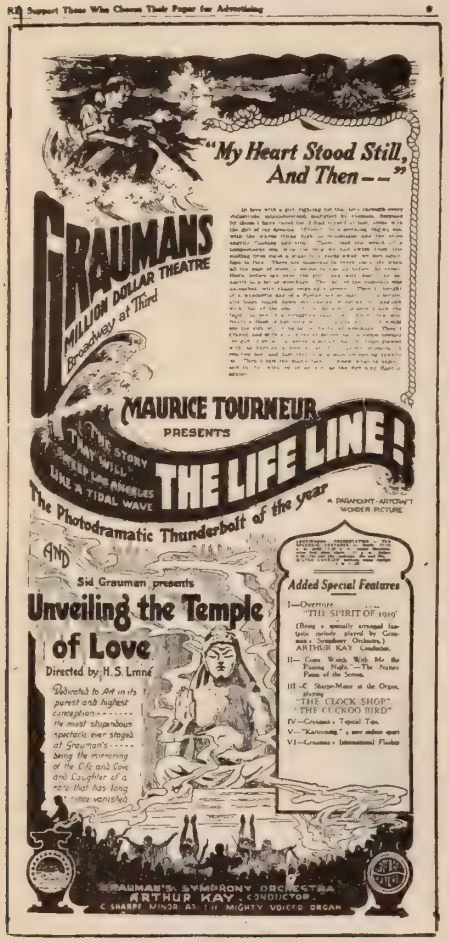
This is a fine example of what the newspaper and the theatres working together may do to their mutual benefit.

"When the teeth fall out the tongue wags loose."

THIS is one of H. B. Franklin's latest displays which was used at Shea's Hippodrome showing of "The Hoodlum." There isn't much of it, in size it was even smaller than you see it here, but it exemplifies Franklin's style of newspaper advertising — small hand-drawn displays announcing the bill and the star. There may be those who say that displays like this are not to be compared with bigger ones using illustrative cuts and a good line of selling talk, but if you were to argue with Mr. Franklin on this subject he would tell you that his theatre is doing capacity week in and week out, which is about all that can be expected as a result of any kind of advertising.

There is one thing about Franklin's ads. They are distinctive and so different from any others which appear in the Buffalo papers that they stand out like a cameo on the printed page. We believe it is for this reason that Mr. Franklin is able to claim such great results from his newspaper displays. If others in the host of Buffalo advertisers were to effect this style much of its value would be lost except from the announcement standpoint.

Comment and Criticism



JUST what this eight point selling talk which Grauman's of Los Angeles has chosen to use in its ad on "The Life Line" we don't know, unless it is one of the "big speeches" which characterized the old-time melodramas like "Romany Rye" from which Maurice Tourneur made this melodramatic picture, but anyway we can't see the reason for it as a part of a high-grade ad by a high-grade theatre under high-grade management.

So far as the rest of the display is concerned it is quite up to the usual Grauman standard, mighty artistic. In place of this whole bunch of Mary Jane Holmes stuff written in the first person and without explanation we would have used a paragraph of selling talk telling Los Angeles what this picture was about and describing some of the spectacular scenes which were to be enacted.

The story of this picture is commonplace, but the way it has been put together with the thrills that are shown in a shipwreck and a theatre fire are sure-fire stuff with any audience. There is also some of the best of comedy in this which wasn't mentioned.

Grauman's gives the spectacle staged at that theatre, "The Unveiling of the Temple of Love," excellent mention and lists the other numbers on the bill all of which we think is the only thing to do.

In size this was four columns wide and twenty inches deep.

AN issue or so ago we took a crack at the advertising of the Plaza theatre, San Diego, because the space they bought on "The Miracle Man" we thought wasn't large enough and strong enough for so great an attraction. In this we reckoned without our host for here is a full page which the Plaza used prior to the showing and for the first few days thereafter. With the ad comes a letter from the Plaza management stating that they cut down their space only when the crowds were so large that it was impossible to get them in the theatre and after they had told all of San Diego about the production in no uncertain terms. In this we have visual proof in the display which is herewith reproduced. "The Miracle Man" has had a lot of good advertising, perhaps because there was something to talk about, but we think this display ranks well with the best we have seen. It is with pleasure that we take back our insinuation that the Plaza ad man was laying down on his job.

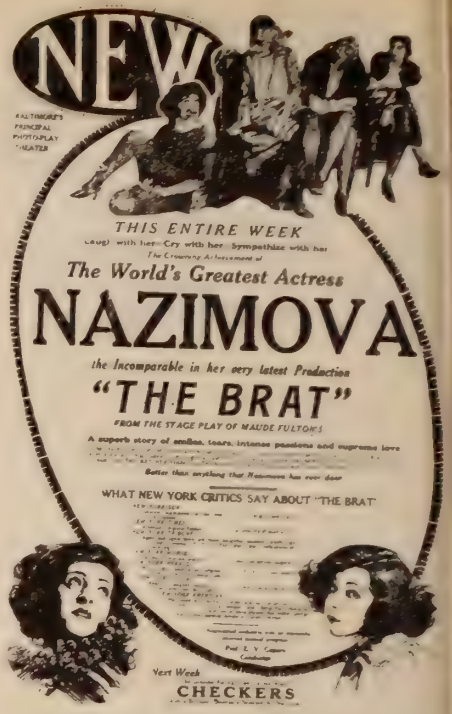
THE New Theatre of Baltimore has given Nazimova in the "The Brat" some mighty good billing and this display is a part of the exploitation campaign which brought capacity business for the engagement.

About everything which goes to make an ad good is to be found in this display: good cuts, well framed, proper display of the star's name and the title of the production, the star line overtopping the title, which is correct for this picture, a good line of selling talk, and a mention of what the New York papers said about the film which will have some weight. We want to call your attention to the use of the two head cuts of the star at the bottom of the ad. They certainly serve to dress the whole display, and are remarkable specimens of producers' materials.

If you are to play this feature be sure you ask your exchange for a plentiful supply of these half tones. We would recommend that you follow the style of this ad so far as you can. It ranks in our opinion a good 100 per cent. In size it was five columns wide and seventeen inches deep.



Only a man with a good substantial income can afford to write poetry, or scenarios.

THE New theatre of Baltimore has furnished a "new" ad idea for "Checkers" in framing its reading matter and cuts within a big horse shoe. We should say that this is a corking good idea for making your display different than the orthodox stuff and give this a good rating on our batting average record. We would judge that this is all hand drawn and entirely original as we have seen nothing like it. The display balances nicely, gives the title proper display and doesn't waste much time in shooting at anything else which we believe is the right angle for exploiting this picture. The New has taken advantage of the opportunity to get its name line in big letters without hurting the appearance of the ad., something which is not often possible. In size this was four columns by nine inches. We have seen a lot of good advertising on this feature but none which suited us any better than this one.

Contentment may be better than riches but it doesn't pay the rent.

FOR a picture of this kind, with a star of the magnitude of Frank Keenan, we should say that the American of Butte had advertised "The World Aflame" just the way it should be, in spite of the fact that the ad man has used up a lot of space with his black ink. However, this use of ink serves to bring the display out on the page and makes the white letters of the title of the production and the star's name vividly prominent. This was better than a half page.

The use of the scene cut in the center, one of the big dramatic moments in the film, gives the readers of the ad a good idea of the character of the production, although it does not print any too well. If you had seen the picture you would remember the scene and know that the man in the front window of the car is Keenan, otherwise you wouldn't.

This feature seems to have experienced an unusual career. It is not a new release as first run houses are wont to view pictures, but seems to be jumping into booking favor some weeks after it might have been expected to have played the big time. We have noticed several houses which usually play a picture "off the bat" who have used this feature within the past two weeks. Others are scheduled to play it later.

Umbrellas and self respect when lost are seldom found.

MAYBE this one by or rather for the six St. Louis theatres on "The Brat" may be the best of advertising, but just the same we can't see it, especially the "slate" stuff. We don't see where it has any application to this picture, which in the case of "Daddy Long Legs" the use of the blackboard idea did have.

We also believe that presenting Nazimova in any manner except seriously as a great emotional artist is a mistake. This star isn't an ingenue and she shouldn't be advertised even by suggestion as one. Now without doubt this ad attracted attention for it was six columns wide by eight inches deep, but we don't think that the best results for the space purchased have been obtained, although it has made a convenient way of advertising one bill at six theatres, giving each one equal space. We are pretty sure that this space was subscribed for by the St. Louis exchange and of course the theatres could hardly "look a gift horse in the mouth." We selected it for comment that we might warn you against advertising Nazimova and her pictures in so light a vein. If this picture was a Constance Talmadge, a Mary Pickford, a Madge Kennedy production then it would be all right to "kid" in your displays, but with this star keep your style and your selling talk serious.

It is easier to follow the races than to get ahead of them.

WE wish we might reproduce for you every one of a bundle of displays we have from S. Barrett McCormick's Circle theatre, on "A Temperamental Wife," but we haven't the space. There were some better ones than this four column by fifteen-inch specimen but we are selecting this one for a reason.

We want you to see how a whole bunch of reading matter which if it were framed in an ordinary manner and if ordinary selling talk were used, would probably be passed up by the average reader of the paper in which it appeared.

However the way McCormick has

framed his cuts and worded his selling talk covers two distinct fields that are bound to get his display read to the last word.

The use of the line-drawn cuts have all the effect of a cartoon which have proved themselves as interesting to the millions of Americans these many years. Everybody is going to take a look at McCormick's illustrations and smile the same kind of a smile as he does with "Happy" or any of the other cartoon celebrities.

Then comes the selling talk, original bits of clever word juggling which would be interesting from a literary standpoint alone.

However, here is the ad reproduced from its original size to our columns. Study it and see how the master frames his advertising appeal. Many of you will not be able to get the mechanical aid that McCormick does but you can at least catch the advertising idea which he utilizes, that of making his displays more than a dull and heavy styled statement of fact concerning a bill to be played.

A motto for producers: "Build Few, Build Fast, Each One Better, Than the Last."

THE Marlow Theatre, Helena, has the honor of being the first house in Montana to have run "The Miracle Man," and we must admit that the manager of the Marlow recognized the fact that he had something unusual to put over for he has bought more than liberal space for his display, three columns wide by a whole page deep, and then made his selling talk and display lines promise his patrons a regular picture, which you can bet this one is.

There isn't anything so artistic about this display. Its basis is a producer's cut symbolic of the great theme of the "Miracle Man," and above and below this cut is good reading matter about the picture. This reading matter begins with a catch line which originates with the producers and which is being largely used in all the advertising we see on this feature. Then follows a personal guarantee by the management which may or may not mean something according to how often and on what subjects it has been used.

Then follows the headlines, which are in good taste. When we get to the selling talk take notice of a literary gem. This display is worthy of every bit of praise we are giving it.

"When a man is mad of a fever, run for a doctor. When a man is mad of a woman — wait. Only she herself can cure him."

THE New Garrick of Minneapolis has a rather unusual display here in this three-column, twelve-inch ad, but the circles which look like the cancellation stamp on a letter, and to our mind damages an otherwise good display. The New Garrick started out with a corking good idea, that of making the cast a most notable one, the thing to be featured in "Her Kingdom of Dreams," and if it were not for the "post marks" we mention we think that this display would be a model for advertising this feature. However as the ad stands here, it looks, not only crowded but "mussed up" and untidy, entirely due to these circles.

The title of the feature and the star's name have been given proper billing and the paragraph of selling talk which is devoted to the star and cast are carefully worded. We would say that so far as the principles of this display are concerned that the New Garrick ad man has used excellent judgment and we don't see why he chooses to spoil his work by the addition of the "post marks."

This is a good ad to copy aside from this.

"A secret revealed to a woman is as a bubble that is blown."

MR. PARTINGTON, manager of the Imperial, San Francisco, always gets a good deal of the "personal guarantee" into the style of his advertising which is a mighty clever trick if you can establish a reputation for yourself so that your say so will be taken seriously. This ad is different from any we have seen on "The Miracle Man" and that is the reason we are using it. It is an ideal display where an engagement has been extended long enough so that all the town knows about the feature and only needs to be assured that it is still playing. We like what Mr. Partington has to say about coming in during "the thirty-minute" period.

Discovers a Farrar Among His Ushers

ONE of the ushers in the Majestice Theatre of Portland, owned by J. J. Parker and managed by Frank Lacey sprung to local fame one week, during which community singing in the theatre was in vogue. Manager Lacey noticed on the first night of the community singing that a clear, high soprano was leading. On the second night he discovered the voice again but it was on the third night that he discovered its owner. She was one of his own ushers. Mr. Lacey rewarded her by sending her to one of Portland's best musicians who trained her on the song "Broken Blossoms." She sang this selection as a solo at each performance preceding the week in which Griffith's big production showed at the Majestic Theatre.

This might be a colored minstrel troup which hit town but it isn't. This band helped put "Checkers" over for the New Lyric, Minneapolis

Exploiting "Checkers" As a Special in the Twin Cities

"CHECKERS" has just completed a two weeks run in the Twin Cities and few pictures shown there in recent years have been given the unique exploitation given this racing drama.

The features made its northwest debut at the New Lyric, Minneapolis the week starting Sunday September 28 and played two overflow business at every showing during the week despite the fact that it rained continuously for two days and the remaining days of the week were chilly and damp.

Manager William Vance of the New Lyric originally intended to precede the showing of the feature with a real racing scene using several local race horses and jockeys on a stage tread-mill but inability to get a treadmill of sufficient size nipped the idea in the bud. However, what Mr. Vance failed to accomplish in the way of a stage setting he made up in stunt advertising. Trailers announcing the coming of the play were shown in several downtown theatres for three weeks in advance of the presentation. One sheet snipes of checkered design were posted all over the city two weeks in advance of the showing and on the Saturday preceding the opening 50,000 12 inch by 23 inch heralds were distributed to homes in various sections of the city by a score of local newsboys, and Boy Scouts. On the day of the opening Mr. Vance engaged a colored band of ten pieces and before each de luxe performance the band played lively jazz numbers in front of the theatre. On the week days, during the noon hour and during the supper hour the band and five race horses, blanketed and taped like those training for track competition paraded the downtown streets and created no end of interest in the showing.

Mr. Vance also ordered six sets of two sheet letters and covered as many long fences with the big letters "Checkers at the New Lyric, Sept. 28" 20 twenty-four sheet stands were also used in the outside advertising campaign as were also 25 sixteen sheet stands. A simple but very appropriate stage setting, showing bleachers and paddocks near a race track was used for the showing. To add to the atmosphere created for the presentation Mr. Vance had the race horses used in the street parade marched across the stage by jockeys while the augmented orchestra struck up hurdy-gurdy music. Photos showing the crowds in front of the New Lyric are shown herewith.

At the New Liberty, St. Paul, where "Checkers" played to capacity business the week of October 5, Manager Arthur F. Abelson had his theatre front decorated with stage pieces and canvas.

Manager Doubles in Brass

MANAGER Julius K. Johnson, of the New Garrick, Minneapolis, who in addition to his managerial duties is the concert pipe organist at the Northwest's leading theatre, surprised several thousand Garrick patrons the week of October 5, by acting as accompanist to Pietro Frosini, concert accordianist who has become very popular with Minneapolitans.

Following his pipe organ solo Mr. Johnson came upon the stage with Mr. Frosini playing the accompaniment to "Rigolleto" from memory and following with a jazz number "Baby." So tremendous was the reception given this extraordinary musical offering that Mr. Johnson returned after several bows, with Frosini, and played an accordion selection with him.

The week of October 5 saw "The Woman Thou Gavest Me" at the New Garrick and without attempting to steal any credit from the attraction it must be said that Manager Johnson's ability to make himself a dual attraction helped to extend the showing of the feature and the repetition of the musical program for the week starting October 12.

One of Schade's original advertising ideas in operation

Absolutely Necessary to Raise Admissions, Says Schade

GEORGE J. SHADE, who manages the Schade theatre, Sandusky, Ohio, belongs to that long-headed class of exhibitors who have seen many changes come to their profession and has had foresight enough to meet these changes as they came along, decide wherein they affected him and then steer his exhibiting course accordingly. Without any disparagement he can be termed "a wise old owl" who has forgot more about the picture business than some of us will ever know.

We asked Mr. Schade to contribute to our series on "admissions" and he did.

To be sure his letter is short and sweet so as to speak but it states several things very emphatically, Mr. Schade is a man who doesn't waste many words. Here is Mr. Schade's reply to our query. Also on this page are photographs of the Schade theatre, advertising "A Temperamental Wife" and "Mickey" both of which made money for the Schade, you can bet, for Mr. Schade passes those films which he thinks won't and his judgment is good.

"In answer to yours of the 12th will say we have already advanced our admission prices. It is absolutely necessary, due to the increased price of film rentals to raise admissions. If the exhibitor has not already done so he had better start immediately. The writer saw this condition approaching with reference to increased film rentals several months ago, and in July of this year we increased our prices from 17 cents to 20 cents and from 22 cents to 25 cents, and from 40 cents to 50 cents, the 50-cent seats being box seats.

"We expect to pay more for film than we have in the past; we also expect to maintain a standard scale of prices unless we book an added attraction such as singers, dancers, etc. Then we will increase our price. When we use an added attraction, we usually add this to a super-production or a film that is a little better than the ordinary.

"The increased price has no effect upon the attendance. We have the same number of people that we formerly had with no kicks from anyone. The public is paying more for everything else and they are expecting to pay more for amusements.

"Trusting the information above is what you want, I am

Dancer Helps Schade With "Sahara"

MANY of the biggest exhibitors may take a page from the history of George J. Schade's exploitation with "Sahara" and find it interesting as an example of showmanship. Mr. Schade recently enjoyed a tremendously successful week's run at the Schade Theatre, Sandusky, with "Sahara," during which, in place of a prologue, he obtained the services of Mlle. Violette Doreen, a professional snake dancer, and her clever exhibition, given as the curtain was raised when the dancers in the picture revel in the Palace of the Dawn, won the applause of the big crowds attracted by the announcement of her appearance.

The notice also attracted the Sandusky police, who, seeing something sensational, sent a squad of censors to watch the dancing girl's performance. They decided that Mlle. Doreen's exhibition was entirely within the bounds of propriety. So great was the demand to see the clever dancer in conjunction with the Louise Glaum picture that Mr. Schade gave a special Saturday morning matinee that crowded his spacious playhouse.

Mlle. Doreen next made her stand at Charles H. Miles' big Cleveland theatre, the Miles, where "Sahara," despite a successful first-run engagement in the Forest City a month before, played to four days' smashing business. The Miles management doubled the Schade Theatre's time of six minutes allotted the dancer, after the first performance, a short comedy subject being shelved to give Mlle. Doreen ample opportunity to give her entire vaudeville dancing act. The Miles executives devoted much of their advertising space to the special dancing exhibition.

McCormick Comes Through With a New One

MANY a great business has been builded on a trade mark. Witness, "Uneeda Biscuit" etc. It is said that the National Biscuit Company was on the verge of bankruptcy until it hit on that trademark. There are hundreds of such trademarks which are worth millions of dollars.

Now we wouldn't want to say that S. Barrett McCormick's new trade mark is worth any million dollars but it is worth real money to any man and especially to one like Mr. McCormick who knows how to capitalize it by the right kind of exploitation.

But we haven't told you about McCormick's trade mark idea.

A short time ago the manager of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, whom you know to be McCormick, opened another theatre. He had to have a title of course. Most of us if we were to name a show-shop would pick out one of the favorites like the Rivoli, or the Rialto, or now that Broadway's newest palace is open, the Capitol, but not McCormick.

McCormick originates, so he called his new theatre "Mister Smith's Theatre" and then he started a new style advertising. On each ad is a line which begins with "Mister Smith says." Then McCormick adopted sort of a catch line way of phrasing things. For instance one of them reads: "I built it in a handy part of the town." Another said: "If I don't pick good Pictures look how many relatives I've got to explain to."

But here are some of McCormick's ads. You can see for yourself just what this sort of stuff is going to do to make Mister Smith's theatre an Indianapolis institution.

If we had money, real money, we mean enough so we thought we could afford to get into the show business on the biggest scale yet attempted, we would trot out to McCormick and say; "We've got the money and you've got the brains. Let's go in snucks and make Mister Smith's theatre a National institution. How much do you want for your trademark and how much do you want per, to be managing director of the whole shooting match?"

Just why the big interests in the show business let McCormick stay out in Indianapolis making a reasonable amount of money with a couple of nice theatres when his ideas syndicated would make so darned much more for both Mr. McCormick and some one else, we can't see. However, this was to be a story concerning Mister Smith's theatre.

In the display advertising Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential" we want you to notice the bottom of the ad which tells you more about Mister Smith's theatre and its location than anything we can write. Then take a look at the opening day display for Mister Smith's theatre. See what Mister Smith says in that one.

There isn't much more to say about this new house of McCormick's without eulogizing and he doesn't like that, we happen to know, consequently we draw this article to a close with a last remark that this is the best idea we've seen around the show business in many a long day.

Read what "Mister Smith" says. It's worth your while

Exchange Man Makes Good as Exhibitor

WHEN the Exchange man goes into the exhibiting field he usually makes good perhaps because he knows all the ins and outs of the selling end of the game and is therefore competent to buy and book his productions.

Among the latest recruits to the army of managers who come from the exchange is O. K. Mason of Wichita, Kansas. Mr. Mason has been managing the Regent theatre of that city for the past year after having been the branch manager of several Universal exchanges.

The Regent wasn't a gold mine when Mr. Mason assumed the reins of managership, having had a rather disastrous career and a number of bosses under the name of the Colonial.

Because of this fact we believe that the new manager is entitled to all the credit in the fact that the theatre is now a success or at least, is on the road to it.

We quote from a recent letter from Mr. Mason which we found interesting and believe our readers will do the same.

"To date I have not managed to make any million but to say the least have kept all my bills paid and am eating three squares a day and living comfortably.

"To get down to facts, I closed the theatre on Aug. 1st for a thorough overhauling and remodeling, including entire redecoration inside and out, new carpets and draperies, aisle lights throughout the entire theatre and installed a marquis and changeable sign for advertising our different programs.

"The theatre was re-opened on Sep. 1st to very good business and so far everything points to a more than prosperous fall season. I have been fortunate in getting together an unusually good five piece orchestra under the capable management of Marion Shinn who has had many years of directing in the middle west."

Cleveland News-Leader Gives Real Theatrical Service

STORIES of how the newspapers are co-operating with the theatre are becoming more plentiful and the exploitation stunt more commendable, but the prize event is that which Charles H. Miles, one of the reigning spirits in motion picture circles in Detroit and Cleveland, has brought to pass in conjunction with the Cleveland Sunday News-Leader, the Cleveland News and the Plain Dealer with a campaign of co-operation on "The Westerners."

The big feature of the newspaper-exhibitor campaign was the publication of the Stewart Edward White story in full in the Sunday News-Leader, Dan R. Hanna's big Forest City newspaper devoting no less than five pages in its editorial section to the stirring romance of the Dakota Black Hills and using fourteen of the big scene stills of "The Westerners" as illustrations. All during the week preceding the opening of the production at the Grand the Cleveland News, also a Hanna enterprise, carried half-page advertisements announcing that the Stewart Edward White story was to be run in its entirety in the coming Sunday's News-Leader, a big section of the ad. heralding "The Westerners" as the following week's attraction at the Grand theatre.

Not content with the half-page ads in The News acquainting Clevelanders with the fact that the story of "The Westerners" was to be published in the Sunday News-Leader, the Hanna management reproduced the News ad. in a folder, 20,000 of which were delivered by messengers to homes in the city and nearby towns. In addition to the big ad. The News ran two col. teaser ads. on the first page all during the week and stories on the stars in "The Westerners" in its motion picture section. Of course, Mr. Miles and his advertising staff were kept busy meanwhile, building some of the most attractive and effective advertising that has ever been used in Cleveland. This took the form of daily half-col. spreads in the Cleveland papers.

Besides the five-page story on "The Westerners" the News-Leader gave freely of its theatrical columns to stories about the author, the producer and his first Great Author's achievement, and some personal items anent Roy Stewart, Mildred Manning, Robert McKim, Wilfred Lucas and Frankie Lee, the featured players in "The Westerners."

Following the Trail of "The Miracle Man"

AND still the trail of the engagement of "The Miracle Man" continues to offer a fine example of what the really big picture will do when it is presented to a public that is ever eager for screen entertainment of the better class.

This time it is the Butterfly theatre of Milwaukee, not so famous in some ways since the "thirsty first" of July but rapidly establishing itself as one of the most progressive show towns to be found, which contributes to our list of stories of "The Miracle Man's" phenomenal success as a box office attraction and as a screen classic.

Manager Leo Landau of the Butterfly has been enthusiastic over the feature since he first saw it and therefore determined to put it over for a record engagement in the Schlitz city. That he has been successful can be inferred since the picture ran two weeks to capacity business.

Mr. Landau's exploitation work consisted of a very generous use of all newspapers; half sheets on the dash boards of the street cars; a special campaign conducted thru the mail on post cards being sent to all classified business lists shown in the Milwaukee telephone directories prior to the opening day of the picture. The town was sniped with about 1,000 block letters one-sheets, reading:—"THE MIRACLE MAN IS COMING." Then to avoid any possible chance of those people who are not regular patrons of picture shows failing to learn of the picture's presentation — at the Butterfly theatre— Mr. Landau secured from one of the advertising companies in Milwaukee a carefully selected list of names. To the people on this list was mailed a special letter praising the feature in no uncertain terms and which was a model of literary merit.

The accompanying photograph was secured at one of the fourth day performances. On the opening day, Sunday, Sept. 14th, the Butterfly played to five capacity houses, starting in at 10:00 in the morning, selling tickets until 10:00 at night, with an hour and forty-five minutes show, notwithstanding the fact that they were handicapped with considerable rain. The crowds attempting to gain admission to the House so interfered with traffic on the street and sidewalk as to necessitate a special detail of police to keep the crowds moving.

The attendance kept up during the entire run of the picture. On the fourth day, the weather being more favorable, a flash of the crowds awaiting admission to the 7:30 show was secured, which we are reproducing in the cut shown.

New San Francisco House Opened

YOU may think that the illustration on the right shows the floral tributes of sorrowing friends when one of your exhibiting friends, tired of fighting his way in this hectic "fillum" game, passed to the better world which is sure to be the reward of every exhibitor who has had his share of "hell-on earth" in the show business, but you are dead wrong.

This collection of flowers which makes the lobby of a theatre look like a Greek floral store was a feature of the opening of the Realart Theatre of San Francisco, located at 22d and Mission streets, one of the eighty-odd houses in Northern California owned and operated by Kahn and Greenfield.

The naming of the new house "Realart" is complimentary to the Realart Pictures Corporation, but behind the naming of the theatre is more than a desire to be first in this line; there is also the matter of friendship of many years between Louis R. Greenfield, vice-president of the company, and President Arthur S. Kane of Realart Pictures.

We suspect that the Realart company contributed in furnishing the floral decorations which are shown here as well they might for it is quite a compliment to be godfather to a nice new theatre, which no doubt will have some open dates to be filled with feature pictures which will be expected to build business for the Kahn and Greenfield house.

The photograph at the bottom of this column shows one of the crowds that lined up waiting to get in for the first nights' showing, which was made impressive by formal ceremonies fitting the occasion.

The opening bill at the Realart was "The Battler," featuring Earl Metcalf and Virginia Hammond.

The house began it's entertainment career under favorable conditions and promises to be another successful venture for the owners.

Bringing Alaskan Atmosphere to Texas

LAWRENCE F. STUART, who, by the way, is making a conspicuous success as manager of the Old Mill Theatre, Dallas, Texas, went out of the conventional rut in preparing a lobby decoration during his showing of the Rex Beach, "The Girl From Outside." To get the proper atmosphere for a story of the frozen North, Manager Stuart made the box office look like an Alaskan hut, with yellow curtains on the windows and the light showing through. The right side of the lobby was given over to a big ocean scene, whereas the left side was occupied by a snow scene painted from "The Girl From Outside." A figure representing "the Girl" was designed, the head being taken from a twenty-four sheet on the picture. Altogether, as the accompanying cut suggests, it was an unusually inviting display, well calculated to attract attention and to give picture fans an idea of the nature of Rex Beach's picture.

This latest Beach story seems to appeal to exhibitors as being an unusually good subject for exploitation stunts especially in the matter of lobby display, and we hope to be able to secure more photographs with which to illustrate how to advertise this feature for extra dollars profit.

The Old Mill display was not expensive, but it was productve of extra business; of that Mr. Stuart is satisfied. The Old Mill is one of the several theatres owned by the Hulsey interests in Dallas, and in each theatre a brand of showmanship is being displayed which is continually bringing this enterprising firm into the limelight. Among the advertising novelties which the Hulsey houses may well boast is a newspaper devoted to the interests of the several theatres which takes the printed stories of the forthcoming film events to Dallas movie fans each week.

A complete staff of up-to-date newspaper people is retained to edit and print the sheet.

A Good "Miracle Man" Tie-Up

HERE is evidence that even in New York window display exploitation can be obtained. This cut is from a photograph of the Hetherington drug store, located on 42d street, taken during the run of the Tucker film at the Rivoli Theatre.

The book which is being advertised is the novelization of "The Miracle Man," Frank Packward's original story.

The display attracted a lot of attention, even on one of New York's busiest streets and was productive of much business for both the drug store and the theatre.

The Broadway's display on "The Brat" using a 24 sheet as the basis for the flash

Effective Use of a Twenty-Four Sheet

WE can't say that we think that the use the Broadway Theatre, Columbia, S. C., has made of this 24 sheet on "The Brat" is very artistic but it does attract attention, especially since the producers have been able to take from the stories such a fine likeness of Nazimova.

There is a wonderful appeal in the piquant personality of this star which should be utilized in advertising any picture in which she is presented. There can be no question that she completely overshadows even so famous a story as "The Brat" and in getting the 24 sheet prominently displayed in the lobby, the Broadway has made a bid for patronage on one of the strongest assets the feature has.

The Broadway has made good use of the other producer materials such as sepia scene stills and the regular paper. Of course the star is the featured portion of all this material and, therefore, the selling of Nazimova rather than the feature is further carried out.

Do You Know That—

Many song writers don't sing.

A fur collar on an overcoat is no proof of a clean shirt—likewise a good title doesn't signify a great picture.

The little end of the horn is where the noise comes from.

Many a man's train of thought has been wrecked by defective matrimonial ties.

Give a man enough rope and he'll smoke himself to death.

Window Display Works For Both the Theatre and the Merchant

THE exhibitor who neglects the opportunities presented by many pictures for advantageous tie-ups with local merchants in window displays and the merchant who cannot see the value it has for his store, are both on the wrong road to the greatest measure of success.

This method of co-operative advertising has sold more pictures and brought more direct results to the mercantile business than a great many dollars worth of independent publicity would buy and as you exhibitors know who have tried it, the expense is almost nothing.

We have recorded many instances where effective window displays have been used in various cities but we doubt if we ever have been able to mention a better piece of this form of exploitation than that accomplished by the American Theatre of Denver, Colo., and Jefferay's department store in connection with the showing of the Geraldine Farrar picture, "The World and Its Woman" in that city. As the accompanying illustration shows, the display is at once dignified, rich and impressive and is certain to attract attention, both to the merchandise on sale and to the picture being advertised. To our way of thinking this stands as a model of what may be done by a first-class store to increase the value of its window space by profiting by the public's interest in photoplays and stars of the first rank. The painting of Geraldine Farrar and Lou Tellegen that forms the centre of the display, was done by a well-known western artist, H. E. Lauter, who is particularly renowned for his impressionistic work. The artistic calibre of the painting is enough to demand the attention of the passer-by.

A Showman Even If He Does Operate a Theatre in a "Tank"

PECATONICA, ILL., isn't nearly so large a town as one might judge from its imposing name. In fact it is rather a small burg near Rockford. Just the same, located out there in the show business is one O. W. Jastrain, who we believe is far from being a dead one when it comes to managing a theatre.

Mr. Jastrain reads the News and this letter is in answer to our recent request for stories concerning small town exploitation stunts which we can pass on to aid some other exhibitor.

Read what Pecatonia's one and only showman pulls to get them away from the fireside on cold winter evenings or off the front porch in the summer, and that's what you have to do in the small towns.

Advertising along city lines won't get them in, out in the "tanks." You've got to go right into the house after your audience.

"In your September 20 issue I read with much interest about the fellow who cashed in on the selective service draft calling. We did the same thing here, in our little town of 1,200 people, only differently. I put up a big sheet on the front of a building, set up a stereopticon across the street, and ran the numbers free! And we had to keep in telephonic connection with Rockford papers (nearest big town) for over an hour. Cost something, yes; but I scared up all the slides in town, got $1 for each for running them, and we had the street jammed with people who did'nt forget us right away for giving them hot-off-the-bat information. And I did'nt think anything special of it till I saw your article.

"Here's another election day stunt that will work in a small town — the smaller the better. Of course, election does'nt come for a year (Presidential, I mean), but I might forget to send it if I wait. At the last Presidential election we hired the telegraph operator to stay till 2 o'clock A. M., and cut in on the returns. That cost us $15, thru the Western Union. Then we went around to the merchants about a week ahead, told them we were going to have returns hot off the wire, told them what we paid, and asked them to buy a ticket at 50¢ each, which would admit them to the show any time election night. We sold around about 50 tickets in advance. Then I got ten reels of pictures, all short subjects; comedies, westerns, etc. Election night we started at 9 o'clock, had relay messenger service from the depot to the show (only two blocks) and we surely did give them "hot-off-the wire" dope. Whenever returns would slow up we'd run a reel or so of pictures, and before midnight we had a dandy crowd, and they had a nice warm place to stay and visit while getting the 'dope.' All together we cleared over $25.00 for ourself, even with the unusually heavy expense. And we sold lots more tickets at the door, naturally at the same price of 50¢. So you can tuck this away and print it next year, or print it now and let the small towners tuck it away.

"Another small town stunt that worked: We had Uncle Tom's Cabin a while ago, and naturally all the kids wanted to see it and all of them couldn't afford to. So we advertised that all children under 14 who would black up, and come to the theatre promptly at 8:30, would be admitted for 1¢ (war tax only). It sounded like a crazy stunt, but I figured this way — we only get 10¢ (and tax) from the kids, and even if twenty or thirty should do it, I'd only be out three dollars; and we have a band concert from 8 to 9, with a big crowd on the street, and if the crowd saw some "colored" boys come down to the show and stand around — they'd wonder what was doing, at least. And things worked lovely! Several of the poor boys, who couldn't hardly spend the money in cash to see the show, blacked up with burnt cork, and got in to see "Uncle Tom;" and several of the well-to-do young boys did it for devilment! Between them they certainly attracted attention, and we had an excellent crowd, too; some of it, at least, undoubtedly following the boys in to see what next. A big town guy may not understand how to handle kids — but let any small town fellow read this, and he'll know it can work.

"Another little idea — we don't run every night in the week; and a Boy Scout Council just organized here had an awful time to get a meeting place, so I donated them the use of the show any night I wasn't using it. Were they tickled? Well, leave it to them to boost us all they can! And many of the older folks are back of the organization, too, and we naturally get in their eyesight, as well.

"Well, I'll call a halt this time, and see what you think about this stuff first. Then if it helps anyone, maybe I'll come again. By the way, that 'darkey' stunt would make good on Paramount Sennett Comedy 'Uncle Tom Without the Cabin,' wouldn't it?

"Hope someone can get a tip out of this any way. It's all real, genuine, 'small-town' stuff — only 1200 population, 245 seats, and hourly interurban service to two cities within a 15-mile radius!

"Yours truly,
"O. W. JASTRAM."

Wallace Reid Wins Popularity Contest in Cincinnati

ONE of the most successful publicity "stunts" used in Cincinnati in a long time was the "popularity contest," conducted by Manager I. Libson of the Walnut Theatre to determine who is the most popular moving picture star in Cincinnati. For two weeks the newspapers carried articles on the contest and the letters containing names of favorite screen stars poured into Manager Libson's office.

Wallace Reed was finally awarded the crown as the most popular star and autographed photos of him were sent to all who cast their ballots in his favor. Mary Pickford was second choice.

It Isn't New But It's Good Stuff

MANAGER William Koch of the New Aster theatre, Minneapolis, scored a big hit the week of October 5 with a novel advertising stunt on "Six Feet Four," William Russell's most recent Western play. For a week in advance of the show's opening, Mr. Koch placed in front of his theatre an empty barrel on the inside of which was a neat card bearing the following: "See William Russell in 'Six Feet Four' at the New Aster Oct. 12." The top of the barrel was covered with a fine wire screen and two long boards, on either side of the barrel were joined at the top by a card which read: "It's six feet four." To add to the mystery of the barrel, Mr. Koch tacked a small card on the side of the barrel which read "Do not handle or feed."

The barrel was placed on the outside of the sidewalk directly in front of the box office and it is estimated that over ten thousand people peeked into it each day. The value of the stunt was greatly enhanced by the fact that once a person learned that the barrel was empty, did not "give away" the idea and urged others to peer into the depths of the case. Mr. Koch also hired an exceedingly tall boy to walk about the city during noon hours with a canvas sign reading "See William Russell in 'Six Feet Four' at the New Aster." To impress upon the minds of prospective patrons that the Russell picture was one of the best ever shown at the theatre, in all of his newspaper advertising Mr. Koch gave guarantee the show to be exceptional and offered to cheerfully refund admission to those who did not believe the picture as meritorious as he claimed. A copy of Mr. Koch's extraordinary advertising accompanies this article. It is worth reproducing.

The contest aroused great interest among the filmgoers. It served a two-fold purpose, from Manager Libson's standpoint. First it attracted attention to the Walnut Theatre, and secondly, it showed newspaper editors how great a personal interest picture patrons take in their favorite entertainment.

A barrelfull of curiosity

Lacey Again to the Fore in Exploitation

THE lobby display which Frank Lacey, manager of the Majestic Theatre of Portland, designed for his showing of "The Shepherd of the Hills," the picturization of Harold Wright Bell's famous novel, may not have been entirely instrumental for the fact that some 40,000 persons wended their way to the Majestic during the film's engagement, but Manager Lacey is willing to go on record that it was an aid in the business which his house did on this picture.

Incidentally this is said to be the record run for any Portland cinema theatre, the receipts for the Mack Sennett special production, "Yankee Doodle in Berlin," which showed in Portland at the Majestic last spring still remain high for any theatre in the northwest. Mr. Lacey explains this by the fact that "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" showed in Portland during the time of the Victory Rose Festival, when all loyal northwesterners gathered in the rose city and nine out of ten of them wanted to see what Mack Bennett's bathing girls looked like viewed at close range.

The lobby display which is shown in the accompanying illustration was constructed by the use of a scenic canvass of a pastoral scene showing a shepherd sitting on a hill watching his flock completely surrounded by autumn leaves cleverly banked about the ceiling of the lobby and twined about the side walls and openings to the street.

Ads were placed in each of the daily papers the week preceding the showing of "The Shepherd of the Hills," which announced the coming of the picture. The ads failed to give details as to when the picture would be shown and considerable free advertising was done, it is believed, by innocent by-standers arguing over the matter.

Rialto in Denver Co-operates with Department Store

THE Denver Dry Goods Company is the largest department store in Denver, and the Rialto theatre is the livest wire among the movie houses. Hence it was natural that the two combine their advertising for mutual benefit.

The pictures show the windows of the Denver Dry Goods Co. during the run of "The Witness for the Defense" at the Rialto. Thousands and thousands of shoppers crowded the sidewalks during the week that this attractive display was shown.

Not only did the Denver Dry Goods Co. give the Rialto an entire show-window on Sixteenth street, during the run of the film and one entire window on California street, but there were similar displays inside the store.

Co-operative Advertising Again

A plan which while it may not be entirely original, but which is always effective was worked out in Freeport, Ill., by the manager of the Strand and Majestic theatres. Co-operative advertising was placed in the newspapers and the title, "The Right to Happiness," was used prominently in each advertisement. Department stores, plumbers, drug stores, shoe stores, etc., carried advertisements, all of which kept the words "The Right to Happiness," before the public of Freeport for several days in advance of the showing.

One of the advertisements, that of Stukenberg & Borchers, a shop for ladies read as follows: "If you want to thoroughly appreciate 'The Right to Happiness,' go to see this wonderful picture in one of our Printzess Coats or suits."

Several days before the showing of the picture, an advertisement was carried in the paper carrying the following message:

"Tomorrow, Friday and Saturday, a certain Freeport citizen will be on the streets and in various stores. This person may be a boy, girl, man or woman. We are not telling who it is. That is for you to find out. Simply say to this person: "Are you an individual who has the right to happiness?" Then if you are the first one to have addressed the right person, you will be given an order for $25.000 in trade, or $10.00 cash, provided you have this ad in your possession and will show it. Easy, isn't it?"

It is needless to say that thousands of persons became interested in the advertisement and on the designated days and hours, everybody who patronized any of the stores which were in on the contest was on a hunt for the mysterious person, with the right to happiness.

Several columns of free publicity appeared in the newspapers of Freeport during the time the contest was on, and the stunt aroused a great amount of interest among all classes, men, woman, and children.

Viewing the "radium" at the New Koppin theatre, Detroit

It Smacks a Bit of the Circus But Will Get Attention

WHAT is said to be the most effective exploitation stunt ever accomplished in the city of Detroit was put over recently with the result that a new serial was given a running start such as has never been equalled in that territory.

The "The Great Radium Mystery" was scheduled on the opening program of the New Koppin Theatre in Detroit. The manager realized that serial exploitation was not something new or that old stunts could be worked. The name of the serial itself led to the most novel idea.

Telegraph forms were used to inform the public that two men were coming to Detroit from Colorado mines, bearing a quantity of radium valued at $125,000, and that the radium would be on exhibition under guard in front of the theatre. This started the fun. Few people have seen radium except on watches in a light form. Here was a chance to see a tube of the precious substance.

This is the manner in which the scheme was worked. A safe was borrowed from a Detroit safe concern and inside was built up a little frame covered with velvet, such as is used by jewelers for background in their windows. Small holes were pierced in the velvet and underneath the frame a small automobile dash-light was placed with the velvet so hung that the wires, etc., were not visible. The storage battery was placed in a box on which the same rested.

A tiny test tube containing some of the radio light substance scrapped from the dial of a light watch was placed on the velvet. When the current was turned on from the battery the light from behind and the glow from the radio substance combined to effect what looked exactly like a tube of radium.

Two men dressed as mine-guards were hired and stood beside the radium display at all times. Naturally this added to the idea that the radium was very valuable and that much expense was incurred in obtaining this radium for exhibition purposes.

'Ten-Shun

FOR several weeks we have been publishing a series of articles written by exhibitors on admissions. In our copy basket are many more letters which are waiting their turn.

We have found every letter so far received mighty interesting, and from what we have heard from exhibitors those which have been published have been received with universal acclaim.

But there is one thing we just can't understand, since the policy expressed is in direct variance with our ideas and we usually have the courage of our convictions and that is that nearly every exhibitor states with positive conviction that he believes in keeping the prices of admissions standard regardless of the film rental he has to pay for his program or the entertainment value it possesses.

We had almost come to the opinion that we were the only people in the world who could see an argument for a sliding scale of prices based on the actual entertainment value of the show given.

However, we die hard when we once get an idea in our nut, and, therefore, we jump at the opportunity of forcing exhibitors who believe in the standard price policy to defend their opinions by calling attention to an article published in this issue under the caption of "What's Wrong With Films?" written by Hiram Abrams, and daring them to answer Mr. Abrams' arguments which are contrary to the opinions expressed by our contributing editors.

A general invitation is also extended to every person interested in the industry to write us a letter arguing pro and con as the persons may see the proposition, on the subject.

Personally we are squeezing for the sliding scale side but we are open to conviction.

These are the chaps who guarded the "radium" for the New Koppin theatre.

Inaugurating a New Service

This issue inaugurates a new service for exhibitors under the above caption which will explain itself.

For some time we have been preparing the way which would enable us to give you the full program at each of America's foremost photoplay theatres. Full instructions for a special assignment had to be given to our correspondents, arrangements with the theatres had to be completed and plans for getting the information by wire worked out.

All this was planned before printing conditions which have made publishing the News extremely difficult and reduced the size of our book, were thrust upon us. It is because of these conditions that the new service begins under less favorable circumstances than we had hoped.

This first showing is abbreviated for lack of space and the necessity of getting copy to the printer very early, in fact before several correspondents have been able to get their telegrams through to us.

The cities which will be covered on this new service are as follows: New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Baltimore, Buffalo, Pittsburgh, Chicago, Cleveland, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The programs at each first run photoplay theatre will be listed in full, however, with no attempt at reviewing, since we believe that you are interested only in what the houses over the country are running, what each manager does to build up a well-balanced bill, and desire that information to be furnished you in the least possible space, so you may view it at a glance.

This is what we aim to do for you. Let you see what the leading showmen are running each week. Our desire is ever to make the Exhibitors Service Bureau what it's caption implies, a service. We hope you will like this latest addition.

Report Big Call for Blanche Sweet in New Pathe Film

According to the reports arriving from the Pathe Exchanges, Mr. F. C. Quimby, the Director, has received a large number of bookings for the coming release of Blanche Sweet in "The Woman Of Pleasure". Inquiries, too, regarding this new feature are said to be coming in in great numbers. Both these fact are taken to augur a sweeping success for the production, when the results begin to materialize in the box-offices.

Select Pictures Buys "Scream In Night"

Select Pictures Corporation this week announces the purchase of an elaborate production entitled "A Scream In the Night," which will be distributed as a Select special attraction. The plot of the picture concerns one of the foremost questions of the ages and is woven around the attempt of an insane scientist to prove that the Darwinian theory has replaced the fable of Adam and Eve and that man can revert to a type.

The picture is made from an original story by Charles A. Logue. It was produced by B. A. Rolfe, introducing Ruth Budd, a new and charming screen personality, who is seen in the role of "Darwa." It was directed by Burton King and Leander DeCordova.

Hamilton Dons Old Make-Up; New Player with Lehrman

Lloyd (Ham) Hamilton reverts to his old character of "Ham" for a few scenes in the first of the Henry Lehrman comedies being produced for First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Hamilton has not used the "Ham" make-up for three years and in this picture it simply forms the basis of a temporary disguise.

Suzanne Avery has answered the call of the silver sheet and will be seen in Henry Lehrman comedies, appearing in a pleasing role opposite Billie Ritchie. The comedy will be personally supervised by Mr. Lehrman.

Katherine MacDonald Makes Hit in "The Thunderbolt"

The First National announces that Katherine MacDonald, in "The Thunderbolt," her first production of a series of twelve to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, is being received in different parts of the nation with great approval, according to reports coming from various sections.

At Chicago, in Balaban & Katz's Riviera Theatre, "The Thunderbolt," received an ovation at every performance, it is reported, and broke all existing box-office reports for the week.

Gladys Coburn to be Opposite William Farnum in New Film

Gladys Coburn has been engaged to play opposite William Farnum in the next feature which he will make for Fox Film Corporation. J. Gordon Edwards will direct the production, which promises to offer the versatile actor in a type of role which is new to the patrons of silent drama.

Under the temporary title of "Pierre LeGrand" work has already started on the production. In the Farnum production Miss Coburn confidently expects to surpass her previous efforts in "Blazing Love" and "The Primitive Call."

Claire Du Brey and Yvonne Pavis have been engaged for important roles in "The Walk Offs," in which May Allison is starring for Screen Classics, Inc.

Pathe Honors Exchange Director

November is Called The "Quimby Month" for Exchange Director Prizes for Branch Manufacturers

PAUL Brunet, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe, has just announced that November will be designated "Quimby Tribute Month" out of respect for the work accomplished by Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges, since he was appointed to the sales chieftainship just two years ago.

To make November one of the most notable, if not the supreme month in the business achievements of Pathe, three prizes valued at $2,500 are to be awarded to the branch managers who prove the most energetic in bringing an increased volume of business.

First prize is a $1,000 platinum diamond ring, "to be awarded to the wife of the manager who secures, during November, the greatest amount of new business in proportion to the rating of his office and the greatest increase in collections over the average collections for his office for the months of July, August and September."

Second prize is a $500 platinum diamond ring "to be awarded to wife of the manager whose showing is second best to the winner of the first prize."

Special prize, $1,000 in cash, "to be awarded by Hal Roach, producer of the Harold Lloyd comedies, to the branch manager who secures the greatest amount of business in proportion to the rating of his office, on the special $100,000 two reel Lloyd comedies during the month of November."

The fact that several of the Pathe branch managers do not possess such a valuable adjunct, at this time, as a wife, does not make them ineligible for competition. They are advised in the event they win, to get themselves a wife to decorate the diamond ring; but, should they remain faithful to their bachelor traditions, they may have the stones remounted for their own use.

It was just two years ago that Fred Quimby was called from the West, where he was Pacific Coast District Manager, to assume the important executive position in the home office. Soon after taking command of the entire sales organization, Pathe's business began to improve, and to-day it is at the height of its efficiency. That is the reason for "Quimby Tribute Month." In the event of a tie the full award will be made in each instance to every contestant. All reports must be in before Nov. 15.

The Release of "The Superman"

Melodrama, Released by The W. H. Productions Co., Will Combine Thrills, Fun and Romance

"THE Superman," the six reel photo-drama to be released by the W. H. Productions Company, is said to be a melodrama of adventure, humor and love. The production is reported to possess some daring and unexpected situations. Samson, who is featured in "The Superman," is expected to make a lasting impression. The display of strength and courage, shown in the feats which he is credited to perform in the new picture, is considered to be of such a character as will make the audiences thrill in consternation. Scaling high walls, fleeing across narrow steel structures hundreds of feet in the air, and dangling at the end of a rope in mid-air are some of the stunts in which Samson is reported to engage in "The Superman."

Although "The Superman" is intended primarily to be a thriller, yet there are other appeals in the feature, according to reports. There is a love story running throughout, and in addition the claim is advanced that the interest of the plot itself together with the adventurous, humorous, and romantic situations involved will combine to render this an unusually attractive photoplay from the viewpoint of the box-office.

The various publicity and exploitation angles possible in advertising this production are another feature which it is asserted will assure its success at the box-office. The announcement is made in this connection that every line of publicity, the posters, lobby-displays, photographs, booklets, advertising cuts and "stunt" suggestions are so prepared as to prove an additional magnet to the motion-picture houses running "The Superman."

Fifty More Prints for Features by Fairbanks and Griffith

The insistent demand for bookings on United Artists Corporation's first two releases, the Fairbanks picture, "His Majesty, the American" and D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," have resulted in twenty-five additional prints on each subject being placed throughout the company's exchanges.

The big number of prints originally furnished on these subjects was thought ample to take care of the bookings, but the prints will be working so continuously, that the additional prints were found to be absolutely necessary.

In announcing the distribution of the additional prints, Hiram Abrams pointed out that the new prints would assure to the smaller theatres first class films when their play dates arrive.

The original quota of prints through hard usage might perhaps not have been in perfect condition by the time the smaller theatres received them, but the additional prints will guarantee that every theatre playing these productions will receive its film in first class condition.

Many New York Theatres Booking Realart Products, Says Adler

Theatre owners in and near New York City are following the lead of the big chain managements and signing up for Realart productions, according to Lester W. Adler, manager of the New York branch of Realart Pictures Corporation. Many new houses have been signed in the past week; and with the prerelease showing of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard Production, at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, increased interest in the date for the initial productions is being shown, he says.

As the date of the first Realart release draws closer more help is being secured for the New York Exchange. Irving I. Berg, who has been with Exhibitors' Mutual has been secured as cashier and assumes his new duties this week.

Griffiths' "The Great Question" Ready Soon for Distribution

D. W. Griffiths' initial production for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, entitled "The Great Queston," a dramatic portrait of home-folks, will in the next few days be turned over to First National and be prepared for distribution. Lillian Gish, Robert Harron and George Fawcett are among the screen favorites Griffiths has selected for his initial First National effort.

The plot for the picture takes place on a farm among home folks. Every element of pathos, comedy, dramatic tension and delightful inference is said to be included in this Griffiths production.

MacManus Producing Prison Reform Story in Film

Edward A. MacManus whose advent in the moving picture production field with his new technique in photo-play dramas has aroused considerable favorable comment, especially with his first big production, "The Lost Battalion" is now busy completing his second production. In "The Lost Battalion" Mr. MacManus produced a screen play in which all the characters were developed sympathetically but without sentimentality. In his new production which concerns prison reform and the present brutal and inhuman treatment of prison inmates Mr. MacManus has developed an underlying and deeper note that will mark a new step in the forward development of human interest plays for the moving picture theatre; in this particular production the story of which has been written by the prison reformer, Thomas Mott Osborne, Mr. MacManus is said to have brought to the surface all the charm, pathos, delicious humor and heart exposed sympathy of the more unfortunate element of the submerged tenth.

Doubleday Making One-Reel Comics and Two-Reel Western Subjects

TWO new producing companies are at work in Los Angeles in the making of one-reel comedies and two-reel Western subjects. These are the units of the Doubleday Producing Company recently organized with Ovid Doubleday as president, L. S. McKee, secretary and Charles Mack, manager. The comedies will have the trade brand of "Arolf Productions" and the players working under the direction of Harry Moody are Pearl Elmore, Billy Evans, Bobby Furer, Irene Smith and J. C. Cook. L. S. McMcKee is directing the Western Company and Vera McGinnis will be the featured player. The subject will have the trade name of "Double-day Films." These two units are working at the Bronz studio on Allesandro Street, Hollywood.

All Robertson-Cole Units Busy

Many Big Productions Now in Course of Production, Featuring a Number of Artists

SPURRED by the rapid growth and permanent and progressive policy of Robertson-Cole, the various producing units are busily engaged in completing a diversified screen output — pictures which are claimed will measure to the same high standard of excellence set by the reviewing board of review of the corporation.

No limit has been put to the cost of the Bessie Barriscale photoplays and each succeeding picture essays to transcend rather than equal its successor. "Beckoning Roads," adapted by Harvey Gates from the novel of Jeanne Judson affords, in a striking manner, a facile cleavage for Miss Barriscale to display her definite charm and artistry.

At the Brentwood studios a new picture, of the type and atmosphere made familiar by this producing unit of Robertson-Cole is being shot under the direction of Claude H. Mitchell and reports from advance information indicates that ZaSu Pitts, the unusual and whimsical comedienne will find greater scope for her talents than ever in this new play. The theme is timely and in the leading part Miss Pitts is seen as a young American girl, who is prompted purely by the unselfish desire to do something at all times for the benefit of someone else, a refreshing note in the present day spirit of unrest.

Interest will no doubt be aroused by the release of the Edith Storey offering by the Haworth studios. Miss Storey returns to the screen after a year spent in War Service and with an added zest for her professional labors. As an emotional actress of exceptional emotional powers Miss Storey is claimed to be admirably fitted in the role of Kate Mariner, the heroine of that widely read novel, "The Golden Hope."

The unique record made by Sessue Hayakawa for artistic productions in translating the glamour and lure of the Orient in his previous portrayals and characteristic settings of Japan are said to be equally colorful in the scenes of "The Illustrious Prince," the E. Phil Oppenheim mystery story adapted for the screen by Richard Schrayer.

H. B. Warner after a veritable travel throughout the Indies and the far East in a succession of romantic melodramas now returns in a truly American subject, in "A Fugitive from Matrimony." In the role of a suave, alert and manly adventurer, Mr. Warner is without peer. As Raffles he has delighted thousands. In the play now in process of building he is seen in a part of the same type. He wears fashionable clothes and then in disguise is taken for a crook; is forced to announce his betrothal to a young woman with whom he has but a casual acquaintance; undergoes other thrilling mishaps, including a fight and final triumph. "A Fugitive From Matrimony," is described as snappy, semi-humorous and there is no line of demarkation between laughs and suspense so fast they follow; and admirers of Mr. Warner will no doubt be attracted to a merium which exploits the distinctive abilities to the tenth degree.

The conclusion of a contract with Maurice Tourneur finds one of this director's productions listed among the Robertson-Cole special releases. "The Broken Butterfly," an emotional play of rare interpretation will mark this artist's connection with this corporation.

"The Broken Butterfly"" has been adapted for the screen from the novel by Penelope Knapp and introduces Lew Cody in the role of the musician and composer.

Shirley Mason Signs With Fox

Miss Mason Who has an Enviable Dramatic Record Will Begin on First Feature Soon

FOX FILM CORPORATION announces that Shirley Mason has been signed to a long-term contract. Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, closed the agreement with Miss Mason shortly before he left Los Angeles for New York. The little artist will begin work shortly on her first feature for the Fox program.

Shirley Mason was born in Brooklyn, N. Y., in 1901 and made her first professional appearance in William Faversham's company at the age of four. Her education was received at the hands of private tutors.

Miss Mason made her screen debut with the old K. E. S. E. combination, appearing in productions released under the Edison trademark. She has been a star for several years, and was last featured by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in comedies from the pen of John Emerson and Anita Loos.

Miss Mason is but five feet tall and weighs 94 pounds, but she is a lover of the great out-doors. She rides, swims and drives a car. However, her greatest hobby, it is said, is to hide away in the music room of her home and play over and over her favorite melodies.

William Fox will choose for his newest star plays that will suit her peculiar abilities. Miss Mason demands a certain type of photoplay in which to do her best work, and the scenario department is now engaged selecting such material as will best fit her. Announcement will be made shortly of her director and the name of her first Fox production.

Tower Film Sells State Rights on Its Various Products

Tower Film Corporation report that many territories have already been disposed of on their various productions, viz., "The Superman," the six-reel photo-drama; "Some Nerve," formerly entitled "Gentlemen of Nerve," featuring Charlie Chaplain; the series of 18 Keystone and 12 Arbuckle single-reel comedy re-issues; and the series of six Keystone Kid comedies, each one reel in length.

Paramount's Recent Releases

Arsene Lupin Story and a Comedy-Drama, "His Official Fiancee." Released on October 26

A MYSTERY play, based upon an Arsene Lupin story by Maurice LeBlanc, the celebrated French author of detective tales, shares the honors with a comedy-drama in which Vivian Martin is starred, on the schedule of Paramount-Artcraft releases for October 26th.

"The Teeth of the Tiger" is the title of the mystery play and David Powell and Marguerite Courtot are featured in the cast.

In "The Teeth of the Tiger," which has an American setting, Arsene Lupin becomes involved in the investigation of the murder of his millionaire acquaintance, Henry Forbes. Mystery surrounds the crime and several innocent persons are suspected. But the master intellect of Lupin, trained in the inner workings of the criminal mind, discovers the guilty one and brings him to justice after a series of adventures. A pretty love story is worked into the plot, which is declared to be thoroughly convincing throughout and keeps one baffled as to the identity of the murderer until the last moment.

The choice of David Powell to play the role of Arsene Lupin is described as a happy one. He looks the part and is temperamentally fitted to it. Marguerite Courtot gives an excellent performance in the part of the heroine, it is said. Others in the cast are Myrtle Stedman, Templar Saxe, Joseph Herbert, Charles L. MacDonald, Riley Hatch, Charles Gerard and Frederick Burton.

"His Official Fiancee" is an adaptation by Edith M. Kennedy of the novel of the same name by Berta Ruck. The author is said to have woven an entertaining story about a brand-new and amusing idea, and it is predicted that those who have read the book will be among its most enthusiastic boosters, when it appears in motion picture form.

The picture gives Vivian Martin the role of a girl who runs things, including a man. She is the stenographer of a business man who, for business reasons, has to be engaged for a period of time. So he hires his pretty stenographer to be his official fiancee. She doesn't like the job, but she needs the money, and, accordingly, she signs a contract. That's the situation that starts the picture and what follows is said to be all good fun — sometimes humorous, sometimes pathetic, and above all, romantic.

Forrest Stanley, of Thomas H. Ince fame, is the business man and Mollie McConnel, Vera Sisson, Hugh Huntley, James Neill, Bobby Bolder, Tom Ricketts, Katherine Sohn, Katherine Van Buren and Virginia Foltz are included in the cast. The production was directed by Robert G. Vignola.

Vitagraph Makes Big Claims for "The Vengeance of Durand"

The time is drawing near for the release of "The Vengeance of Durand," Alice Joyce's new special production of Rex Beach's story, which was adapted to the screen for Vitagraph by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

Vitagraph has gone to great pains to exploit the special production throughout this country and Canada, thoroughly convinced that it is one of the best features produced anywhere in several years and that its assurance to exhibitors and the public that it is a super-feature in the strictest sense is justified.

Vidor's "Poor Relations" Said to be Human in Its Construction

L. C. Haynes, president of the Brentwood Film Corporation, is certain the latest production made under the direction of King W. Vidor, will carry a wide appeal and will find favor with audiences throughout the country. Mr. Haynes is the man who first rewarded Vidor with real support in putting his ideas on the screen in the form of productions, and he is satisfied that the tremendous success of the King Vidor pictures justified his faith in the young director.

In discussing the latest picture, Mr. Haynes said:

"There can be but few people of mature age who will fail to appreciate the conditions and situations which the production, "Poor Relations" shows. It seems to be a necessary change for all of us when we go from a small town to a large city, to feel a certain measure of superiority and pity for our friends and relations who are still living back in the little 'burg.'

"I believe and feel that in this picture, even as in "The Other Half," we have suggested the wholesome idea that all those with whom we come in contact should be estimated according to the real qualities they show, and that such a manner of consideration widely adopted would result in a healthier understanding between what we now consider our many classes."

"The Sacred Flame" Issued Soon; Details of Theme Secret

On Friday of last week a private showing of "The Sacred Flame" was staged for the press at Wurlitzer Fine Arts Hall. Up until this time Abraham S. Schomer of the Schomer-Ross Producing Company had carefully withheld all the details of the plot, in the belief that effective publicity can best be secured by keeping the story of the picture from the knowledge of the public; so that the audiences, unacquainted with the plot beforehand will be enabled to derive full benefit from the surprise elements involved in the unfolding of the plot on the screen.

The only details that Mr. Schomer is willing to give out about the theme of "The Sacred Flame" is that the picture is built up around the lives and loves of big business and professional men of New York and their women-folk. With the conclusion of the press showing E. S. Manheimer, sales representative, is now arranging for a Broadway production of the feature and for its country-wide distribution, the plans of which will be made known next week, according to reports.

Beatrice Joy Engaged by Metro to Appear in "Right of Way"

After a search for an ideal type that he had conducted for a month, Maxwell Karger, Director General of Screen Classics, Inc., has engaged Beatrice Joy to play the leading feminine role in "The Right of Way." A picturization of the celebrated novel by Sir Gilbert Parker, starring Bert Lytell in the part of "Beauty" Steele, will be Metro's next Lytell release following "Lombardi, Ltd."

The BIG 3 A Week

Chas. C. Pettijohn with Selznick

Able Lawyer and Student of Exhibitor Problems Enters Upon New Position as "Assistant to the President"

FOLLOWING a brief three years spent in the maelstrom of motion picture affairs and during which time he has become known throughout the country, Charles C. Pettijohn last week assumed the duties of assistant to Lewis J. Selznick of Selznick Pictures.

Some years ago Mr Pettijohn, then an Indianapolis lawyer, attracted attention by his successful handling of exhibitors' affairs in the Hoosier State where adverse legislation was at the time threatening the picture men.

Coming to New York he was made secretary and general counsel for the American Exhibitors Association when it was founded. His able and diplomatic handling of affairs at that time when exhibitors were far from meeting on a common ground to discuss differences and take self protectionary steps, was largely instrumental in bringing about a merger of exhibitors' bodies.

Later Mr. Pettijohn became general counsel to Exhibitors Mutual, which position he left to accept his present one with Selznick.

During the past few years he has traveled throughout the country, meeting the greater number of exhibitors throughout the land. Wherever problems confronted the exhibitor and at practically every exhibitor convention, Mr. Pettijohn has been on the spot lending his efforts toward smoothing out the tangles. More recently his legal ability and far-famed pointed oratory, has been lent in the fight in Washington to have Congress repeal the various taxes of the industry. Several weeks ago his speech and suggestions while pleading the cause of the exhibitors at the amusement tax hearing in the nation's Capitol, were the bright spots of the hearing and received laudatory comment not only in the journals devoted to the industry but in the newspapers of the country.

It was following his return from Washington that negotiations were opened to induce him to joint Selznick. A proposition was finally advanced which Mr. Pettijohn termed as very generous, and which he felt bound to accept. His new duties will be of the greatest importance, and it is felt that he will be in fact, as well as in name, the right-hand man to Selznick, who is believed by many in the industry to have acquired an executive whose abilities are bound to redound to the advancement of the Selznick and Select picture interests.

Famous Cowboy, Buck Jones, Signs to Appear in Fox Features

"Buck" Jones, outstanding figure of American cowboys in the world war, entertainer of royalty, and one of the greatest horsemen the world has known, will star in Fox features. The contract between the famous cowboy-soldier and Fox Film Corporation has been signed, and the scenario department is seeking stories that will properly exploit the new star.

"Buck" Jones' life has been filled with adventure, and excitement, and of thrill. A veteran of the cavalry and air services of Uncle Sam, he was attached to the staff of a French general before the United States entered the war, and his name and fame traveled the length of the battle-line — from Switzerland to the sea.

His first film feature will appear in 1920.

"Desert Gold" As Price-Raiser

Feature Has Been so Well Received That Many use it to Introduce Increased Admission Rates

WORD is received that exhibitor reports to the Hodkinson organization from all sections of the United States continue to emphasize the volume of public patronage being drawn by Benjamin B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner's first Zane Grey production "Desert Gold."

To date many first run exhibitors, it is said, have used or contemplate using "Desert Gold" as the introductory picture on which they intend permanently to advance their prices of admission. When exhibitors take this step, many of them exercise justifiable caution in selecting a picture of great power and popularity that will be worth the increased prices and that will impress audiences with its increased values.

In spite of the steel strike and a heavy snowstorm, the Majestic Theatre, Pueblo, Col., shattered all house records with "Desert Gold" in its first week of increased prices, it is said.

In Salt Lake where the new Rialto is to open with advanced prices for the best pictures that can be selected from the market "Desert Gold" was the first picture booked by the management and incidentally Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Author's production "The Westerners" was the second production booked by Manager Cutts.

In Newport News, where there has been an easing off in patronage since the end of the war slowed down government work in that city, "Desert Gold," it is asserted, again raised the patronage to its old wartime levels at the Imperial Theatre.

In Denver, Manager A. G. Talbot of the America Theatre did the biggest business of the fall season with "Desert Gold" telegraphing the distributors of the picture that he had standing room only and a turn-away line every night for a week.

Garson Production Bought for a Number of States

The Merit Film Co. has purchased the states of Nebraska, Iowa, Kansas and Missouri, in addition to the states of Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming and Southern Idaho, on Harry Garson's production of the "Hushed Hour," starring Blanche Sweet, and an all-star cast.

"A Twilight Baby," New Lehrman Comedy, Ready by Nov. 1

After ten weeks of actual production work, the first of the Henry Lehrman comedies to be distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is at last nearing completion, and it is expected that the negative will be ready for shipment to the First National headquarters in New York before the first of November.

Mr. Lehrman this week settled on "A Twilight Baby" as the title under which the picture will be released. Lloyd (Ham) Hamilton, who is featured in "A Twilight Baby," is supported by a cast which includes Virginia Rappe, Charles Dorety, Harry Todd, Harry McCoy and Rube Miller. Miss Rappe, who plays the leading feminine role, is a newcomer to the field of screen comedy. Jack White directed the picture, under the personal supervision of Mr. Lehrman.

"Burlesque on Carmen" and Joint Attractions Near Completion

Victor Kremer stated this week that the finishing touches were now being put on his production of Charlie Chaplin in Essanay's "A Burlesque on Carmen," which he will present as an attraction in conjunction with the Carmen Dancing Girls, Spanish Jazz Band and special Comedy Bull Fight. Special scenery has been built to carry out the Spanish atmosphere necessary to the presentation of the bull fight, it is said. Max Schock, responsible for the presentation of the "Mack Sennett Bathing Girls," Revue, has been engaged to stage the dance numbers, which according to reports, will be participated in by ten girls, led by a well-known Spanish dancer. Rehearsals of the production will begin next week. William J. McKenna has written a special song, entitled "Carmen," which will be one of the features of the performance, and is also responsible for the musical setting which will be interpreted by an orchestra of twenty-two pieces.

Due to the abnormal conditions which prevail in New York as regards theatres, Kremer has decided to offer his production for the first performances to theatre goers out of town. Bert Ennis, who is handling the attraction, is this week in Detroit, where arrangements will be completed to show the Chaplin feature with its various novelties in one of the biggest theatres of that city.

H. M. Bermann Makes Inspection of the Universal Exchanges

H. M. Bermann, General Manager of Exchanges of the Universal, has returned to New York after a flying trip of inspection made to the following Exchanges: Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha, Kansas City, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Detroit and Milwaukee.

Mr. Bermann is very enthusiastic over the many bookings which are being made in these cities on "The Right to Happiness", the Allen Holubar super-production, in which Dorothy Phillips is starred.

Coincident with this trip, Mr. Bermann instructed the various exchange managers on their campaign of exploitation for "Blind Husbands," the latest Universal production, which is soon to be released.

Transatlantic Seeks Good Films

Purchase of Five Reel Feature is Announced; Open for Meritorious Subjects any Length

THE Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., has just consummated a deal whereby they control the world's rights for "The Marriage Blunder," a five-reel feature, featuring Vera Sissons and Sydney Mason.

It is the intention of the Transatlantic to release this picture on a program that is at present being formulated. The purchasing department of this company is apparently out to buy everything of merit that is to be obtained on the independent market.

The agent of the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., in London in a report received a few days ago says in part:

> "During the last few months the opportunities of the sale of independent productions in the British market have been growing less and less and many good program pictures which a year ago found a quick sale on this side of the Atlantic are lying in the vaults in this city. This is accounted for by the fact that English theatres are overstocked with films and the fact is, most cinema theatres are now booked up as far as eighteen months ahead. This in turn is accounted for by the block booking system which has been introduced by some of the biggest renting houses in England. These firms owning exclusive rights in serial films make it a condition that the exhibitor books a number of mediocre subjects in order to secure the larger productions. This has entailed considerable hardship on the small renter, who, if he purchases a big production to-day, must wait eighteen months before he receives a penny in bookings as there is no deposit system on booking contracts in this country.
> "The open market system which is being revived is practically the one system whereby films can be readily disposed of."

The open market, by way of explanation to the American producer, consists of a London agency showing every week about eight weeks ahead of a given release date a week's program. This program is shown in London and all film distributing centers in the Kingdom. All renters, or exchangemen, as they are called in this country, are represented at these showings and they order the number of prints which they can use. The prints are sold at a certain price per foot and for a good subject it is possible to sell as many as eighty to one hundred prints. The open market system in England is particularly suitable for one and two-reel productions.

"The Thunderbolt" Hits Hard

First Reports Would Point to a Successful Career for the First National Feature

THE initial reports on the first-run presentations of "The Thunderbolt," starring Katherine MacDonald, in her first production to be released by The First National Exhibitors' Circuit, indicate that the picture has proved to be a winner, says a communication just received.

Reports from three key cities giving the box office results of first-run presentations of "The Thunderbolt," Katherine MacDonald's first starring production released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit, indicate that she has "arrived" to a degree that exceeds the most sanguine expectations of Circuit officials and the producers in charge of her studio work.

Week run records for several big feature attractions played in the last two months were exceeded by "The Thunderbolt" at the Broadway Theatre, Richmond, Va., according to K. F. Finlay, the manager. This telegram to B. P. Finemana, of the Attractions Distributing Corporation announced that several hundred patrons were unable to gain admission at the last evening performance of the week's run, and he has received a score of letters and telephone requests to play a return engagement with it.

For what is claimed to be the first time in the history of the Madison Theatre, Detroit, John H. Kunsky made public the actual figures to prove the popularity with which Miss MacDonald's initial starring production was greeted by local theatregoers. Taking, as the basis for the calculation, the gross receipts for four previous record-breaking runs, he announced that "The Thunderbolt" had exceeded one of them by $3,360.97; the second by $2,576.88; the third by $3,226.66, and the fourth by $1,271.766.

In the fifty-third week of its existence, the Riviera Theatre, the big northside first run house in Chicago, owned by Balabah & Katz, played to the highest total of paid admissions in its history with "The Thunderbolt," it is said.

Canyon Gets Farnum Reels Ready for Distribution

Jack Weinberg, president of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, presenting Franklyn Farnum in two-reel Western subjects, in speaking of the new releases this week, said:

"I am firmly convinced that the two-reel Western picture classics produced by our Company will fill a long felt want, as the public is eager at all times to see true stories of the West, if they are produced in real Western atmosphere and portrayed by a competent cast of players.

"The Canyon Pictures Corporation has first secured stories from such eminent authors as B. M. Bowers, Bertram Sinclair, Frederick Chapin, and William E. Wing.

"Broken Blossoms" Scores High

On New York Showing Fills Strand to Capacity for Week; Fine Reports in Other Cities

D. W. GRIFFITH'S "Broken Blossoms," opened at the Strand Theatre, New York, on Sunday, October 19th, to the biggest day's business in the history of the house.

Early Monday morning, Mr. Mark of the Strand Company called at the office of Mr. Abrams to extend his congratulations to United Artists Corporation for having brought Griffith's masterpiece to the theatres of the country. Mr. Mark told Mr. Abrams that the business done on Sunday was the biggest single day's business in the history of the theatre and that the police reserves had been called out to handle the crowds that stormed the doors for admission. Both Mr. Mark and Mr. Walter Hays told Mr. Abrams that they confidently expected to break all records for a week's business with "Broken Blossoms."

E. C. Bostick, Manager of the Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, who has put such a remarkable advance exploitation campaign ahead of "Broken Blossoms," wired Mr. Abrams as follows, under date of October 19th: "D. W. Griffith's 'Broken Blossoms' did the biggest business ever experienced in the history of the Merrill Theatre here to-day. Blocked street car tracks from noon on. Milwaukee press, city officials and patrons pronounce it Griffith's best production. Engagement is all that I anticipated and more."

From Washington, D. C., came a wire stating that "Broken Blossoms" opened to capacity at both the Palace and Columbia Theatres. Crowds were turned away afternoon and evening and the records were broken in both houses.

J. J. Parker of the Rialto Theatre, Portland, Oregon, wired that he opened Saturday, October 18th, with "Broken Blossoms" and shattered all previous records for day's business, and called "Broken Blossoms" the most wonderful picture ever produced.

H. T. Moore, of the Rialto Theatre, Tacoma, Washington, wired: "'Broken Blossoms' opened Sunday to more business than any picture ever played to in Tacoma. This production wonderful beyond description."

It seems certain that every prediction made for the phenomenal success of "Broken Blossoms" will be more than justified when the full story is told.

Wide Scope Of Pioneer Control

Pioneer Attractions are now Being Exhibited in Four-Fifths of American Territory

THE Pioneer announces that the full line of Pioneer Attractions are now working in over four-fifths of the American territory. This showing, in the face of competition is, it is claimed, the result of a carefully laid constructive program to build up a distributing organization, not on the mushroom process, but on a thoroughly conservative business basis.

In the territories where the Pioneer did not associate itself with the best existing exchange organizations, offices of its own have been opened up. This applies to New York, Cleveland, Detroit and Buffalo. M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer, stated that exchanges in every film center of the country have been projected for a long time past, and as soon as conditions warrant, they will be opened.

Another feature of the Pioneer opertions is the formation of a group of cooperative producing organizations, which will be under the general direction of the Pioneer General Staff. The Grace Davison interests were the first to align themselves, while the Physical Culture Photoplays, Inc., were the second on the list in the group. M. H. Hoffman expects to announce in the near future other companies which will produce and distribute under the Pioneer banner.

Announcement is made by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation that the next Tom Moore production, "Toby's Bow," will be completed soon.

Tom Moore Will Give Pre-Releas Show of "Soldiers of Fortune"

As a result of a special trip to Ne York this week, Tom Moore, the Washing ton, D. C. exhibitor, has arranged wit President Arthur S. Kane of Realart Pic tures Corporation for pre-release showing of the first Realart Picture—"Soldiers o Fortune," an Allan Dwan production, base upon Richard Harding Davis's novel. Mr Moore will show "Soldiers of Fortune" a the Garden Theatre for an indefinite run beginning Sundays, October 26th.

William H. Rippard, Realart's Washington manager, accompanied Mr. Moore t New York and assisted him in concluding arrangements for immediate showing o the picture. Mr. Moore has promised exploitation which will surpass anything ever done in Washington in behalf of motion pictures, and while in New York completed arrangements for an extensive campaign.

Van Loan, Picture Author, Will Write Feature for Tom Mix

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation reports the effecting of a contract between H. H. Van Loan, photoplay author and Mr. Sheehan acting for the Fox Film.

In securing its new five-year contract with the cowboy star, Tox Mix, the Fox organization also decided to acquire the best vehicles available for his use during the coming year, and the signing of the contract with Mr. Van Loan is the first step toward the equipment of the western lead with new material for pictures.

The important points of the contract are the specific agreement on the part of Mr. Van Loan to write for Mr. Mix and deliver within the next twelve months six big special productions of an original nature, such as have characterized the many successful plays of this versatile writer.

Exhibitor Signs Up Robertson-Cole Program

The policy of Robertson-Cole to furnish an output for the needs of an exhibitor desiring a complete program has met the approval of an exhibitor in the Dakotas, as the following telegram will demonstrate.

Writing the exchange manager in Denver, H. Deethick of the Auditorium declares himself as follows:

"When I opened my house I decided to give each exchange an opportunity to let my patrons decide what service I could afford to sign up with. The stars that you are sending are causing my patrons to ask for Robertson-Cole program. I shall be glad to contract permanently with your organization."

Express Embargo Broken by Plane Carrying Metro Film

A race from New York City to Albany between an airplane carrying a print of the Screen Classics, Inc. production, "Fair and Warmer," starring May Allison, and the Twentieth Century Limited, in which the former won, was one of the few spectacular features of the recent express embargo as it affected the Metro distributing organization.

Special Service Section on
Pauline Stark in "The Broken Butterfly"

GENERAL SUMMARY OF THE FILM

THERE is a certain pattern in the category of dramatic conceptions which is a favorite one with authors. In their use of it they are always sure of patronage because of the humanities conveyed. We are speaking of blighted romance as it is founded upon the scheme of loving unwisely and too well. It is on this premise that Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Broken Butterfly," is constructed.

Sympathy is one of the strongest forces in the human family and it is always extended to the downtrodden, the oppressed, or the unfortunate. It is easy to sympathize with a girl who has been brought up in ignorance of the world — who has not the slightest conception of the form that love often takes.

The average spectator — and that means every other man and woman in your audience — will pity her and struggle with her and be in entire concord with her expression. Particularly will the sympathy be acute if the character is presented as not only unfortunate in love but oppressed as well. The result is the audience will react to this feature. It could not do otherwise and remain human. Therefore it is off to an excellent start because of its tender keynote.

It may best be described as a heart interest story — a story of tremendous pathos. Yet you cannot call it a great dramatic subject because of its absence of strong situation and climax. It is just a tale of blighted love — a familiar pattern to be sure — yet there is a humanness about the old story and the lovable character painted therein that will be noticed by the observer who looks beneath the surface. There is no love interest in the general acceptance of the phrase. It is a thing apart — a thing locked up in the hearts of the lovers.

As may be imagined from the title the feature is a study in tears and it contains not a quota of action and suspense. You have a child of nature, who despite the oppression of her environment, succeeds in maintaining her happy philosophy of life. Love comes to her of course. She will not be denied. Hers is a nature too warm, too bountiful. It comes, however, as a tragedy. Your audience will be interested in the youth for he is not painted as a despoiler, but as a dreamer like the girl. His passion overrules his judgment. The inevitable follows.

The picture takes a curious turn for the concluding reels depict the youth married to the child's sister after her supposed suicide. He has worshipped her memory with anguish of heart and soul. So he returns on his honeymoon to the shrine of his first love where he finds the girl dying of a broken heart.

Pauline Starke is the heroine of the story, and the fact that she has been absent from the screen of late should attract a large patronage. Those who remember her will want to see her and those who are not acquainted SHOULD see her. We would bill her strongly because she is one of the most vital personalities on the screen. Her performance will not be forgotten. Lew Cody? His work is familiar to the steady patron. So feature him, but below Miss Starke. The picture is in six reels.

Here is what we would do with it: Advertise it as a Maurice Tourneur production with Pauline Starke. Advertise it as a story of misguided love — a story of tremendous pathos — a story of simple faith and devotion. Advertise it as a feature which carries some of the most beautiful and expressive titles that ever adorned a photoplay. "The Broken Butterfly" was adapted from a story by Penelope Knapp.

AT A GLANCE

Story — Drama with blighted romance as piece de resistance. Pathos a strong factor.
Star — Pauline Starke credited with the lead. Shares honor with Lew Cody.
Support — Includes May Alden and others.
Author — Penelope Knapp.
Director — Maurice Tourneur.
Locale — A Canada forest.
Length — Six reels.

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY

SHE is a child of nature, is Marcene Elliot. Some would call her a dream-child, so fanciful is her world. A forlorn little creature who somehow manages to smile through the oppression of a tyrannical guardian. Up in a Canadian forest she creates her fancies. Being alone with nature encourages her imagination and she instinctively feels that her Fairy Prince will gallop into view some day. Marcene is transported when he appears for he is a poet much like herself. So they have a perfect communion of expression — an expression which ripens into love. And she,

Lew Cody, Pauline Stark are featured in "The Broken Butterfly". Two scenes near the end of the film

Four of the principal characters in "The Broken Butterfly." Pauline Stark returns to the screen after a considerable absence the little innocent waif loves unwisely and too well.

Darrell Thorne had not meant any wrong—his judgment was merely overruled by the floods of passion. Then one day when he is able to return he discovers that his dream-child is a suicide. She had waited, but in vain. The sanctity of her heart, of her pure love was violated.

The sorrow-stricken youth travels up and down the world in an effort to assuage his grief. He can't forget. He doesn't want to forget. But time eventually heals the wound and he marries her sister who has forgiven him because of his manly attitude.

Together they return to the shrine of his first love where he discovers that the girl is not dead, but dying of a broken heart. And so the old love sweeps over him. Will his wife sacrifice herself and go away so he can right the injury? She consents. But she doesn't stray far from the immediate vicinity. The poor, little creature of misfortune is immensely happy in her new found love, but it is too great a shock and she dies. Darrell, now firmly convinced that he has righted his wrong in the eye of God, takes his wife in his arms.

It was destined that Marcene would be a child of sorrow. She was of another world—a world where all is beautiful. Why one day this wisp of a girl went to a gypsy camp and the fortune teller told her that she would love but die, as a mother. So she gave up her heart and her body.

Like the butterfly that struggles helplessly in the spider's web, so she was caught in the web of tangled love threads. There was no escape. It was WRITTEN that she should die. Her memory was a symbol of undying faith and devotion—a symbol of generous love—a symbol of trusting girlhood.

IN comparing this feature with something previously produced is like comparing the fleecy clouds that sail the heavens today with those that sailed by in a thousand yesterdays. It has been done time and time again and will continue to be done in the future. Why? Because it is in the line of least resistance. This is not to say that the author is not inspired but that the theme is one of the most natural ideas in existence.

The story of the girl who loves unwisely and too well is old in fiction. And it is old on the screen. So you cannot very well compare it with things that have gone before. Sometimes it takes the form of the eternal triangle which of course gives it more dramatic action. Here it takes a simple course. Nothing is presented but a love affair between two passionate friends. And so it is compelled to rely upon its elements of heart interest and pathos and sympathy for its sustaining points.

What are its pleasing qualifications? This will depend mostly on the attitude of your audience. It has been proven that the average human being is partial to a saddened romance. This should please them because the heroine is held up to view as particularly unfortunate not only in her blighted love but in the oppression of her environment. There may be those who will not find the concluding reels in entire harmony with the theme, but they will be in the minority. Why? Because the theme will have gotten into their minds regardless of any stray development.

They are sure to appreciate the colorful word pictures. Indeed the titles do a great deal toward bringing out the poetry of the story. They are human; they are descriptive; they are wonderfully appropriate. It is our opinion that the average patron will accept this picture not so much for its story quality but for its characterization and the elements that it generates.

Pauline Starke is convincing in her work as the heroine. She brings to the role a fragrant, will-of-the-wisp personality that is in perfect harmony. You almost catch the broken sobs, the anguish of her sorrow. Lew Cody, as you may know, is usually identified with just such roles as he has here though he has never been called upon to express emotion to the extent which this picture demands. He is adequate though he misses fire occasionally.

ADVERTISING ANGLES

THE real outstanding angle in advertising this picture rests in the name of Maurice Tourneur and what it stands for on the screen. Surely his responsibility for such a masterly work as "The Blue Bird" should mean something to the picturegoer. And he is quite in a class by himself as a producer of melodrama. So it would be advisable to concentrate mostly upon his name. You might announce that "Another Tourner Picture is Coming to the ———. Be sure and see it." Then mention what he has produced in the past. The patrons will remember them and look forward to seeing his newest production.

Another angle not quite so prominent is to emphasize the talents of Pauline Starke.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY ADVICE

IT would be well to give Pauline Starke all the publicity possible, bringing out that she is one of the screen's best discoveries. Mention that she formally supported William S. Hart and other famous stars and that she has been a star herself for a number of months. And of course there is the name of Maurice Tourneur for a paragraph or two.

For catch lines we would suggest something like these:

"She was a child of the woods and into her world of fancies came the man of her heart. And she gave him a beautiful love. What happened?"

"I know he will come back because I love him so," she said as she watched her reflection in the pool. He didn't forget, but he was too late. See "The Broken Butterfly."

"Poor, little broken butterfly—he had left her to cry her heart out for unrequited love. When he came back her newfound happiness was too great a shock."

Smithsonian-Universal African Expedition Going Well

In a letter dated August 30th and addressed to President Carl Laemmle of the Universal, Dr. J. K. Armstrong, business manager of the Smithsonian Institute-Universal, informs of the safe arrival of the motion-picture expedition in Africa. William Stowell and Pliny Horne are reported to be on the west coast, filming a large whaling-station and also the Penguin Islands close by.

The letter describes the red tape involved in moving the forces about, to be very burdensome. "Permits must be obtained for every move we make, and one must forsooth see about a dozen officials before the necessary permission can be obtained." The poor mail service is also the subject of complaint.

The epistle, however, says that everyone is "extremely anxious to get out into the wild country and have some out-of-the-ordinary adventures." The country, too, is described as being highly interesting, and promise is held out of bringing back some unusual scenes and the pictures of some unique incidents experienced en route. The first principal stop is reported to be Durban, after which the party will journey by easy stages to Kimberly and thence strike out northward into the interior.

Cleveland and Detroit are Added to List of Pioneer Exchanges

Cleveland and Detroit now take their place on the roster of Pioneer Exchanges, and within a few days will be fully equipped both as to appointment and film attractions. The Cleveland office, which is located at 812 Prospect Avenue, in the heart of the city, will be managed by J. J. Mooney. The Detroit office is located at 53 Elizabeth Street, and will be managed by A. W. Blankmeyer.

The two new exchanges have already received their supply of prints including Grace Davison and Conway Tearle in "Atonement"; Henry B. Walthall in "The Boomerang" and "The Long Arm of Mannister"; "The Sins of the Children," with Stuart Holmes and Alma Hanlon; "The Girl From Nowhere," with Cleo Madison and Wilfred Lucas; "Suspicion," with Grace Davison; the initial release of Facts and Follies series; and Wanda Hawley in "Virtuous Sinners."

Smaller Showmen Give Heavy Exploitation to "Sahara"

Bookings of J. Parker Read, Jr.'s Louise Glaum production, "Sahara," by the nation's biggest exhibitors continue unabated. One of the remarkable features in connection with the success of this popular W. W. Hodkinson release is that powerful exhibitor exploitation on it is not confined to the big first run houses of America. Reports from Hodkinson managers reveal that many second and third run theatres in the larger cities are not depending on the prestige gained for "Sahara" at the big downtown houses but are carrying out exploitation drives on "their own hook" and profiting heavily thereby.

Big Booking Increase Reported

Robertson–Cole System of Exchanges Records Big Business Increase During Initial Week

THE reception of the Robertson-Cole Exchange system by exhibitors throughout the country is a source of pleasure and gratification to A. S. Kirkpatrick, the vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation. Mr. Kirkpatrick, who completely organized the twenty-six branch offices with executive, sales and clerical staffs, was rewarded by an immediate jump in Robertson-Cole bookings throughout the country.

"I knew we could look for big increases in bookings in a short time but I did not really expect the first week of the new system would show the immediate and large increase that it did," Mr. Kirkpatrick said in discussing the matter. "We have, of course, been putting an extraordinary number of high-class productions on the market and in the past few weeks we have been fortunate enough to secure some of the really great productions on the market and this probably accounts for the enormous demand for our films at this time.

"The one thing we are convinced about to-day is that under present conditions the most expensive pictures to make are really the least expensive in the end. The demand of the exhibitor, which is a reflection of the public demand, is for pictures of the highest standard of excellence. Although the public is turning to the motion picture in millions, the competition is keen and the man with the best pictures in any community is the man who is going to make the money.

"The producer who does not make good pictures consistently is doomed, according to present-day demands. The exhibitors are tired of having poor ones sandwiched in here and there. They are not merely filling open dates in these days, but are carefully selecting pictures. Our policy of eliminating the poor ones, of letting them die before they reach the public to be condemned, is in recognization of this stand of the exhibitors and the public.

"The producing units working under the Robertson-Cole banner are all alive to this condition and they are back of the slogan, 'Nothing But The Best For Robertson-Cole Exhibitors.' That thought dominates everyone from the script editors to the man in the laboratory.

"The fact that our earnest efforts in this direction are being appreciated is indicated by the steady increase in bookings and in the many congratulatory messages we have received from all over the country on the opening of our own exchanges. They tell us that when they are buying from Robertson-Cole representatives, from representatives who are selling nothing but Robertson-Cole productions, they are sure they are getting the pictures they want.

"Another reason why we feel that the quality of the motion pictures of today must be of an exceptional standard of excellence is the manner in which exhibitors are presenting pictures. Exhibitors have made such strides in the presentation of their plays that they have become, as Mr. Griffith says, co-artists with the directors and actors. Under such conditions a picture must measure up to the quality of its presentation.

"To use such artistry as is used today in putting on an ordinary or poor picture can only result in making the picture look cheap by comparison. The picture must match the manner of its presentation and in good houses this means that the picture must be mighty good indeed. This fact is never lost sight of in the Robertson-Cole Organization.

"I am happy at this time to be able to extend to exhibitors generally the thanks of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation for their co-operation in this new endeavor and to assure them that we want that co-operation continued. As I stated with the opening of the exchanges we want our exhibitor clientele in on the basis of business partners. We want their advice and their suggestions."

November Releases By World

The Program of World Pictures for Month of November will Include Four Novel Photoplays

FOUR photoplays starring Evelyn Greeley, June Elvidge, House Peters and Jackie Saunders, are listed on the program of World pictures for the month of November. The first release dated November 3 is titled "Me and Captain Kidd" and the star is Miss Evelyn Greeley. The scenic backgrounds of this picture are said to be remarkable, the entire Atlantic coast line having been scoured for appropriate locations. The direction was handled by Oscar Apfel. Among those supporting Miss Greeley are Raymond MacKee, Logan Paul, Arthur Donaldson, Charles Mackay, Sidney Dudley, Pauline Dempsey, Warren Cook, Betty Hutchinson, William Brooks and others.

The second release dated November 10 is "The Poison Pen." Mr. August directed "The Poison Pen," and June Elvidge with Earl Metcalfe play the leading roles. The supporting cast includes Joseph Smiley, Marion Barney, Marguerite Gale, Jeanne Loew, George Bunny, Irving Brooks, J. Arthur Young, Henry West, Charles Mackay and John Sainpolis.

The succeeding release listed for issue on November 17, is a picturization of Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "You Never Know Your Luck." House Peters plays the leading role and the direction was handled by Frank Powell.

"Dad's Girl" starring Jackie Saunders is listed for release on November 24. The work of production was handled by David G. Fisher. "Dad's Girl" is derived from the well known stage play of E. H. Schwartz. The supporting cast is said to be a good one.

Exceptional Booking on Lloyds

Pathe Comedian's Two Reelers go Into Rialto and Strand, New York and Other Big Houses

SUPPORTING its contentions that the foremost motion picture theatres would lead in the showing of the new Harold Lloyd $100,000 two reel comedies, Pathe announces that the first six of the series have been booked by the Rialto and Strand theatres in New York, day and date; the Strand Theatre in Brooklyn, and the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis.

"Bumping Into Broadway," first of the series, will be released on November 2nd, and played simultaneously on Broadway by the Rialto and Strand theatres. Jack Eaton, managing director of the Strand, after viewing "Bumping into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids" and "His Royal Slyness," wrote the following letter to the Pathe Home Office.

"I am very much interested in the new two reel Harold Lloyd comedies, the first one of which we are to run the week of November 2nd.

"There is no question but that Harold Lloyd will make good in two reel comedies equally as well as he has in the single reelers; in fact it should be a two to one bet."

S. Barrett McCormic, the shrewd director of the Circle theatre, in Indianapolis, was so pleased with the new Lloyd attractions, that soon after booking the series, he sent the following wire to Fred C. Quimby, director of Exchanges of Pathe.

"Have just contracted for the series of special two-reel Lloyd comedies and will take pride in including them in the Circle's program each week. They mark a new standard in the comedy field, possessing a tone that has not been achieved heretofore."

Many well known literary personages have given unqualified approval to the new Lloyd multiple reel comedies following a private showing of the first three at the Pathe Home Office. They were unanimous in declaring that here was shown a gratifying development of the comedy idea, which made for cleanness, wit, snappiness of action, with settings as pretentious as those of any big multiple reel special productions.

Henry Wilton Thomas, well known magazine editor and author of the successful novels, "The Last Lady of Mulberry" and "The Sword of Wealth," says:—"These new two reel Lloyd comedies, it is no exaggeration to say, mark an epoch in the development of pictures as pure entertainment. They are an agreeably surprising improvement on anything that I have seen, in their sprightly wit, satire and the elimination of the rough slapstick method, which was, too often in abominably bad taste."

Emile Voute, journalist, traveler and novelist, author of the amazing novel, "The Passport," has this to say:—"Harold Lloyd, in the new comedies, is a source of joy and laughter. He has grown to greater stature and comes to us strong in these strikingly original new offerings. Big in laughter, he is a big note now in popular entertainment.

Garnet Warren, Francis Arnold Collins and others echo similar sentiments.

Big Expenditure on United Film

Dustin Farnum's Next Feature "Corsican Brothers" Will Also Have Wide Exploitation

WITH the production of the "Corsican Brothers," a spectacular feature starring Dustin Farnum, nearing completion at the Gasnier studios at Glendale, Calif., United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., makes its debut as the exploiter of pictures of the type which, because of their costliness and sumptuousness in staging, their perfection in detail, and their employment of thousands of persons in their ensemble scenes, stand high in the field of super-pictures.

In the launching of this feature, a publicity campaign in keeping with the magnitude of the spectacle itself is being planned. The work of exploitation is simplified by the popularity and wide renown of its subject. The Dumas book from which the story was taken is one of the most widely read of the many brilliant romances that came from the author of "Monte Cristo" and "The Three Guardsmen." But the story has been even more vividly impressed upon the minds of the public by the multiplicity of successful stage versions that have been made from it. The book was first dramatized for the American stage sixty-seven years ago, since which time no less than forty-four distinct and separate productions of it have been made at thirty-five different New York playhouses. To this day, travelling repertoire companies perform the famous old play weekly in all sections of the country. It is estimated that in excess of twenty thousand performances of "The Corsican Brothers" have been given on the spoken stage of America alone.

In assuming the dual role of the twin brothers who were born joined in a manner resembling the Siamese twins, were cut apart and lived their separate lives with a unity of thought and feeling that could not have existed had they not been so closely bound to one another at birth, Dustin Farnum follows in the footsteps of the favorite romantic actors of five generations.

Rural Comedy is Eighteenth Made by Gale Henry

Gale Henry, under the direction of Herman C. Raymaker, has started work on "Ham Ann," which marks her 18th fun film as star and head of her own company. "Ham Ann" is a rural comedy and was written by Miss Henry and her husband, Bruno J. Becker. Miss Henry is ably supported by Bill Franey, her new leading man, Eddie Baker and Hap H. Ward.

Goldwyn Publicists to Aid Theatre Men on Sunday Opening

For the benefit of all motion picture interests, as well as the great public for which Sunday is the only day of recreation, Samuel Goldwyn has decided to use every influence of his organization to bring about a successful conclusion of the fight for Sunday opening which is being waged in many parts of the country.

Realizing the value of missionary work carried on every day of the week by men who are constantly in touch with newspaper editors and representatives of social and religious organizations of all descriptions, Mr. Goldwyn has issued instructions that the twenty-two press and service representatives in the Goldwyn exchanges shall consider it a part of their duty to advance arguments for Sunday opening wherever there is an opportunity.

Goldwyn's press and service representatives are not, of course expected to become involved in local politics.

M. H. Hoffman Sees Independents in the Ascendent Everywhere

M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer, upon his return to New York after establishing exchanges in Cleveland and Detroit and then making a whirlwind swing into the middlewest, voiced his opinion, it is said, in emphatic terms that the independent producer and exchangemen are becoming the dominant factor in every section of the country which he visited.

When asked to qualify his remarks he said, "The reason is simple. In the first place the independent producer, because of a free hand, can produce pictures which answer the public demand better than the machine-made program offerings. The other reason is that the independent exchangeman meets his customers face to face, and because he knows their individual needs, can supply them with pictures which answer the demands of certain territories."

"Sex" Reported as Startling Story Completed by Sullivan

C. Gardner Sullivan has just completed what is said to be the most sensational story of his career, "Sex" in which J. Parker Read, Jr., will star Louise Glaum. It is believed that there will be more startling revelations in this new story than any ever produced on the screen. Miss Glaum is ideally suited to the type Mr. Sullivan has interwoven in his story, and it is to be filled with magnificent setting and unusual and weird costumes.

Commuters Startled at Stunt of Supreme Pictures Players

The pulling off of a stunt, in which an actress jumped from the front of a ferryboat near the Fort Lee ferry while a Supreme Pictures cameraman ground away, enlivened the trip of one of the boats last week. The episode was pulled off without the knowledge or permission of the captain of the boat. Violet MacMillan was the one who took the ducking, and J. Robert Pauline, the hypnotist, who will appear in the Sidney Reynolds serial, was the rescuing hero.

Special Service Section on
Bert Lytell in "Lombardi, Ltd."

WHAT IT HAS DONE

TO exhibitors who have booked "Lombardi, Ltd." information is given that this picture is meeting with great success in first run houses both from the entertainment and box office standpoint.

The feature received universally good reviews in the various trade papers and early returns for our box office reports are also favorable.

The California Theatre, Los Angeles, played it recently and staged a fashion show in conjunction. This house reported the feature as entirely satisfactory and that it drew well for the full week's showing. The Olympia of New Bedford says of it: "A real production, splendidly acted by the star and exceptionally good entertainment. Pleased our patrons immensely." Other first run reports are in the same vein.

The gist of the trade paper reviews was as follows:

NEWS—"Lytell scores as Modiste in unique picture."

WORLD—"'Lombardi, Ltd." is excellently acted."

TRADE REVIEW—"'Lombardi, Ltd.' high class production."

WIDS—"Fashion show and comedy drama with heart interest make this a good picture."

We mention these reviews and early exhibitors reports that you may realize that you will be justified in getting out in the open with praise for this feature.

Without doubt it is the best thing that Bert Lytell has done to date and in it is an opportunity to popularize this star if up to the present you have found that your audiences did not seem to know him.

It takes about three good pictures to put over a real star. Lytell has had these three and you are now justified in offering him as a real attraction.

BIG EXPLOITATION ANGLE IS FASHION SHOW

THE exploitation angles which this picture presents are unusual, but the big bet is the staging of a fashion show in conjunction with your engagement.

Coming just at this time of year when every woman is interested in fall gowns, you can make this event the most talked of thing of the week.

There are many ways of staging a fashion show all of which you are more or less familiar with. The one we recommend is, tie-up with some first-class women's ready to wear store which will send all its latest models in fancy gowns over to your theatre to be worn by its mannequins in a fashion parade.

About all you will have to do to stage this stunt is to impress the store management with the importance of the advertising which it will produce for the store; provide a nice stage setting, something nifty and appropriate, as a background for the mannequins, and give the fashion show and the fact that "Lombardi, Ltd." is a story of the fashions and foibles of a woman dressmaker enough publicity so that Mrs. Smith will realize that the whole thing is an event which she should not miss.

We would say that you would have no trouble in interesting the stores in this proposition since it is such an especially good subject for this stunt and since just at this time of year every store will have unlimited gowns and suits which it will be pleased to give a showing, so we would be a bit particular and independent in asking for co-operation.

Pick out the real store and get the management on record in a statement that he will give the showing of his gowns time and attention, mention it in his advertising, etc.

Don't be bashful about asking for the use of some of the store's show windows for a combination window display.

A good stunt in arranging a window display would be to utilize some of the large-sized scene stills which show the "Lombardi, Ltd." mannequins in nifty gowns and then alongside of the still, mounted we will say on some sort of an easel, drape one of the stores fancy gowns and invite comparisons.

We don't see any reason why if you go after this thing right that you can't make the fashion show quite as much of an attraction as the film itself, especially with the women.

Last week we published a story illustrated by some cuts of the California theatre fashion show. From this you will be able to get a good idea of what this house, one of the most progressive in the country, did on this picture and copy its methods.

Care should be taken to light your stage setting effectively and to give your "act" pep.

CHANCE TO WORK IN LOCAL COLOR

TO get the greatest amount of advertising value from your fashion show you should try making the girls who will wear the gowns individuals, rather than

Tito Lombardi has an inspiration. He sees in his mind's eye a new gown that will be a wonder. "Lombardi, Ltd." is characterized by many scenes as rich in humor as this

The Story of "Lombardi, Ltd."

"LOMBARDI, LTD.," has to do with the troubles, financial and domestic, of Tito Lombardi, a fashionable Fifth Avenue dressmaker, who, while a genius in the art of creating wonderful gowns for America's smart set, is somewhat of an amateur in the art of making love, and possesses absolutely no business ability. It is this deficiency in his eccentric make-up that leads him to the brink of financial ruin.

In one of the striking scenes of the production Lombardi displays his mannequins, or models, in evening dress, costly wraps and daring and unusual negligees; while in another scene of absorbing interest to feminine picture-goers — and incidentally it is one of the funniest and most unusual scenes in the comedy — Lambardi actually drapes a stunning evening gown on his gum-chewing model, Eloise, in full view of the audience, from mere pieces of material. This is one of the real big features of the picture and should present opportunities to exhibitors.

High are Lombardi's ideals in gowns; his ideals in matters of the heart are equally high. Inasmuch as his business and personal affairs are conducted along lines of a high moral standard, they tend to mark him as a rather easy-going artistic individual, and in view of this fact many characters, some of a questionable sort, take advantage of this quality in the good man and fail to pay their just debts.

Lombardi, however, goes dreamily along, lavishing wonderful creations upon Phyllis Manning, his sweetheart, whom he has never even attempted to kiss until the day when she will name the date of their wedding. Phyllis, on the other hand, is receiving the attentions of another — a man about town — who could never think of her with the same unselfish devotion as does the designer of modes.

One by one Lombardi's unscrupulous patrons prove their unworthiness which at the same time serves to affect the credit of Lombardi. Norah Blake, his capable assistant, seems alone to stand by him in the hour of his need, when his biggest debtor leaves town and ruin stares him in the face.

In spite of this injury, Lombardi's faith in human nature and his finer instincts refuse to let him see the conditions in their true light, and not until he knows positively that Phyllis has left with the other man, that he himself is bankrupt and a failure, does he realize the seriousness of his situation.

Then does he begin to see that without Norah he would be himself incomplete — although all the time he has been blind to the noble qualities of this girl, who has been his right hand guiding him through all of his vicissitudes. She points the way for him to rehabilitate his business, and with the establishment put on a new and firmer footing, everything ends happily.

The easiest way to do this is to use the department store's models, but mention each girl giving her address, etc., and tell what sort of a gown or gowns she will wear.

Of course if you could induce some of the society ladies to get in on the event, you will be sure of getting the greatest possible results. To do this, however, is not an easy task. The best way of interesting the sort of people we are speaking of, is through some charity. People, women especially, will do a whole lot of things in the name of charity that they wouldn't consider as individuals. If you were to offer a certain percentage of your receipts to some worthy organization you would have a chance of pulling the society stunt.

Another suggestion we make as to local color is in offering to make the job of displaying the gowns competitive. If you were to advertise that you wanted models for the fashion show, who would be selected as to size, form and beauty, etc., and make it something of an honor to land one of the mannequin roles, you will get a lot of free publicity and also create interest in the girls themselves.

This latter stunt can be pulled no matter how large your city is. This fact has been demonstrated in the bathing girl contests held in connection with the "Yankee Doodle in Berlin" showings. Even in New York a contest for honors in the bathing girl custumes went over with a bang.

ADVERTISING WITHOUT SPECIAL STUNTS

IF you do not want to go in for special stunts on this picture, we would advise buying plenty of newspaper space to be illustrated by some action scene cuts with the title of the feature billed above the star and a good line of selling talk emphasizing the clothes angle of the film and the fact that it is an adaptation of a play which had a big run in New York and other cities.

Don't forget to tell your patrons that this is a comedy. Motion picture audiences do not follow the legitimate stage very closely and consequently many of your people will not know that this originally was a farce comedy. Consequently they are liable to figure that "Lombardi, Ltd." is a drama with its plot based on the stock market stuff or a story of big business with many of those "heavy thinking scenes, with tickers and the hero rushing in just in time to save somebody from ruin."

As titles go with the average person this one doesn't mean anything and you will have to explain it thoroughly.

We are strong for the use of scene stills in advertising pictures and this is an especially good subject for this form of publicity, for the reason that the producers have provided a large number of photographs showing Lytell and his bunch of mannequins in many different poses. Those gowns are going to attract attention.

In writing your newspaper display copy don't forget to mention that it is an actual fact that it cost many thousands to gown "Lombardi, Ltd." For six of the French gowns used the bill was $3.500. That will make you a good catch line.

The producers have prepared a very complete press book for this production which will give all the information you want as to the exchange aids available etc.

King and Short in "The Right Of Way," Metro Production

Emmett King and Antrim Short have important roles in the support of Bert Lytell in his forthcoming Screen Classics, Inc., production of Sir Gilbert Parker's master novel, "The Right of Way." Mr. King appears with Mr. Lytell as the Crown Attorney, while Mr. Short has the part of Billy Wantage, the youthful master. June Mathis wrote the scenario for "The Right of Way," and Jack Dillon is directing the production.

Earle Williams to Do Trio of Pictures While in East

Earle Williams completed "The Far East," his new play with Japanese surroundings, before he started from Vitagraph's West coast studio to make "The Fortune Hunter" at its Brooklyn studio. With "The Black Gate" already finished, Mr. Williams has cleaned up the schedule laid out for the Hollywood studio and will be able to remain East for some time. It is expected that he will do two or three pictures in addition to "The Fortune Hunter" before he returns to California.

Whole World Covered in the Current Fox News

Fox News' motto of "Around the World in Fifteen Minutes" is closely adhered to in the second release of the new screen newspaper and magazine shown to the public Wednesday, October 15; the location of the subjects ranges from Archangel, Russia, to Mexico City, with stops on the way at New York, Detroit and Chicago, to say nothing of Paris.

An interesting and striking example of the advancement of science is shown in views of Thomas A. Edison visiting the site of the first electric light plant 257 Pearl Street, New York City. Stirring views of the French honoring their Foreign Legion and decorating the statue of Strasbourg are shown.

An illustration of novel conditions in the United States comes from Chicago, where brewery trucks now are used to distribute milk. Pictures of peaceful affairs in Mexico have been rare in the last few years, but Fox News presents to its audiences fine views in the capital of the celebration of the republic's independence with President Carranza present.

Energetic Robertson-Cole Man Places Films All Around

The opening of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation office in Buffalo was marked by some energetic work on the part of the branch manager, E. J. Hayes. Right at the go-off he arranged for a Robertson-Cole week at the Strand Theatre, Buffalo, booking "The Pagan God" for the first four days, and "The Gray Horizon" for the last three days.

Then he stepped across the street and arranged to make the Strand Comedies the big feature of the Electrical Show which is being held in that city for two weeks. Still hunting for work, Manager Hayes secured a location in the show where he staged a splendid exhibition of Robertson-Cole stills.

And on top of all this Mr. Hayes started out with his sales force to get a Robertson-Cole picture into every house in his territory.

The L-Ko Studio Going Full Blast

With five funny comedies and two serials under way at the L-Ko studio, this site presents a busy scene. A large majority of the L-Ko products are released by Universal.

Robert F. Hill is on the eighth episode of "The Radium Mystery," the Pacific Producing Company serial with Cleo Madison, Eileen Sedgwick and Bob Reeves in the featured roles.

J. P. McGowan is at work at the L-Ko studio on "Fighting Through," a serial starring Elmo Lincoln, the Sandow of the Screen.

Among the comedies undergoing production at the present time are: "The Shimmie Shakers," being turned out under the direction of Jess Robbins; "Local Talent," directed by J. A. Howe; "The Jail Breakers," under the direction of Charles Parrott; and "The Mischievous Monk," Fred Fishback's comedy.

Mariam Cooper in the Fox special, "Should a Husband Forgive?"

Strand Comedy Players Busy on Big Laughmakers

The activities of the Southern California Producing Company are noted in the ambitious program of Strand comedies now in process of the making at their studios.

Toddy Sampson, a popular and well-remembered star, and a comedienne of merit has been added to the personnel. Recently Miss Sampson played opposite Tom Mix for Fox features.

This month Katherine Lewis, Gertrude Selby, Harry Depp and James Liddy are hard at work on the regular schedule. Noted among the future releases are "His Double Exposure," written by W. Scott Darling and directed by William Baudine; a motor comedy pointing a moral to unwary motorists featuring Katherine Lewis and James Liddy, supplied by the pen of Neal Burn.

"Salome vs. Shenandoah," a New Hit in Sennett Burlesque

Mack Sennett comes to bat with another burlesque in "Salome vs. Shenandoah," his newest Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, which is released October 26.

With Ben Turpin, Charles Murray, Charles Lynn and Phyllis Haver as the featured players, the cast is said to contain the biggest galaxy of Sennett stars to be seen together in many a day. These include Marie Prevost, Harry Gribbon, Billy Bevan, Ford Sterling and Louise Fazenda, the "Sennett Girls" are also much in evidence.

Tyrad Offers a Five-Reeler

Helen Mason in "Broken Hearts," a five reel melodrama, is offered to state rights buyers by Tyrad Pictures, Inc. This is a six reel feature, the direction being supervised by Jacques Tyrol.

Royalty Are Guests of Mildred Chaplin at Aero Field

Mildred Harris Chaplin recently entertained the King and Queen of Belgium at the Chaplin Aviation Field during the course of the visit of the royal party to Los Angeles. It is said the visit to the aviation field was the result of a peculiar situation which confronted the Los Angeles Mayor, M. P. Snyder, who had to solve the problem of how best to entertain the visitors during their brief trip to the city, which was limited to four hours.

According to reports, Mrs. Chaplin placed the facilities of the entire field at the disposal of the mayor including a number of aeroplanes in which the royal party would be enabled to view the city and the entire country round about in the space of a short time. The mayor gladly accepted, with the result that a feature of the royal party's visit to the city was their subsequent trip to the Chaplin aero-field. The picture star presented Queen Elizabeth with a huge bouquet of orchids—a role for which the mayor had previously selected the photoplay actress. There was also a program of aerial stunts arranged for the entertainment of the royal guests.

Harry Rice Named Director of Universal Publicity

Tarkington Baker, Universal's general manager announces the appointment of Harry Rice as director of Universal publicity. Mr. Rice has been with Universal for some time and recently was transferred to the New York office to direct Universal exchange and national publicity. Until this recent appointment Mr. Baker has supervised all Universal publicity. His duties as general manager became so heavy that it was decided to place Mr. Rice in charge.

Universal's publicity department has been enlarged by the acquisition of several competent men recently and under the guidance of Mr. Rice Universal expects to increase its publicity even more than at the present.

John Barrymore Has Support of Strong Cast in New Picture

John Barrymore will be surrounded by a strong cast in the screen version of "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal work on the theme of dual personality, which is being filmed for Paramount-Artcraft at one of Famous Players-Lasky's New York studios.

Playing opposite Mr. Barrymore is Martha Mansfield, of the Ziegfeld Midnight Frolic. Miss Mansfield has the part of Millicent Carew, the exquisite young daughter of Sir George Carew. Cecil Clovelly enacts the part of the lawyer, John Utterson, in the new screen play. Blase, cynical Sir George Carew will be played by Brandon Hurst. Charles Lane, who has just completed a leading role with Billie Burke in "Wanted a Husband," has been entrusted with the difficult characterization of Dr. Richard Lanyon, and J. Malcolm Dunne has been selected to play Richard Endfield.

Universal Is Ahead of Schedule

Long List of Pictures Practically Completed; New Policy — "One Thing at a Time"

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal, announces the practical completion of a large number of photoplays in a recent communication received from the Universal office. In addition to Allen Holubar's production, "The Right to Happiness," and to Von Stroheim's play, "Blind Husbands," The Universal will complete very shortly an aeroplane melodrama entitled, "Cassidy of the Air Lanes," which is promised to be an unusual achievement in the field of aircraft photoplay themes.

After this are to follow, according to reports, another Allen Holubar feature, "Ambition"; the new Priscilla Dean picture, tentatively called "The Beautiful Beggar"; an Aoki production, "The Breath of the Gods"; a second Von Stroheim feature, bearing the tentative title of "The Woman In the Plot"; and a drama, "The Beach Comber."

During the last several months, Universal directors, following out an established program of action, have been concentrating entirely on producing, it is asserted. Now according to the same line of policy, they will be in a position to concentrate entirely on scenarios and make ready for the turning out of the new productions. In this way it is planned to enable the directors to do only one thing at one time. Mr. Laemmle points out that this policy has been subjected to a practical test within the last few months, and he announces that the plan has proved its abiding worth in practice. While the directors were engaged in the making of the scenes, they were not harassed by the necessity of giving their thoughts and efforts to the scenarios and continuities for the productions to come, according to the announcement recently received.

Priscilla Dean, Universal star, in a moment from "Beautiful Beggar," her latest production

Universal also claims that the present time finds it far ahead of its schedule of productions, and that in view of this situation exhibitors will now be in a position to view the finished products long before their release. The actual realization of this fact, it is said, fulfils a pledge to this effect made some time ago by the Universal to its exhibitors. With the present list of productions in hand, it is asserted, that it will not be necessary for the Universal to make another big Jewel production for many weeks to come.

Underwater Spectacle Named

J. E. Williamson Supervised Taking of Picture Said to Set New Mark for its Kind

HERALDED by the claim that it surpasses all previous underwater photography, and after six months in the making, a startling submarine production, is ready for distribution.

The undertaking on the part of the producers, colossal in itself, necessitated not only the use of the Williamson Submarine Photographic Apparatus, but the personal supervision, also, of J. E. Williamson. His knowledge of the West Indies and surrounding waters where the acquatic scenes were shot, has long identified Mr. Williamson as the originator of deep sea photography and authority on the life and habits of the creatures of the sea.

The scenario, furnishing logical continuity for thrilling adventures according to the story, is the work of E. Lloyd Sheldon, directed by J. Winthrop Kelley and photographed by J. Rescher.

Unusual features, giving thrilling evidence of the life-risking danger in securing them, coupled with an interesting narrative, make the production one which will occasion world-wide comment. Episodes combining photographic technique with wonders of the deep sea, a source of interest to educators and gratifying in detail to followers of educational film, predominate, but not at the sacrifice of plot or romantic touch.

Betty Hilburn, selected for the role of the grown daughter and nymph, is perfect in figure, still in her teens, fitting her admirably for the part. She is not lacking, it is said, when closing scenes require customarily covered anatomy and dramatic ability.

"It took weeks and weeks to train Miss Hilburn for the deep water stunts before the camera," said Mr. Williamson in describing the difficulties of the completion of his latest production, "but the unprecedented nerve displayed by her must be the development of years before I ever knew her, for the quality of nerve required for this work could not have been the result of a few weeks."

Goldwyn has added another director to the Culver City forces engaged in the making of Goldwyn pictures and in the picturization of the works of the Eminent Authors. The newest recruit to the already large organization on the coast is Thomas R. Mills.

"Dangerous Hours" is the new title of the specially supervised Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount-Artcraft which has hitherto been called "Americanism."

Promotions and Changes in the Hodkinson Managerial Force

Sidney J. Goldman, manager of the Hodkinson interests in Chicago since June, has been given the supervision of the offices of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation in Milwaukee, St. Louis and Indianapolis, thereby bringing four offices under his managerial jurisdiction. This enlargement of duties is in the form of a promotion for the excellent results accomplished in the Chicago territory.

Del Goodman has been selected as St. Louis Hodkinson manager, succeeding Theodore F. Holland; C. W. McDaniels, formerly of the Paramount organization, has taken over the Hodkinson management in Indianapolis, succeeding J. C. Mack. W. T. Hickey is the manager of the Milwaukee office and Mr. Goldman personally heads the Chicago office besides having jurisdiction over the other three.

Other changes recently made in Hodkinson managerial representation include the appointment of M. J. Millstein in Omaha to succeed R. H. Allan, Ben Blotcky in Kansas City to succeed P. C. Wreath; Joseph Bloom in Pittsburg to succeed J. J. Mooney.

Thomas Meighan Signs Long-Term Contract with F. P.-Lasky

Thomas Meighan is to be starred by Famous Players-Lasky. This announcement was made Tuesday by Jesse L. Lasky, First Vice-President in Charge of Production, following the signing of a long-term contract with Mr. Meighan in California.

Under the terms of the new contract, which becomes operative January 1, 1920, Meighan will continue for six months as a featured player in leading male roles in Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount Artcraft productions with the exception of "The Wanderer," in which picture, it is stipulated, he may play any role which the producers may deem suited to him. At the expiration of this six months' period, or upon the completion of any picture in which he may then be working, he is to be starred in the productions of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The Eff & Eff Co. Start with "Novelty" as Their Motto

A newcomer in the field of motion-picture production is the organization known as The Eff & Eff Producing Company, Inc., with Joseph Finger as president. The new company is at present producing a burlesque feature, entitled "Bullin The Bullsheviki," with Marguerite Clayton in the leading role.

In this first production the new concern intends to turn out something that will be a departure from the beaten path, according to the announcement given out. That this plan is to be strictly adhered to in the future is expressed in the opening statement of the new firm. The "eternal triangle" is to be relegated to the rear, and if plans work out as intended by the reported policy of The Eff & Eff, each release will have something of a novel character to present.

Pathe's Four November Releases

Pathe will distribute during November four big attractions, it is said. Beginning on the second with "The Gay Old Dog," the Hobart Henley picture starring John Cumberland, the November list includes "A Woman of Pleasure," first Blanche Sweet feature, produced for Pathe by Jesse D. Hampton and set for issue on November 9th; "The Right to Lie," a Dolores Cassinelli picture, produced by the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc., directed by Edwin Carewe and listed for November 16th; and "Dawn," produced by J. Stuart Blackton from the book by Eleanor H. Porter, starring Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon and listed for distribution beginning on November 30th.

International Cartoon in Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs Nov. 16

The first of the International cartoons to be issued in Goldwyn-Bray Pictographs, in accordance with the arrangements closed last week between Bray Pictures Corporation and International, is one of the famous "Jerry on the Job" series, now a popular feature of the comic section of the Hearst newspapers. The title of the animated cartoon, which has been added to the release of November 16th, including "How Time Flies" and "Pirate Castles," is "Pigs in Clover."

Work Started on "The Butterfly Man," Starring Lew Cody

The production of the new Cody feature, "The Butterfly Man," has been started at the Gasnier studios in Glendale. The story was originally written by George Barr McCutcheon, and it has been adapted to the screen by Ida May Park. Lew Cody leads in the title role, while Louise Lovely acts as the leading woman. Lilly Leslie and Ruth Ward are also scheduled to appear in the picture, according to reports. The new production will be directed by Ida May Park, assisted by Curt Rehfeld.

R. K. Evans Made Sales-Mgr. for United Artists Corp.

Announcement was made from the office of Hiram Abrams this week that R. K. Evans has been appointed Sales Manager of the Cleveland Distributing Depot of United Artists Corporation. Mr. Evans, for about fifteen years, was closely identified with the Greenwall-Weis Circuit of theatres, and he has also at various times managed exchanges in Chicago, St. Louis, Minneapolis and New Orleans.

Apollo Secures World Rights to Twelve Features

Bobby North of Apollo Trading Corporation, New York City, announces that they have secured the world rights except the United States, for the six Carlyle Blackwell pictures released by Joseph Friedberg and six Louise Glaum pictures released by J. Parker Read. The first Blackwell picture is "Innocent Cheaters" while Parker picture is "Sahara."

Realart Exploitation Campaign

Broadway Showing of Mystery Picture Devoted to Analyzation of Best Methods to Put it on

A NEW York run which Realart Pictures officials declare involves a new and novel plan for practically exploiting "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," an Emile Chautard Production, is under way at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, New York. The object of the showing, which is slated for an indefinite period, probably not to exceed three weeks, is thus stated by Arthur S. Kane, president of Realart:

"It cannot be emphasized too strongly that the purpose of this pre-release showing is not to afford Realart an opportunity to claim that 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' has had 'an extended run on Broadway' at high prices. It is in no sense a sales promotion enterprise.

"We are anxious, of course, to demonstrate that the picture will draw big crowds, but profitable results along this line will only be confirmation of what we already know. The plan for the run originates with our exploitation experts. They want to form an accurate opinion as to the best methods of putting the picture over, and later to make a complete report which may contain suggestions for exhibitors who will show the picture."

The press book on "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" is being delayed, it is announced, in order that the facts developed by the showing at the Broadway Theatre may be incorporated. Very elaborate experimentation is to be carried out, according to Realart officials, covering every phase of exploitation and presentation of the picture. The intention is to suggest to exhibitors only those methods which actual experience show to be practical or profitable.

In the campaign a staff of experts has been utilized, the entire exploitation organizations of Realart and Mayflower Photoplays Corporation being impressed into service. Actively engaged in the work are Bert Adler, Realart's special features exploitation manager; Lewis S. Geffen, formerly publicity director for the Rialto and Rivoli Theatre, now with Realart; Harold Horne, of the Mayflower; Gerald B. Spiero, publicity director for B. S. Moss theatres, and others.

Realart officials are confident "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" will prove to be the best riddle film of the season. The story of the Yellow Room arises from the disappearance of a criminal, after he has committed an assault, from a room which appears to have no exit. A beautiful girl, her father, a famous scientist, with whom she lives on a bleak estate; the old caretaker; the "Green Man," a taciturn gamekeeper; an old-time friend and suitor for the hand of the girl who is suspected and held, and a famous detective are characters. The mystery is solved by a newspaper reporter who turns detective.

Pathe Serial Widely Exploited

Big Publicity Tie-Up to Aid the Exhibitor in the Showing of "Bound And Gagged"

THE Pathe Serial Publicity Department announces that it has made special efforts to advertise "Bound and Gagged" through the medium of a nation-wide publicity campaign which it has inaugurated in connection with its newspaper advertising program. By virtue of this campaign Pathe is striving to make a direct appeal in behalf of the production to the consumer — the public — and it is expected by the Pathe forces that this publicity will redound to the immediate benefit of the exhibitors who are showing this attraction.

Harold Lloyd in his latest from Hal Roach's lot, "Bumping Into Broadway"

According to reports, in 100 of the largest daily newspapers in the United States, paid advertising and publicity material covering all angles of exploitation will be found in prominent positions. Every one of these newspapers, it is asserted, will carry a 4,000 word fictionization of "Bound and Gagged" or a fictionization by episodes in ten weekly installments, the latter to appear simultaneously with the release of the episode it covers. In addition to this, these newspapers will carry special stories on Mr. Seitz, the star and director. According to the reported plans, all these stories and fictionized versions of the serial will be profusely illustrated, and each story and advertisement will be tied up directly with every theatre in the city and territory served by the paper and booking the serial.

The Pathe home office claims that the manner in which the bookings are being effected indicates that the exhibitors have been quick to see the value of this publicity to them.

Eugene Mullin, recent acquisition to the Goldwyn editorial forces, comes to New York this week to confer with Samuel Goldwyn upon the company's coming production activities and assume active charge of the script department in the East.

Hobart Hutchinson, son of Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company, Inc.

Hobart Henley Begins Work on "Skin Deep" for Pathe

ACTUAL work upon "Skin Deep," Hobart's second production, to be released under his new contract with Pathe, was started at the Henley Studio when the opening scenes of the picture were shot by Richard Fryer, formerly cameraman for Houdini and Vivian Martin.

Henley, according to reports, spent four days in selecting a suitable interior for the beginning of the new picture and after much searching on the part of Warren Fromme, Mr. Henley's assistant, a model set was finally located in New Jersey where carpenters and artists were immediately dispatched to properly reproduce the set. This is cited by Pathe as one example of the minute care and detail which Mr. Henley is said to be giving to his productions.

"Legends of Wilderness" May be Sold Outright

So great has become the reported demand for the Sunset-Burrud "Legends of the Wilderness" scenics that the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation which is behind the venture, may take advantage of one of the many fine offers submitted by big distributing organizations and may sell the "legends" outright, according to Milton L. Cohen, Bulls-Eye president. At first it was intended by Bulls-Eye to state right the scenics. The Third Legend is now being filmed.

Logue Back from Porto Rico

Charles A. Logue, secretary of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., and the writer of all the 'scripts, both originals and adaptations, picturized by the firm, is back at the Fischer studios in New Rochelle. During his three weeks' absence, Mr. Logue journeyed to Porto Rico to gather local color for his 'script, which is to be put on following the completion of the "The Red Virgin," now being staged as a B. A. Rolfe production.

Fox's "Eastward Ho" Completed in 27 Working Days; Cast

According to reports 27 working days only were required to complete "Eastward Ho," for William Fox. This is the second feature for the Fox program in which William Russell is starred. It is reported to be a sensational story of a Westerner transferred to New York, and is full of action. Director Emmett J. Flynn was given an opportunity to screen many points of interest in the great city, and some of the interior scenes are said to be exact duplicates of the home of a well-known millionaire.

William Russell's role fits him very well, it is said, and he should score heavily as the hero of the story. A good cast supports the star. His leading woman is Lucille Lee Stewart, who in "Eastward Ho" wears, it is claimed, some of the most startling creations of the modiste's art. Robert Cain has the heavy role in the production. Johnny Hines, a comedian, plays the part of the rube in New York. Mary Hay is the ingenue of the picture. Charles A. Stevenson, Ralph Delmar and Colin Chase round out the cast.

Bee Hive Monopolizes Madison Street Houses in Chicago

Mr. R. C. Cropper's Chicago Bee Hive Exchange claims to have established a new record for Madison Street in Chicago, during the past three weeks. It began with Texas Guinan in "The She Wolf" playing two consecutive weeks at the Star. "The Mysterious Mr. Browning" opened for four days, first run, at the Alcazar, then playing a repeat date for a solid week, directly across the street at the Star Theatre. Neal Hart in "When the Desert Smiled" went in to the Alcazar as opposition for a week's run.

The fourth picture selected for the Feature program is Crane Wilbur's five-reel picture, "Stripped for a Million," release date of which has been set for November first.

Film Stars to Aid Concert for Beth David Hospital

A concert to aid the building fund of Beth David Hospital, at which many prominent screen stars will lend their aid, has been arranged and will be given at the Manhattan Opera House on November 16 Moses A. Sachs is in charge of the arrangements.

Author Praising Screen Says He Gets Ideas from It

Achmed Abdullah, author and playwright, addressed the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their weekly luncheon on the subject "Writing and Motion Pictures." Mr. Abdullah had a few criticisms to make of certain motion picture productions, but he paid the screen the greatest compliment that could come from a literary man by saying he followed the action of motion pictures in writing his stories.

"I've been writing plays with Mr. David Belasco," he said. "He read some of my stuff and remarked: 'You have a new "kick" here — where did you get it?'

"I saw it in motion pictures," I told him. This play is soon to be produced by Mr. Belasco. It is my belief that the drama ought to be grateful to motion pictures for what they have done for it.

"I get many of my ideas from motion pictures — ideas which are developed into stories that go very well indeed. By following motion pictures closely I learn the trick of following my characters through the whole action. Other authors follow the same line."

L. B. Mayer Gives a Pre-Release Show of "In Old Kentucky"

The whole country was pretty well represented at the pre-release showing of Anita Stewart's latest production "In Old Kentucky," which her producer, Louis B. Mayer gave at Hotel Astor, New York, Wednesday evening, October 8. First National Franchise holders from every single district were present, in addition to several branch managers.

The guests included Robert Lieber, president of the First National; J. D. Williams, general manager; and Harry Schwalbe, treasurer; N. H. Gordon of Boston; Col. Fred Levy of Louisville, Ky.; T. L. Tally of Los Angeles; John H. Kunsky of Detroit; Harry Nolan of Denver; Fred Dankin of San Francisco; J. Robert Rubin, Bruce Johnson, San Francisco; Watterson Rothaker, Chicago; and Joseph Skirbol, Pittsburgh.

East Is East and West Is West, When Films Are to Be Made

Much has been said lately in a prophetic way concerning the future location of the motion picture supply, which is now centered in southern California. The fact that some of the large producing concerns are erecting studios in the neighborhood of New York has led some of the prophets to assert that a hegira has set in eastward. This prediction is based on the fact that improvements in the methods of artificial lighting have made it possible to produce technical effects indoors that heretofore needed the peculiar sunlight of California.

But, according to William Desmond Taylor, the Paramount director, there does not seem to be any prospect of overcoming the financial and adverse-weather handicaps that tend to make movies costly when put together in the East instead of in California.

Mr. Taylor said: "I was almost three months making one picture in the East this summer and autumn. It was a film which would ordinarily have taken from five to six weeks, and the delay was caused by the excessive amount of rain. Exteriors which were absolutely essential just couldn't be obtained, and while I enjoy the East and have a most happy time there when I can loaf, give me California if I am working."

McLaughlin Drama is Scoring Throughout Ohio

"The House Without Children," under the guiding genius of Leon Netter is proving a big attraction throughout the State of Ohio it is reported. Mr. Netter is primarily a show-man and understands the art of attracting attention to his show.

He has employed a company of actors to play two of the big scenes in the McLaughlin drama and a tenor soloist to sing the sentimetal song in the last act. A telegraphic report from Cleveland reads as follows:

"Netter is putting out the biggest road-show ever organized for a motion picture. His weekly expense for actors, singers and management exceeds the usual top rental for the best feature pictures."

Recent Fox Activities in Brief

Review of the Recent and Present Undertakings Show Unusual Activities in Many Branches

WILLIAM Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, has issued an important announcement of recent and present activities undertaken by the corporation. Two stars have been added to the Fox galaxy. These are Miss Shirley Mason, who is a New York girl; and "Buck" Jones, a type of Western American, who has a long-term contract for Western pictures. Miss Josie Sedgwick has been signed to play leads with Jones; Albert Roscoe has signed as a leading man; and Henry J. Hebert will play as a gentlemanly villain.

Mr. Fox's announcement came as a result of a lengthy telegram from Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of Fox Film Corporation, who went to the Pacific Coast a month ago, accompanied by Arthur James, supervisor of advertising and publicity to consummate negotiations with leading photoplay actors, directors and writers.

The president of the corporation said that in addition to the new stars, Cliff Smith, the well-known director of Western pictures, now directs Tom Mix, while Charles Swickard will direct the pictures in which "Buck" Jones stars.

H. H. Van Loan, former newspaperman, and now a novelist and scenario writer, has made a contract to write stories of the Far West for Tom Mix. This will assure the Western star a supply of stories of the type in which he has gained such popularity on the screen. Mr. Fox also includes in his announcement news to the effect that Tom Mix, Madeline Traverse and Gladys Brockwell have renewed their contracts.

The report further states that Supervising Director Hampton Del Ruth, with his assistants, Eddie Cline, Roy Del Ruth, Jack Blystone, K. G. MacLean and Felmar Lord, is making plans for enlargements in Sunshine Comedies. The funny Singer Midgets have contracted to appear in the comedies — the first time they will have appeared in films, it is said.

The "Film City Two Minutes from Broadway," as the new Fox building, 55th St. and 10th Ave., New York, is called, is nearly completed, and present indications are that the corporation will move into its new home about December 1. The immense fireproof brick, concrete and steel structure will mark a new advancement in the field of motion picture making, it is said, because in it are being placed the latest appliances for the filming of photoplays and the manufacture of the films, besides the modern conveniences for the benefit of exhibitors who visit the business offices and for the comfort of the hundreds of employees in the building.

A visit to the new $2,500,000 building impresses one with the completeness with which Mr. Fox has cared for the up-to-date manufacture of films and for the comfort of his employees as well as visiting exhibitors. The seven projection rooms will have all the advantages of the best film theatres. The seats will placed on a sloping floor and will be well-upholstered. For his employees Mr. Fox has provided a large restaurant, a reference library and rest rooms. There will be on duty at all times a physician, a dentist, a chiropodist and barbers. There will be dressing room accommodations for 1,000 players, beside dressing rooms for the stars and green rooms.

Famous Directors' Series Booked

Hallmark Announces the Sale to Sterling Film of Canada of This Entire Series

W. F. RODGERS, general sales manager, Hallmark Pictures Corporation, announces that Sterling Films, Ltd., of Montreal and Toronto, handling exclusively the Hallmark releases in Canada, has booked the series of twenty-six Famous Directors' pictures at the Imperial Theatre, Montreal. The first of the series to play the Imperial is Burton L. King's six-reel special, "Wit Wins," starring Florence Billings, who is supported by Hugh Thompson and Eugene Strong. "Wit Wins" will run for three days at the Imperial beginning October 26th.

Following "Wit Wins," the Imperial will run Charles Miller's production, "Love, Honor and (?)," starring Ellen Cassidy and Stuart Holmes. J. Searle Dawley's six-reel production, "The Phanton Honeymoon," starring Marguerite Marsh is third on the list; and another Miller production, "The Heart of a Gypsy," starring Florence Billings, is fourth. Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark, announces that he has in preparation two other productions — one under the direction of Mr. Miller, a screen version of Clinton Stagg's "High Speed," starring Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette; and the other a feature started this week under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald Director Fitzgerald's first production will be the screen version of an original story by Leon Britton. Edmund Breese, Anna Lehr and James Morrison have the principal roles.

Mr. Hall's policy in booking the Famous Directors' series is based on the open booking policy. A two-picture cancellation is the privilege of the exhibitor if he so elects and there are always four pictures ahead in the Hallmark exchanges for the exhibitor to view. He can see before he buys.

November 5 Set by Goldwyn as "Salesmen's Day"

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has designated November 5th as "Salesmen's Day." On that day every salesman connected with any of Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges will go out after a record breaking number of contracts. Branch managers report, that judging from the enthusiasm displayed by their men in the field, the fifth of November will be the biggest day in the history of the Goldwyn sales organization.

West Permanently Gets Mayer

Producer Goes to Personally Supervise Future Output; Speaks of Standards for Future

AFTER an extremely strenuous summer in New York, during which he moved his Eastern organization into larger quarters, hired a few directors, paid record prices for several well known books and plays, mapped out gigantic publicity and promotion plans for his Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin productions, Louis B. Mayer, has returned to the Coast accompanied by his wife and two children, prepared to make his home permanently in California.

Before leaving, Mr. Mayer had this to say about his accomplishments and prospects in the making of motion pictures: "It is with a tinge of regret that I am leaving the East this time, for it means taking my very home with me. I like southern California, its wonderful climate and beautiful scenery, but it is not for that I am permanently forsaking my former home. It is because I have set a standard of motion picture production so high that I am afraid to trust the reaching of that standard entirely to others. It is just a year since I entered the producing field, and in the beginning I made many promises as to the kind of pictures I was going to make with Anita Stewart. I have done everything in my power to live up to these promises. I have stinted on nothing,—money, time nor energy,—and the exhibitors and the public are the ones to say whether or not I have made good. And I know what their verdict has been. Stewart productions have received their unqualified stamp of approval.

"I have consistently held to my policy of combining the great star, great play, great director and great cast. Regarding the star, I doubt if anyone questions Miss Stewart's greatness today. As to directors, the three I secured for her productions have all been engaged to make specials for the First National and Famous Players, which should be proof enough that I have gone after the best. The expensive and at the same time capable casts have been the talk of the industry, and as for the stories, the large sums paid for them have been amply justified by the returns to exhibitors as well as to myself.

"I have set even a higher standard for the coming year, and with two stars now instead of one a year ago, I can see some real work ahead. I plan making six productions with Miss Stewart as the star, and six with Mildred Harris Chaplin who has seen fit to entrust me with the producing of her future pictures. In addition I hope to make several big specials, which will be specials in the real sense of the word. I have secured a number of exceptionally fine stories, including 'The Yellow Typhoon,' 'The Fighting Shepherdess,' and 'Judith of Blue Lake Ranch' for Miss Stewart, and 'The Inferior Sex,' 'Old Dad' and 'Pollyop of the Storm Country' for Mrs. Chaplin.

"The question of directors is always a serious one, but I believe I have solved in satisfactorily. In Joseph Henaberry who will direct Mrs. Chaplin I have a director who has come through every test with flying colors. I look for him to spring a genuine surprise in his first Chaplin production.

"At the coast I could have hired a studio, but I wanted one after my own ideas, and so I am having one built. In it I am embodying many features not found in studios before. But in every case these features have been introduced not for show, but for the comfort of the star and the players and the facilitating of picture production. I have planned for beautiful bungalow dressing rooms for both Miss Stewart and Mrs. Chaplin so that they may be really 'at home' in their screen work.

"Of course I shall come East occasionally, and expect to make the first trip back with the first Chaplin picture which ought to be ready about the first of the year. But these visits will necessarily be brief as otherwise the purpose of my living at the coast would not be gained."

"The Right to Happiness" Scores

The Reports From Various Parts of Country Record Triumph of Universal Feature

THE Universal Film Manufacturing Company acclaims "The Right to Happiness" as truly one of the greatest pictures of the year, and in support of its statement points to the reported triumphs that the production is said to have experienced in the East, the Middle-West and the West. As a substantial evidence of the way its great popularity affected some of the larger circuits in the country the Universal announces that the Lower New York Circuit, the Fox Circuit, the M. and S. Amusement Co., the Sohmer and Brill Circuit, the Consolidated Amusement Co., and other leading circuits booked this production shortly after its premier showing. In Chicago the large Lubliner and Trintz circuit, the Shoenstadt and Sons circuit and other leading Chicago theatres have also booked the feature.

In New York alone the day total is said to run to more than 450 days, and in Chicago the total number of playing days to date is 300. These figures are being augmented daily, according to reports.

But New York and Chicago are not alone in their demand for this Dorothy Phillips' production. Other large theatres in cities throughout the country which have booked "The Right to Happiness" are: Majestic, Springfield, Ohio; Majestic, Cleveland, Ohio; Colonial, Keokuk, Iowa; Patricia, London, Ont.; Loughlin, Long Beach, Cal.; Grand, Riverside, Cal.; Strand, Phoenix, Arizona; Strand, Milwaukee, Wis.; The Fuller, Madison, Wis.; Unique, Minneapolis, Minn.; Sim, Omaha, Neb.; Rialto, Lincoln, Neb.; Metropolitan, Philadelphia, Pa.; Rialto, Washington, D. C.; Grand, Camden, N. J.; Loew's Hippodrome, Baltimore, Md.; Strand, Scranton, Pa.; Savoy, Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Regent, Allentown, Pa.; The State St., Trenton, N. J.; Olympic, Pittsburgh, Pa.; Wigwam, San Francisco, Cal.; Liberty, Sacramento, Cal.; Lyceum Starland, Winnipeg, Man.; ex, Brantford, Ont.; Majestic, Boston, Mass.; Empire, Portland, Oregon; Strand, Syracuse, N. Y.; Orpheum, Rockford, Ill.; Fisher, Danville, Ill.; Mirror, Moline, Ill.; Columbia, Dayton, Ohio; Strand, Cleveland, Ohio; New Regent, Lima, Ohio; Pantheon, Toledo, Ohio; Strand, Ft. Wayne, Ind.; Strand, Evansville, Ind.; "Washington," Richmond, Ind.; Liberty, Kansas City, Mo.; California, Los Angeles, Cal.; "Pickwick," San Diego, Cal.; and Florence, Pasadena, Cal.

Fox Signs Clyde Cook, Noted Foreign Comedian

To those interested in motion pictures the announcement by William Fox that Clyde Cook, the noted British entertainer now amusing big audiences at the New York Hippodrome, is to join Fox Sunshine Comedies, comes as a pleasant surprise.

Completion of the negotiations assures to followers of the screen in the United States and all other countries a plentiful supply of laughs, for Mr. Cook's reputation for delighting theatre-goers is of the highest in Australia, England, France and since he has been with "Happy Days" at the big New York playhouse, in this country.

Hall-Room Boy Comics Continue Production Indefinitely

To contradict several rumors to the contrary, Harry M. Rubey, newly-elected president of the National Film Corporation, stated this week that the two-reel comedies being issued as "The Hall-Room Boy Comedies" would continue indefinitely to be produced in California. The distribution and handling of the Hall-Room Boys series are in the hands of Jack and Harry Cohn, and Mr. Rubey stated that there would be no change in these arrangements.

Serial Story in New York Evening World Aids "Black Secret"

Publicity is given the forthcoming Pathe serial, "The Black Secret," starring Pearl White, by the publication in the New York Evening World of the new Robert W. Chambers' novel, "In Secret." "The Black Secret" is adapted from the Chambers' novel by Bertram Millhauser and was directed by George B. Seitz, Pathe's famous producer-director-star.

Swickard Becomes Fox Director

Charles Swickard, who has had a varied career as stage director, actor and playwright, has signed a contract to serve in the capacity of director with the Fox Film Corporation. The Fox Film was represented by Winfield R. Sheehan, the general manager, in the signing of the agreement. The contract was effected at the Hollywood Studios, where Mr. Swickard has established his headquarters.

Strong Cast and An Impressive Theme for New Fox Feature

R. A. Walsh's cinemelodramatic production, "Should a Husband Forgive?," is said to possess a strong cast and in addition, it is credited with being a powerful sermon—a strong impressive story that teaches a moral of vital force to all humanity.

Miriam Cooper, the creator of the title role in Fox's celebrated screen version of "Evangeline," is the central figure of "Should a Husband Forgive?."

Mrs. James K. Hackett, professionally known as Beatrice Beckley, brings to the role of the wife whom the husband would not forgive a finished art it is said, which makes this part a powerfully appealing one.

The other members of the cast include Percy Standing as Rex Burleigh, who plans the downfall of Ruth Fulton, the part enacted by Miss Cooper; Vincent Coleman, the leading juvenile; Eric Mayne; Martha Mansfield; Lyster Chambers; Charles Craig; James Marcus; Johnny Ries; and Tom Brooks.

Capital Film Party in "Real" Shipwreck Off West Coast

Forty-two employees of the Capital Film Co., members of the cast making the Neal Hart productions, spent an anxious night aboard a ship-wrecked vessel off Newport Beach, Calif., October 14th, according to a telegram just received by Mr. S. L. Barnhard, president of the Company, from C. E. Eckels, General Manager of the Capital Film Co.

A three-masted vessel, the Fremont, with the entire company aboard went aground among the breakers at about 6 p. m., as the company was returning to land after a day spent in taking pictures for their story. They were eventually rescued by life lines stretched from the shore. All members of the rescued company are now reported to be in good condition, after their strenuous experience.

Good Cast in the Prospective Christie Special Comedy

In Al. E. Christie's new special, Colleen Moore heads the cast which also includes Earl Rodney, Eddie Barry, Helen Darling, Gene Corey, Harry Rattenbarry, Jack Henderson, George French, William Bletcher, Ward Caulfield and Harry De Roy.

According to reports, the plot involves the burning of "Rome" and such characters as the historic Nero, Brutus, Cassius, etc., the whole theme, of course, being burlesqued from the Christie comic viewpoint.

Realart's Philadelphia Branch Office Moves to New Home

John S. Woody, general manager of Realart Pictures Corporation, announces the removal of the Philadelphia branch office to a new location, 1237 Vine Street. It is in the heart of the motion picture trade district and manager Jay Emanuel is reported to be quite happy in his new home.

M. A. Lightman, President Criterion Film Service, Altanta, Ga.

"Please Get Married" Scores in Striking Fashion

Viola Dana's first Screen Classics, Inc., special production, "Please Get Married," which began with a splash when the first scenes were photographed with Miss Dana in a bathing suit, made a tremendous splash as well with its release, according to exhibitor's reports and newspaper notices received at the home offices of Metro in the Longacre building.

The California Theatre, Los Angeles, referred to the production as a "100 per cent box-office attraction." Similar laudatory comments were received from the bigger houses the country over.

Robertson-Cole Reports "All's Well" in the Northwest

Robertson-Cole Company reports that the Sunday "Oregonian," a local paper of Portland, Ore., during the recent harvest festival, gave a fine write-up of the current Robertson-Cole features. Three of the local photoplay houses are also said to have conducted an elaborate exploiting campaign in behalf of the company's productions, which were being shown, during the season. Altogether, the returns from this section of the country are reported to be gratifying and to indicate a healthy growth of the motion-picture industry in the Northwest.

Dorothy Gish and Company Coming East Soon

The Dorothy Gish Company, which has continued work at the Sunset Studios since the departure of D. W. Griffith and company, plans to leave for New York as soon as the present picture, being made by Director Elmer Clifton, is completed. The present subject has Ralph Graves, Rhea Haines, Raymond Cannon and Charles Gerrard as the principal players. No title has been selected for the subject.

Early Returns on "The Blue Bonnet" Augur Success

According to statements the Hodkinson managers throughout the country have turned in a banner week's business on "The Blue Bonnet," starring Billie Rhodes. It is said that the National Film Corporation of America production is giving great promise of developing into the biggest artistic and financial success in which the dainty ingenue star has yet appeared.

The Hodkinson home office has approved a contract with the Rowland and Clark chain of Pittsburgh theatres, whereby "The Blue Bonnet" will be presented at the firm's six big houses during October.

Mae Murray Signs a Contract with the International

Mae Murray, one of the screen's best known players, has signed a contract with the International Film Company, and will appear in Cosmopolitan Productions. This is the second player signed by International during the week, Lucy Cotton having been signed by this company also to appear in Cosmopolitan Productions.

Robert Z. Leonard will probably direct Miss Murray in some of her features for this company. It is thought that she will start working for International about November first.

Alice Joyce Completes the New Courtney Feature, "Pride"

Alice Joyce last week completed her new production by William B. Courtney, tentatively called "Pride." It is not likely that it will be released by Vitagraph until after the Christmas holidays. Miss Joyce immediately began work on a film version of "The Sporting Duchess," the famous Drury Lane melodramatic spectacle.

Miss Joyce had a supporting company which included such players as Percy Marmont, Louise Beaudet, Charles A. Stevenson, G. V. Seyffertitz and Templer Saxe. George Terwilliger was the director.

"The Eternal Mother" with Florence Reed Soon to be Offered

Founded on a universal theme, and carrying a crushing indictment of the woman who, though fit and capable, shirks her duty to the state and to humanity by refusing to bear children, the negative and working print of "The Eternal Mother," the fourth of the big Florence Reed specials, will be turned over to United Picture Theatres of America this week for final grooming before release.

Big Demand for "Six Feet Four"

The American Film Company reports that the bookings on its feature "Six Feet Four," which is based on Jackson Gregory's novel, are unusually heavy. Among the big circuits that have recently called for the production is the Turner and Dahnken circuit of San Francisco, which, according to reports, will swing the picture across its entire chain of theatres in the West.

World Wide Advertising Pays F.P.-Lasky

Globe Girdling Campaign Makes Foreign Demand Heavy

RECOGNIZING that the motion picture has long since become the universal language of the masses, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has extended the scope of its publicity and advertising campaign to include the entire world. For nine months the Foreign Department, of which Emil E. Shauer, assistant treasurer, is manager, has been conducting an aggressive world-wide campaign for the popularization of Paramount-Artcraft pictures, with surprising results in the way of publicity and advertising returns.

One aim of the foreign department of publicity and advertising, which was organized early in 1919, has been the standardizing of the Paramount-Artcraft trademark throughout the world on a scale similar to that accomplished in the United States by the national advertising campaign conducted by Famous Players-Lasky. O. R. Geyer is manager of the department of foreign publicity and advertising. That the time was ripe for such a campaign is indicated by the unusual success attained by the foreign department in the initial stages of its campaign.

For one thing it has been discovered that the motion picture fans of Central and South America, Europe and the Orient are surprisingly up-to-date in their knowledge and appreciation of the work of the American stars, and they have shown unusual interest in the campaign conducted by Famous Players to familiarize the photoplay lovers of the world with the highest grade and most popular pictures. South American fans, in particular, are keenly alive to the better grade motion pictures, the demand for which has grown enormously since American films gained the ascendency in the South American market during the war period.

In co-operation with its various agencies and with a number of the leading motion picture and trade publications, newspapers and general magazines, the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has been devoting more and more attention to educational work in foreign countries on the subject of better films. As far as possible this campaign has been modelled after the national advertising and publicity campaign which has been carried on so successfully throughout the United States in the last three years. The end of the war, with the consequent removal of many of the restrictions placed upon newspapers and other publications by the war, has brought about a great increase in the space given motion pictures by the leading publications in all countries.

In the last six months, according to reports received by Famous Players-Lasky, numerous film publications, for the trade and public, have been inaugurated in South America, Europe, Japan and Australia. A number of trade papers in France and Italy which suspended publication during the war, have resumed publication, while others have increased in size and are giving much more time and attention to the work of popularizing the motion picture.

Reports from England, France, Scandinavia, Italy, Spain, Cuba, Mexico, Brazil, Argentine, Chile, Australia and Japan received since the inauguration of the world-wide publicity campaign for Paramount-Artcraft pictures indicate a great increase in the interest in motion pictures on the part of the general public which has had an unusually healthy reaction upon trade and general publications.

Newspapers which until a few months ago had scorned or ignored the motion picture field as a source of news, have begun to show signs of an awakening to the fact long since established in America that the masses are interested in seeing and reading about their principal entertainer, the movies. Another six months will show a surprising reaction to this sentiment on the part of the publications of a general circulation, in the opinion of John C. Flinn, director of publicity and advertising for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Foreign film publications, especially those catering to the fans, are constantly increasing the space devoted to news and stories about American pictures and players. The result is that the fans living in the larger centers of population are keenly alert as to the work of the most popular American screen players. In fact, so up-to-date are they that grief is certain to visit the exhibitor who attempts to palm off an old American picture as the latest work of the star.

Of particular interest to American exhibitors, for geographical as well as business reasons, is the tremendous growth of the motion picture industry in Central and South America.

Paramount-Artcraft pictures are tremendously popular throughout Cuba and Porto Rico, according to A. L. Pratchett, manager for the Caribbean Film Company in Cuba, distributors of Paramount-Artcraft pictures. As a means of stimulating interest in high grade motion pictures, the Caribbean Film Company is publishing a monthly magazine, "La Revista Paramount," for the entertainment and enlightenment of motion picture fans.

The establishment of an exchange in Mexico for Paramount-Artcraft pictures, under the name of Continental Film Company, Inc., has served to bring about a great increase in the public interest in Paramount-Artcraft pictures. Mexican exhibitors are now able to present the same pictures shown in the United States, and the public demand for high grade pictures is being constantly improved.

Famous Players Lasky Corporation has built the village of "Millville, Ill.," the locale of "The Copperhead" just as it was at the period of the action of the play, at the studio near Elmhurst, L. I. Lionel Barrymore is being starred in the feature.

Simultaneous Run of Three Pathe Serials in Week of November 9

Three Pathe serials will be running simultaneously on the screens of the country the week of November 9th. The new Pearl White serial, "The Black Secret," will be released on that date, the first episode being entitled "The Great Secret." The third episode of the George B. Seitz serial, "Bound and Gagged," entitled "Overboard," and the fifteenth episode of the Western Photoplays serial "The Great Gamble," costarring Anne Luther and Charles Hutchison, will also be released on the same date.

William Russell, Fox star, has completed his second feature for William Fox, "Eastward Ho."

Selznick Absorbs a Corporation

Now Controls New Republic Distributing Corporation; Busch is President and Gen. Manager

LEWIS J. Selznick's extending interests in the moving picture industry reached out in a new direction this week, with the formation of the Republic Distributing Corporation, a picture organization which begins with twenty-two exchanges in active operation. Britton N. Busch, for several years a prominent factor in the picture business, is president and general manager of the Republic, but Mr. Selznick will be in full control as advisory director.

The new company will have no connection with Select, and will conduct its business in separate exchanges, handling a complete line of releases from the Home Office at 130 West 46th Street, New York. In order that it may be ready to engage in business immediately, the company has taken over from the World Film Corporation its entire list of exchanges, which cover the United States through twenty-two key cities.

Mr. Busch makes the following statement of the general policy of the Republic Distributing Corporation:

"Our plan is to distribute the highest grade independent productions we can secure. We are in the market for the best. We have engaged twenty-two branch managers who have made reputations for square dealing with exhibitors and who have reputations for efficient service.

"One element which we will develop especially in our service is the high class short subjects. We will have several interesting announcements to make in this connection in a very few days. By November 1st the organization will be running in full blast.

In announcing his acquisition of this new distributing unit, Mr. Selznick says:

"The Republic Distributing Corporation is simply another organization for exhibitors' service. My aim is to get in closest possible touch with the theatre. For example, instead of distributing films through the entire tributary territory near New York through the New York Exchange, Select has branches in Albany, New Haven and for the New Jersey business. But it would be out of the question for one company to try to distribute all the pictures in the business. I saw the opening for another company operating along the same general lines of co-operation and exploitation as Select, and the Republic Distributing Corporation has been organized to meet that demand.

"I have known Mr. Busch ten years and have absolute confidence in his ability and personality. As president and general manager of Republic, exhibitors will find him one of the ablest and fairest executives in the industry."

A detailed announcement of plans and first releases will be made by the Republic Distributing Corporation shortly.

Goldwyn Gets Booth Tarkington

Noted Author, Interpreter of Youth and its Characteristics, to do Series of Twelve for Film

BOOTH Tarkington, one of the foremost authors in America to-day, and probably the greatest interpreter of youth, has been secured by Samuel Goldwyn to do a series of 12 two-reel comedies for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation.

For years Mr. Tarkington has been sought by motion picture producers, but not until last week, when he signed a contract with Mr. Goldwyn, did he consent to devote his talents to the making of photoplays.

The arrangements closed with Mr. Goldwyn mean that the creator of the irrepressible "Penrod" and the irresistible Baxter of the "Seventeen" stories, is going to place his next great character of American boyhood on the screen, instead of in a magazine or on the stage. The stories will be known as the Edgar Comedies, they will be original series, along the line of the "Penrod" masterpieces, written especially for photoplay presentation, and the author will co-operate in their production at the Goldwyn Studios.

This is the first time that Mr. Tarkington has agreed to devote his creative genius to motion picture work. Moreover, it marks a triumph for the screen in enlisting the support of an author who, it is felt, is bound to become a classic in American literature. His "Clarence" is one of the outstanding successes of the present stage season in New York.

Before the contracts were signed, the president of Goldwyn, and other officials of the company, went over every phase of the motion picture situation with Mr. Tarkington, who, although he never has expressed himself publicly on the subject, has definite ideas about ways in which the humor and naturalness of photoplays may be increased — ideas that he will carry out in the production of his own works.

Through Mr. Goldwyn, the creator of "Penrod" was convinced that the time has come to offer his next character creation to a still wider public. In perfecting a plan of operation, it was decided that two-reel pictures afforded the ideal way of presenting the type of comedies the author has in mind. They are to be comedies based on character and situations arising naturally out of the emotions and actions of the people introduced. Mr. Tarkington believes that the day of conventionally artificial humor in screen comedies has passed.

Nat Levine Made Theatrical Mgr. of L. K. Comstock and Co.

Nat Levine, formerly secretary to Marcus Loew, and a well-known figure in the film and theatrical fields, has been appointed manager of the Theatrical Department of L. K. Comstock and Company, constructing engineers, with offices in New York, Newark, Montreal, Chicago, Cleveland and Baltimore.

Industry Called to Arms to Aid Red Cross Drive

The American Red Cross, which on November 2 begins its biggest campaign, appeals to exhibitors and those connected in any capacity with the motion picture industry, to further its project, particularly with publicity.

The sum of $15,000,000 is aimed at by the Red Cross, to be devoted to aiding the suffering overseas and for service to America, particularly for emergency disaster relief.

Particularly is it urged that the Red Cross stamps be used this Christmas season.

British Bid for American Star

The motion picture producers of Great Britain are evidently preparing to make a vigorous bid for success on the screen, judging by their recent activity in attempting to line up American stars for coming British film productions. According to reports received, among those who have been the recipients of flattering offers from London producers is Miss Peggy Shanor, now playing in the Supreme Pictures, Inc., 156 episode serial, starring the former hypnotist of vaudeville, J. Robert Pauline. Miss Shanor is said to have declined the offer.

B. A. Rolfe Completes Filming of "The Red Virgin"

B. A. Rolfe and Chester DeVonde completed their work of staging "The Red Virgin" this week at the A. H. Fischer Studios, and the film is now in the hands of the Fischer editorial department. "The Red Virgin" is a drama by Charles A. Logue and was produced by the A. H. Fischer Features, Inc.

In the cast of the picture, which is to be marketed as a special feature, appear Diana Allen, Eugene Strong, Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, E. J. Ratcliffe, John L. Shine, Gordon H. Standing and James S. Ryan.

Hallmark Coast Officials Here with Wilson Serial Prints

Wally Van, special representative for Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, on the Coast and Ben Wilson who supervised the production of and is starring in, Hallmark's serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," arrived in New York this week from Hollywood with prints of the last five episodes of the Wilson serial. They will return to the Coast next week and start production work on the second Wilson serial.

Universal Effects New Idea

What is represented to be a real innovation was put into operation recently by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. H. M. Berman announces that William K. Howard has been appointed as the representative of the sales force at Universal City, the object of this reported unique arrangement being to effect a closer co-operation between the sales and the producing forces at Universal City.

Kenneth O'Hara Made Studio Mgr. of Gasnier's Glendale Plant

Kenneth A. O'Hara, for the last five years associated in executive exploitation or business capacity with several producing corporations, has been appointed studio manager at the L. J. Gasnier plant in Glendale.

Under Mr. O'Hara's active charge will come all production detail connected with the Lew Cody special features, the Dustin Farnum-United Theatres Corporation releases and the Astra Film Corporation projects, a serial release for which is currently being filmed.

Director Miller Starts Work on "High Speed" for Hallmark

Director Charles Miller, started work, this week, at the Hallmark Studios, 230 West 38th Street, on his next Famous Directors' pictures, a screen version of Clinton Stagg's automobile story, "High Speed," adapted to the screen by John Glavey of the Hallmark scenario department.

The cast is headed by Edward Earle and Gladys Hulette. Mr. Earle and Miss Hulette are supported by Roger Lytton, Charles Husted, Fay Evelyn, Ida Horton, Jack Edwards and Mathew L. Betts.

Opera Singers Aid Exhibition of "The Price Woman Pays"

As a novelty in the presentation of "The Price Woman Pays," the J. Frank Hatch Enterprises, it is stated, have inaugurated a new policy whereby they will send out six women opera singers with every show at a one-dollar admission. Mr. Hatch has announced that this plan, which originated in the Philadelphia exchange handling this feature, has met with phenomenal success and will be utilized in the balance of the New York, Pennsylvania and New Jersey territory. The singers render some of the most popular selections from "Faust" which is linked in theme with the screen production.

Nat Rothstein Goes With Equity

Harry Reichenbach, Now an Officer of Equity, Engages Former "U" Advertising Director

HARRY L. REICHENBACH, who has been elected an officer by the Equity Pictures Corporation, and who is in charge of all exploitation, advertising and publicity for that concern, in addition to being personal representative for Harry Garson and Clara Kimball Young, announced this week that he had engaged Nat Rothstein, for five years advertising director for the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, and that Mr. Rothstein would be placed in complete charge of all advertising for Equity and Clara Kimball Young.

Rothstein's work with Universal has stood out, both from the point of artistic beauty of his advertising conceptions and the pith and punch of his displays. That his work will even improve at Equity, is best known when it is understood that he will have two and three months on each subject.

Mr. Rothstein will have total charge of his own department, working with Reichenbach, and upon such occasions as the latter goes on the road in the interest of the company, Rothstein will assume Reichenbach's labors as well, a competent staff of assistants being afforded for the great amount of work necessary to constantly supply twenty exchanges with new material weekly.

"I was asked by Equity to secure someone who could take the advertising off my hands and give our subjects the finest treatment," said Reichenbach, "and when I heard that Rothstein had resigned from Universal, there was no hesitancy on my part in seeking him and offering him the place.

"His advertising for Universal has been the finest in the film trades and by far the best I have ever seen and I know for I've seen it all.

"Week following week he has shown new and novel ideas and his displays have carried the punch, and as the Equity people are expecting to do a great deal of advertising, they immediately engaged Rothstein when I submitted my selection for their approval."

Mr. Rothstein took up his new department with Equity on October 20th, and is located at their office in Aeolian Hall.

Miss A. B. Williamson will be general assistant to both Mr. Reichenbach and Mr. Rothstein. Miss Williamson, who began with Equity as general office assistant, has bloomed into a first rate, intelligent exploitation assistant, and when fully developed will be given certain publicity channels to fill, and a staff supplied her.

The entire Equity exploitation, advertising and accessory departments will be under Reichenbach's general management.

"Red Peril" Bolshevic Expose

Wharton Releasing Corporation Shows Production in Ithaca; Senator Lusk High in Praise of it

Bolshevism, with its sinister influences seeking to inflict America with industrial paralysis and bloody revolution, is vividly unmasked in the feature motion picture, "The Red Peril," which was shown privately last week at the Strand Theatre, Ithaca, N. Y. That the production will be a highly effective weapon to combat the spread of the red menace in this country was the statement of Senator Clayton R. Lusk, head of the New York State Legislative Committee which is investigating Bolshevism, and who came to Ithaca especially to witness the premiere screening of the picture.

Senator Lusk, in an address to the audience, complimented the producers on the picture, saying: "I have been profoundly moved by this picture. It will render America a tremendous patriotic service. The man who conceived it and the man who wrote the scenario had the mind of a prophet, for he has presented and depicted, absolutely correctly, conditions in this country to-day."

Senator Lusk also stated: "Only two things will save America. One is by fighting the spread of Bolshevism through the medium of the newspapers and the speaking platform. The other weapon is motion picture propaganda, expressed along the lines of 'The Red Peril.'"

The production has a special bearing on the present labor situation and more particularly the coal-miners' and longshoremen's strikes. It depicts how Bolshevist agents, realizing that Americans are too loyal to their government and too intelligent to countenance anarchy, plan to use organized labor as their catspaw. True to present conditions, "The Red Peril" shows honest and loyal labor's fight against the radical firebrands planted in their organizations, for the purpose of creating strife with capital and causing trouble for the government.

"The Red Peril" was produced under the supervision of C. V. Henkel, the author of the scenario, who also titled and edited the picture. The original negative and positive print was completely destroyed by fire, some five months ago, when lightning struck the laboratory. Work on the new negative was at once started and only recently completed. Thus time and fate have changed the story from prophecy into fact.

DeMille's Feature "Why Change Your Wife?" Near Completion

Cecil B. DeMille is nearing the completion of his newest production for Paramount-Artcraft, "Why Change Your Wife?", in which Gloria Swanson, Thomas Meighan and Bebe Daniels play the leading roles. Upon the completion of the picture, Mr. DeMille plans a brief Eastern trip, accompanied by his production manager, Howard Higgins, and also by Alvin Wyckoff, director of photography, and Mrs. Clare West and Mitchell Leison, costume designers.

Many Inquiries Follow the Pre-Release of "Broken Butterfly"

The announcement of the purchase by Robertson-Cole of the latest Maurice Tourneur production, "The Broken Butterfly," has been followed by a great many inquiries from exhibitors. The picture will be released shortly and the bookings recorded so far indicate it will be a success.

Well-known men in the industry who have already seen the pre-release showings of the picture in the Robertson-Cole projecting room agree, it is said, that it is one of the best ever made by Tourneur.

Fox Buys Screen Rights to Harold Titus' "The Last Straw"

Fox Film Corporation has purchased the screen rights to "The Last Straw," by Harold Titus, author of "I Conquered" and "Bruce of the Circle A." "The Last Straw" is now running serially in Munsey's Magazine. It is described as "The Winning of a Good Woman in the Bad Lands," and is one of the fast-moving type of western story that is so popular.

The work of adapting the story for the screen is being carried out in the scenario department. As soon as the continuity has been completed, the name of the star will be given out.

Charles T. Horan Signs Up to Direct Grace Davison

Definite announcements have been issued from the Pioneer Headquarters that Charles T. Horan has been signed up to direct the next production for Grace Davison. Mr. Horan is now busily engaged with a corps of assistants, preparing the script of the new feature and at the same time, superintending all the preliminary details of the production plans.

Fisher Wins Out Against Hearst in "Mutt and Jeff" Suit

According to word received from the Fox Film Corporation, the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court has handed down a decision which prohibits Hearst publications from using the words "Mutt and Jeff" in connection with any cartoons or imitations of them.

The announcement further says that the attorneys for the Hearst publications argued that the order of the court granting the injunction nullified the copyright laws, and that the rights of the author after publication could be protected by law for only a limited time — on the expiration of which the work belonged to the public, and therefore could be used by Hearst publications. The court refused to accept this view of the case. It held that any imitation of Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons would constitute unfair competition. The injunction against the Hearst papers was made permanent.

"Tower of Ivory" in Production

William Parke has begun direction of "Tower of Ivory" by Gertrude Atherton, the fourth in the series of Eminent Authors Pictures announced by the Goldwyn Organization.

The story of John Ordham, Mabel Cutting and Margarethe Styr is said to be the greatest love story ever written by Gertrude Atherton.

Bobby Vernon to Have Lead in New Christie Comedy

Al E. Christie, who is beginning the eighth of his new series of Christie Comedy Specials in two reels, has announced that within a short time Bobby Vernon, who has for a long time been very popular in Christie one reel comedies, will head the cast of a new Christie Special.

Producers of Briggs Pictures Move to Jacksonville, Fla.

To be sure of good weather and continuity of production, Briggs Pictures, Inc., producers of the Paramount-Briggs Comedies, released by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, this week moved to Jacksonville, Fla.

A large studio, equipped with the best apparatus for the proper taking of pictures, has been engaged by Alex. Yokel, vice-president and general manager of the Briggs Company, through the co-operation of the Jacksonville Board of Trade, and production will begin promptly after the arrival of the Briggs Company.

New Alkire Feature is Finished

Yesterday marked the completion of Joseph Bennett's first starring vehicle for the Alkire Company under the direction of Fred Kohler. The play is a comedy-drama of rural and city settings, and aviation is the theme, under the title of "An Ace in the Hole." Production Manager Philip H. White wrote the story and personally supervised the production. Doris Baker has the feminine lead, and in the supporting cast are Bert Wilson, Cecil Holland, George Cowell, Joe Hazelton, Mrs. Dora Baker and J. W. Spooner.

"The Brat" Still Breaks Records for Many Exhibitors

"The Brat," Nazimova's latest and greatest production, is, according to letters, telegrams and newspaper clippings received this week at Metro's New York offices, subject to exploitation by motion picture managers on a scale rarely ever before attempted. The picture is justifying this advertising by literally jamming houses at advanced admission prices and, through the prestige of star and production is even having a plainly noticeable after-effect in the form of generally increased business.

Third of Cuckoo Comedies Now in Course of Production

The weekly report from the Mark M. Dintenfass studios in Jacksonville, Florida, to the home offices of the United Picture Theatres of America, announces that the work on the third of the series of Cuckoo comedies, temporarily known by its working title of "The Sultan of Djass," is nearing completion. In this new two-reeler, Bobby Burns again reverts to blackface and will be seen in another of his amusing characterizations of gentlemen of color.

Bee-Hive Buys Wilbur Feature

Mr. R. C. Cropper, President and General Manager of the Bee Hive Film Exchange Company, announces the purchase of Crane Wilbur's latest feature, taken from the story appearing in the Saturday Evening Post, under the title of "Stripped for a Million." This picture will be released on November first.

The Bee Hives will also distribute the Billy West Emerald two reel features for their territory of Illinois, Indiana and Wisconsin.

"The Black Secret" Has Been Secured for the Fox Circuit

The Pathé Home Office announces this week the booking of the latest Pearl White-Pathé serial, "The Black Secret," for the entire Fox circuit. "The Black Secret" will open at the Fox Academy of Music on Thursday, October 30th, and will be shown there on Thursday, Friday and Saturday each week throughout the entire 15 episodes. In the other Fox houses the Jamaica, the Bay Ridge, the Star, the Folly, the Comedy and the Crotona,—the release date will be November 3, with a three-day run in each house. The regular release date of the serial is November 0th

Waiter is Chosen to Impersonate Lincoln in "The Copperhead"

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation recently inserted an ad in the columns of the New York dailies calling for a man to impersonate Abraham Lincoln in the production of "The Copperhead." The candidates were to bear a close resemblance to the great Emancipator in order to qualify for the part. In all there were some 300 persons who responded, and the final selection settled upon N. Schroell, a waiter at the Strand Roof and a native of Luxembourg. Schroell, it is said, has had quite a little experience in amateur theatricals, but his appearance in "The Copperhead" will mark his debut in the motion-pictures.

Says "Sacred Silence" is Hit

According to an announcement from the Fox Film office, 1,400 theatres from Maine to California have booked "Sacred Silence," the first picture in which William Russell is starred on the Fox program. The work of Mr. Russell is described as a most polished performance, but Agnes Ayres and George McQuarrie are reported to be sharing the honors of the production with William Russell.

The Fox office further states that a large number of commendatory communications have been received, attesting the popularity of the picture, from various parts of the country.

First "Realart Theatre" Opened

Last week Kahn and Greenfield, who operate a large group of theatres in Northern California, having more than eighty in the chain, christened one of their picture show-houses in honor of Realart Pictures Corporation. It is called the Realart Theatre, and is located at 22nd and Mission streets, San Francisco. Redecorated and remodeled, it was opened last week with much ceremony. Realart sent a big floral design, the trademark done in flowers with the word "Realart" in the centre. Ralph B. Quive, branch manager at San Francisco, was on hand to assist in the dedication.

Diamond Film Company Opens New Exchange in Pittsburgh

The Diamond Film Exchange is opening a new exchange in Pittsburgh to cover the territory of western Pennsylvania and Virginia. Among the pictures to be offered to exhibitors at the opening of the new exchange are "Lightning Bryce," starring Ann Little and Jack Hoxie, in a fifteen episode western serial, "The Chamber Mystery," bought from the Arrow Film Corporation; and "The Vigilantes," the latter a seven reel production, made by the Bear State Film Co.

Hobart Henley's Debut as Star in "The Gay Old Dog," Pathe

Hobart Henley's initial feature production for Pathe, "The Gay Old Dog," will be released on Nov. 2nd. Although Mr. Henley has appeared before in one-reel comedies, this production will mark his debut as a star in feature photoplays. Appearing with Mr. Henley in this six-reel feature is a cast of capable players, among whom are: Mary Chambers, Emily Lorraine, Inez Marcel, Frances Neilson, Gertrude Robinson, and Nell Tracy.

MR. EDWARD HEMMER

Formerly Manager for Mary Pickford

announces the opening of a Motion Picture Department of his business controlling motion picture rights in the works of famous authors and noted playwrights, representing progressive publishers and play producers in negotiating the sales of these rights in their property.

MOTION PICTURE PRODUCERS ARE INVITED to write Mr. Hemmer in regard to their immediate requirements and to keep in touch with this Department for information as to newly acquired titles of box office value and picture appeal.

PICTURE RIGHTS ARE NOW OPEN UPON THESE TITLES:

SEARCH ME, by AUGUSTUS MCHUGH. Another successful Broadway play by the author of "Officer 666."

2835 MAYFAIR, by FRANK RICHARDSON. An absolutely unique tale of a dual personality and a scientific triumph over sex. Double lead.

ELBOW LANE, by the author of "Altogether Jane." A charming and delicate story of a pure and tender love — how a little country girl becomes a famous sculptress and wins happiness as well as fame. Engenue lead.

THE ENEMY OF WOMAN, by WINIFRED GRAHAM. An astonishing story of a woman in politics and how she set Parliament by the ears. Woman lead.

THE END OF DREAMS, by WOOD LEVETTE WILSON. The hero was either a clubman or criminal, or both — Broadway could not guess which. It took a girl to solve the secret. Male lead.

THE WOMAN PAYS, by FREDERIC P. LADD. An intensely dramatic story dealing with the three foundations of human life — the Love of Home, the Love of Self, and the Love of the Lover. A vivid tale of New York. Male lead.

ONE MAN, by ROBERT STEELE. The sensational novel which created a furor throughout America. Male lead.

THE GRIP OF FEAR, by MAURICE LEVEL. A French detective story which, like "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," has a reporter as a hero. Male lead.

THE OTHER MAN'S WIFE, by FRANK RICHARDSON. A story of London society and the eternal triangle. Male lead.

These and many others exclusively controlled by

"Tweedie"
By Isla May Mullins

Character of Story: Love story.
Theme: The will to be happy.
Characters: "Tweedie" from Finland; Ruth Carlton, who desires to become an author; Professor Carlton, her father; Dr. Rodney Creel, in love with Ruth; Mandy, Ruth's mammy; August Sedenheimer, florist.
The Plot: This is a simple little love story centering around Tweedie — a happy-go-lucky little waif from Finland. Tweedie is a patient of Dr. Rodney Creel at a city hospital, where he nurses her through typhoid. Thereafter she is his devoted slave, though not presuming to regard him in the light of a possible husband. Ruth Carlton definitely refuses to marry Dr. Creel on the ground that she is wedded to her career as an author. She persuades her father to take a house in the country where she can work in quiet. Mandy, her colored mammy, rebels at following them to the wilds, and for a time Ruth attempts to do the housework, but the result is so unsatisfactory that they advertise for a maid. Tweedie answers the advertisement. She delights them with her cooking and cleanliness, but nearly talks them to death. Tweedie is interested in everything — birds flowers and creeping things — but especially interested in Dr. Rod and in finding a husband for herself; a point upon which she is perfectly frank. Ruth, already regretting her refusal of Dr. Creel, is, for some time, jealous of Tweedie's interest in him but eventually learns that Tweedie is only trying to bring Ruth and Dr. Rod together because she loves them both. Dr. Creel goes to Europe and is reported lost on a torpedoed ship. Tweedie insists that he is not dead — she has a feeling that he will come back. Just as Tweedie has discovered her affinity in August Sedenheimer, florist, she is taken with pneumonia. Dr. Rod returns to New York, having been rescued from the steamer, but does not come to see Ruth, and Ruth is too proud to send for him. As Tweedie's condition rapidly becomes worse, however, and as she constantly calls for Dr. Rod, Ruth finally calls upon him to take up the case. He comes and in saving Tweedie's life has the opportunity of learning that Ruth has changed her mind about her career, so that Tweedie's recovery is the prelude to two weddings
Locale: A Southern city; a Southern village.
Picture High Lights: Chiefly interiors unless ship and shipwreck be shown, and these are merely incidental in the story. The picture possibilities lie almost entirely in the depiction of the character of Tweedie.

"A Candle in the Wind"
By Mary Imlay Taylor

Character of Story: Dramatic love story.
Theme: Fame.
Characters: Arthur Faunce, artic explorer; Diane Herford, his fiancee; Judge Herford, her father; Dr. Gerry, the family physician; Overton, the lost explorer; Fanny Price.
The Plot: Overton, the great explorer, is reported lost. Arthur Faunce returns from the Antartic without him and is greeted as a hero. He is in love with Diane Herford, as Overton had been before him. Faunce receives the praise of the people of Mapleton, his home town, so uneasily that Dr. Gerry suspects he has something on his mind, and is certain that Faunce is taking chloral to induce sleep. Faunce admits this but does not tell what is preying upon him. Naturally enough, Faunce and Diane become engaged and are married. Faunce, meanwhile, is carrying in his breast the secret that he deserted Overton in a moment of extremity and left him to die alone lest both should perish. He is offered the command of a great expedition and accepts. Overton unexpectedly reappears and Faunce confesses to Diane, for he knows that Overton loves her, and in spite of his weakness in the hour of trial Faunce was very fond of Overton himself, the latter having been his model and hero from the beginning. Diane is horrified at Arthur's confession and leaves him. Fanny, who has long been in love with Faunce, upbraids Diane for leaving him when he needs her most. Overton declares his passion for Diane, but says that he will not make public Faunce's secret. Faunce, however, cannot stand the strain upon his conscience any longer, and sends for the newspaper reporters, to whom he makes clean breast of the whole story. Diane, hearing of this, realizes that a coward would not have done such a thing, and goes back to him. Faunce also resigns the command of the new expedition, stating his reasons for doing so, and recommending that the command be given to Overton. The men in charge of the expedition, however, insist upon retaining Faunce in command, and he sets off on his long journey, accompanied by Diane, who decides at the last moment that she will not leave him to face the dangers of the waste places alone. The character of Faunce in this story is interesting, and some speculation is indulged in by the various other characters in the story as to what constitutes real cowardice, the general opinion being that a brave man may sometimes yield to a momentary panic. There is much opportunity for emotional acting on both the part of the male lead and on the part of Diane.
Locale: A small town near New York.
Picture High Lights: Artic scenes could be used if desired but are not necessary. The drama is entirely emotional.

"The Ranchman"
By Charles Alden Seltzer

Character of Story: Western.
Theme: Love, politics.
Characters: Quinton Taylor, known as "Squint," founder of Dawes; Marion Harlan, an orphan; Elam Parsons, her uncle, a jackal; James J. Carrington, politician and grafter; Danforth, Carrington's lieutenant; Neil Norton, friend of Taylor's; Ben Mullarky, cowpuncher; Judge Littlefield; Martha, colored servant at Taylor's ranch.
The Plot: Returning from a business trip to the East, Quinton Taylor falls in with a party consisting of Marion Harlan, her uncle and James J. Carrington. Taylor overhears a conversation between Carrington and Parsons which convinces him that they have framed a city election in Dawes, his home town, with the idea of getting control of the town and looting it — the preliminary work being done by Danforth, a candidate for mayor. He also learns that Marion is the daughter of his old friend, Larry Harlan, who died while in Taylor's employ, and asked him to look up his daughter and rescue her from the clutch of designing relatives. Marion's attention is attracted to Taylor by his apparent discomfort in the "dude" clothes in which he boards the train, and which he presently discards for his Western apparel, in which he appears every inch a man. On the way to Dawes the train is held up, Taylor puts the robbers to flight and captures two of the train robbers. On their arrival at Dawes all are surprised to find that, through the activity of Niel Norton, Taylor has been elected Mayor over Danforth, Carrington's emissary. The fight for the possession of the town begins at once, and this soon extends to a fight for the girl. Carrington secures a ruling from the Governor to the effect that the election was illegal because Taylor's name was written instead of printed on the ballots. Taylor is forced out of office, but has the satisfaction of thrashing Carrington and Danforth in full sight of the community and forcing Judge Littlefield — one of Carrington's henchmen — to admit that the attack was begun by Carrington. Parsons, Marion's uncle, takes the girl to live on the edge of town. She has been induced to come to Dawes by the representations of Carrington that she may find her father there. From Taylor she learns that her father is dead. She also learns that Carrington means no good to the town. Carrington sends the sheriff to arrest Taylor for assault, but Taylor and his men beat off the sheriff's posse. Carrington then attempts to abduct Marion but she escapes. A second attempt is more successful. Taylor and his men rescue her and descend on Dawes to take vengeance. Parsons, who has been abused by Carrington, turns against him and rouses the crowd against him. When Taylor's men arrive in Dawes a mob joins them and they force the sheriff and Danforth to leave town after admitting their crookedness. Taylor overtakes Carrington as he is attempting to escape, and in the fight which follows Carrington is killed. Marion is found safe and sound by Taylor as he reaches Dawes.
Locale: A Western town.
Picture High Lights: There is much incidental action in this story which cannot be crowded in a short synopsis. It is typical Western material with the political element added, and with some humor to relieve the tension.

"Cursed"
By George Allan England

Character of Story: Melodrama.
Theme: Expiation.
Characters: Captain Alpheus Briggs, master of "The Silver Fleece"; William Scurlock, mate; Dr. Filhiol, surgeon; Juala Pahang, a Malay maid; Dengan Jouga, Juala's mother; Captain Fergus McLaughlin; Ezra Trefethen, Captain Brigg's man; Hal Briggs, his grandson; Laura Maynard, Hal's sweetheart.
The Plot: A period of fifty years elapses between the first part and the second part of this story. In the earlier part of the tale Captain Briggs is in charge of the clipper, "The Silver Fleece," smuggling opium and engaging in piracy in the Eastern seas. He is a hard-hitting, hard-drinking sailor man, with no respect for anything or anybody. He abuses his men, and by reason of his ferocity and abnormal strength is a terror to all who know him. At Batu Kawan he forcibly carries aboard his ship a Malay girl, Juala Pahang, and refuses to give her up despite the threats of the natives. Her mother, reputed to be a witch, puts a curse upon him, saying that he will live to suffer through one whom he loves better than himself. Briggs sets sail pursued by the natives and a lively battle results. Briggs fires upon them and at last throws the girl into the sea because she will not try to pursuade her people to give up the pursuit. Fifty years later he is found at Snug Harbor, his cottage on the New England coast, no longer a sailor by profession, but still loving the sea. The death of his son, Edward, and the consequent care of his motherless grandson, Hal, has strangely changed the old man, who has reformed and done all that lay in his power to atone for his former wickedness. Dr. Filhiol, now also an old man, comes to stay with him. Hal, on his way back from college, gets in a fight with Captain Fergus McLaughlin and beats him unmercifully. He arrives at home drunk and dismissed from college. He shocks Laura Maynard with his behavior and horrifies his grandfather, who sees in the Hal of today what he himself was fifty years before. Hal continues in his course, stealing money from his grandfather and conniving with old Ezra, his grandfather's servant, to fasten the blame on the old retainer. Pressed, he admits the theft and arranges to set to sea in his grandfather's boat. He is followed aboard by the crew of McLaughlin's ship, who seek revenge, and there is a battle royal, in which Hal is stabbed by a Malay kris — a weapon which his grandfather used to murder men half a century before. Hal is near death's door, but is finally brought back to life by the old doctor, and they find that his illness has burned away the wicked fever which has driven him on from one crime to another and that the curse has been lifted.

Good Fiction Suitable For Film Production

"The Man Who Discovered Himself"

By Willis Geo. Emerson

Character of Story: Drama.
Theme: Success.
Characters: Marsh Gordon, cobbler, later Governor of Arizona; Bessie Gordon, his daughter; Bernice Gordon, her elder sister; Miriam Gordon, his wife, selfish and ambitious; Burn Hopkins, husband of Bernice; Ned Collier, agent of Submarine Junction; Francois Lavigne, rancher; Michael O'Meara, banker; Reilly & Burke, cattlemen; Ledgerwood Collier, attorney.
The Plot: Marsh Gordon, coming to Venice-by-the Sea, California, from the country, secures a position as a shoe clerk. Shortly afterward he is married to a young girl who has social ambitions. She develops extravagant tastes and habits, and to add to his earnings as a clerk Marsh works nights as a cobbler. He finds that this pays him better than clerking, and soon spends all of his time at the cobbler's bench. His wife is shocked to learn that he is making his living at manual labor, but conceals it from her friends. Gradually his health suffers under the strain of constant indoor work and anxiety, and he develops consumption. By this time they have one grown daughter and one, Bessie, just budding into womanhood. Miriam, the wife, induces Marsh to move into an addition built in back of the kitchen under pretense that it is better for his cough. The truth is, she is ashamed to have him seen by her friends. Marsh accepts his banishment without complaint. Finally he is taken sick and loses his position, so that when he partially recovers he can find no work. His wife advises him to try the Nevada desert. He agrees and gives her $900 in dimes which he had saved throughout the years of toil. She is trying her hand at hand-decorated pottery and expects great things of this. Marsh goes into the desert and, getting off at a lonely station, falls in with a gang of hoboes, who rob him of his clothes and what little money he has. He is found exhausted by Ned Collier, station agent at Submarine Junction. Ned takes him to his cabin and nurses him back to strength. Every day in the dry air of the desert improves Marsh. He has cut his ties with home and now calls himself Jim Marshall. Ned Collier is sent to Los Angeles and Marsh or Marshall is made agent at Submarine. He now sends a monthly remittance to his wife, but anonymously, for he has been reported dead in the desert, owing to the discovery of the body of a hobo who stole his clothing and trinkets. Marsh takes advantage of the coming of an irrigation canal to sell his homestead at a good price. He then tries ranching with great success and finally, with a fortune of some hundreds of thousands, goes to Phœnix, where he enters partnership with Ned Collier's father, a prominent attorney. Ned Collier meanwhile has met and married Bessie, not knowing that she is Marsh's daughter. Marsh had bought all of her pottery quietly through a dealer in Los Angeles. Miriam poses as a successful artist and tries to forget her cobbler husband. Elected Governor, Marsh reveals himself to Bessie but declares that he and Miriam can never again be husband and wife.
Locale: Venice, California, and the Nevada Desert; Phœnix.
Picture High Lights: Much could be made of the ill treatment suffered by the sacrificing husband and his final triumph over illness and misfortune.

"C. O. D."

By Natalie Lincoln

Character of Story: Detective; mystery.
Theme: Diplomatic intrigue and revenge.
Characters: Dr. Leonard McLane; Lois Tremaine, a society girl; James Donaldson, her fiance; Stanton Forsyth, attorney; Enid Forsyth, his wife; Senor Juan Ribera, a South American diplomat; Colonel Tremaine, Lois' father; Captain Barry Messerene; Judge Sanford; Phyllis, his daughter; Detective Martin; Horace Tremaine, the Colonel's son.
The Plot: James Donaldson is found murdered in an orchestra chair at a Washington theatre on the eve of his marriage. His fiancee is seated beside him and her physician and former suitor directly in front of him. The police discover that Donaldson was strangled with a thin cord such as are used for bow strings. Dr. McLane, attending Lois Tremaine, who is prostrated by the shock, finds that she is suffering from a broken arm. Detective Martin of headquarters is called in on the case. It develops in the course of the investigation by Dr. McLane, who sets himself the task of clearing up the mystery, that Enid Forsyth had yielded to the persuasion of Senor Ribera of South America and obtained possession of a state document affecting South and Central American countries. This document has been stolen from her by Donaldson (who is afterward proved to be an international spy). Lois Tremaine has heard Donaldson threaten her father with a confession which Colonel Tremaine is supposed to have signed regarding some past misdeed, and she is in the act of extracting a batch of papers from the pocket of Donaldson's coat when he is murdered. As the cord is drawn about his neck he jerks backward suddenly and breaks her wrist. These papers are hidden in the arm of a chair in her apartment and afterward removed by some unknown person. A burglar attempts to force her to give them up but is frightened away. A C. O. D. label is found under the orchestra chair where Donaldson was murdered. Judge Sanford is found murdered in the library of his house in the company of Captain Barry Messerene, suitor for the hand of his daughter Phyllis. Messerene declares he is not guilty, but a revolver is found under his chair and a C. O. D. lable on the table. Phyllis tells Dr. McLane that the revolver shown in the photograph taken by the coroner was one belonging to her father. Detective Martin arrests Colonel Tremaine for the murder of Donaldson. At that moment a package is handed the Colonel with a C. O. D. label on it and the Colonel dies of heart disease before he can be taken to jail. Horace Tremaine of the diplomatic service is called home by his father's death and accuses Forsyth of the murder of his father. Forsyth then proves that Detective Martin is the guilty man. The initials C. O. D. stand for Charles O. Donaldson, a cousin of James, who was cheated by James Donaldson and afterward convicted of a crime on the testimony of Judge Sanford. Martin admits both crimes and confesses that he shot the Judge through a register in the floor of the library. The labels were in the nature of a warning to his enemies.
Locale: Washington, D. C.
Picture High Lights: The development of the story is clever and plausible; the action covers diplomatic receptions at the White House, gives the director an opportunity to stage some effective scenes and abounds in dramatic situations.

MORE KIND WORDS

The Fiction Mart Makes a Lasting Impression

Among the latest to congratulate Motion Picture News upon its new department, The Fiction Mart, is Bert Ennis, director of publicity of S-L Pictures.
He says:

"May I be permitted to drop you a line of congratulation on the new department you have established in the NEWS, the Fiction Mart.

"I believe that this will prove of invaluable assistance to all producers who contemplate purchasing books for picturization. I feel that it should meet with the approval of all who are concerned in this matter as an efficient method of saving time, trouble and money."

"The Heart of Arethusa"

By Frances Barton Fox

Character of Story: Humorous love story.
Theme: Innocence.
Characters: Arethusa Worthington; Eliza, her aunt; Asenath, another aunt; Letitia, another aunt; Ross Worthington, her father; Elinore Worthington, his wife; Timothy Jarvis, Arethusa's obvious fate; Gridley Bennet, the debutante's delight.
The Plot: This is a very simple but charming story of a young girl who is left motherless at birth and who is entrusted to the care of three maiden aunts by her artistic father, who sails for Europe and does not return until Arethusa is eighteen, when he comes back to America with a bride. Arethusa has been tyrannized over by Aunt Eliza from her earliest recollection— Eliza being a strong-minded person who has views on every subject in the world. Eliza does not approve of dances, or lownecked dresses, or card games, or any of the lighter forms of amusement. She is not actually unkind, but ose of those persons who "rule the roost." Arethusa's father is an easy-going, pleasure-loving, lovable chap with little sense of responsibility. When he suddenly sends word that he is on his way back to America and that he wishes Arethusa sent to him in the city, there is consternation in the old home at the farm. The aunts are in a flutter and Timothy Jarvis, neighbor, life-time playmate and recent suitor for the hand of Arethusa, is alarmed at the thought of the young men she may meet while away. Timothy has teased Arethusa all her life, and they quarrel happily a good part of the time, but at bottom Timothy has a strong and steady love for his little playmate — now just eighteen. Arethusa, tricked out in the finest clothes she has ever had — made in the style of the eighties — goes to the city, where she finds her father and his bride living in a mansion with servants, automobiles and all outward evidences of wealth. The step-mother, contrary to tradition, turns out to be a charming and beautiful woman of forty. Arethusa sees her first play, goes to her first party and has a wonderful time. At her first dance she meets the irresistible Mr. Gridley Bennet, adored of all debutantes, and decides that she is at last a victim of the love of which she has read in novels. Her naive ideas amuse him and her beauty pleases him. Arethusa, being entirely new to the social game, relies upon an etiquette book which she has brought with her, and finding that when attending a dinner a young woman should have selected a subject or topic of conversation, she chooses moths at random from the encyclopædia. Her amusing blunders endear her to the young men, though she suffers when they laugh at her. The idyll with Bennet continues until she gives a party and invites Timothy. Timothy at first refuses to come, but she sends him a telegram which brings him reluctantly to try his luck against the city chaps. Timothy discovers which way the wind blows with Arethusa and, angry at her obvious adoration of the handsome Bennet, rushes back to the country. Bennet now has the field to himself, but spoils it all by kissing Arethusa and then admitting that he did not mean it as a proposal. Why, Aunt Eliza said no gentleman would kiss a girl unless he meant to marry her! So Bennet is metamorphosed in an instant from a Sir Galahad to a Dangerous Man — one of those Wolves in Sheep's Clothing who prey on society, and Arethusa begs to go back to the farm, where she and Timothy avoid one another until she is caught in the branches of a fallen tree and rescued by Timothy, who repeats the offense of Bennet without being rebuked — only this time Arethusa knows that these kisses mean what this sort of story must have — a happy ending.
Locale: The country, a small city; somewhere in the South.
Picture High Lights: Arethusa's arrival in the city; Arethusa at her first ball; Arethusa in the storm.

The Studios Say

"The Woman in the Suitcase," in which Enid Bennett is being starred by Thomas H. Ince, is nearing completion. It is said to be one of the most unusual stories in which this little star has ever appeared.

The second release of the new Holly comedies will be released on the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation program about Oct. 15th. The comedy features Sid Smith, who is being directed by Fred P. Kerr. The Alkire Photoplay Corporation is producing the Holly comedies in Edendale, Calif.

Billie Burke's new Paramount-Artcraft picture "Wanted, A Husband," which is being directed by Lawrence Windom at one of the New York studios of Famous Players-Lasky, has reached an advanced stage of production.

Vitagraph will release two Anita Stewart features before the New Year. They are "The Combat," by Edward J. Montague, which was directed by Ralph Ince, and "The Suspect," by M. W. J. Dam.

Close-Up Holmes

IN these days when every motion picture alternates from "long shots" to "close-ups" so smoothly and so frequently that we are almost unconscious of the changes, most of us have forgotten that there was ever a time when the entire film was run off without a single more intimate glimpse of the players than could be obtained in full length position. What! Cut the characters in half and show only their faces? Ridiculous!

And then just about the time that Griffith decided to attempt this very peculiarity, a "close-up" that was unavoidable saved a job for Stuart Holmes. We were chatting in his dressing room, between scenes in "The Isle of Jewels," while he attempted to put the finishing touches on the white marble bust of his mother, that has evidently been occupying most of his spare time for many past hours. The dull, gray atmosphere outside seemed to reflect an uneventful, quiet feeling, and it was easy to turn the conversation into reminiscent trails, which often prove more interesting than any other. So it happened this time.

"I had just received notice that my services would no longer be needed," Mr. Holmes continued, referring to the expiration of his first film contract nearly twelve years ago, "and I went in to watch the last scenes in which I appeared run off. One of those scenes had been taken on the lawn of a fine, old estate, in the midst of some rather dense shrubbery. In fact, there were so many bushes in the way that it had been impossible to get the camera far enough away to take the regulation full length picture. Consequently, the first 'close-up' that any of us had ever seen, was flashed across the screen. A little later my director told me that my work had created such favorable comment in the home office that I might consider my notice withdrawn, and when the rest of the company heard the story, they gave me the nickname of 'Close-Up Holmes.' Of course some people said the background was out of focus, and thought of a lot of other objections, but the close-up remained popular."

"I had another streak of luck in which the camera helped me out," the sculptor recollected, toying with his chisel, "I was playing a Roman general, Valerius, I believe it was, and the camera happened to be timed too fast. I didn't know it, and of course, acted normally, so that when the film was shown, my motions seemed almost as slow as those they show now-a-days of various athletes in action. But the critics decided that this was quite in keeping with my part, very impressive and dignified and exactly what one's notions of a Roman general's behavior would lead one to expect."

"What was your very first part?" we asked.

"A coachman," Mr. Holmes answered promptly. The star of the Beck

Stuart Holmes, villain, in many great pictures, who plays the lead in "Love, Honor and ——"

Serial is, by the way, a fluent, direct speaker and never hesitates an instant for a choice of words or in order to recall past incidents. "The chief inducement offered me," he explained, "was that we would all have sandwiches and beer for lunch."

"But a good appearance was just as important in those days as it is now," he declared laughingly. "I went to the Powers Company for my first interview with a man who was slightly under the influence of something we don't get very much of any more, and they wouldn't pay any attention whatever to me. The next day I went back carrying my handsomest cane, wearing doeskin gloves, etc., and they told me to go on the set at once."

Stuart Holmes is best known as a "heavy," but even villainy becomes monotonous at times, so, by way of a change, he is now playing the lead in "The Isle of Jewels." He insists, nevertheless, that his role is not very different, except for the fact that he has the sympathy of the audience with him rather than against him. It was impossible to induce him to talk about himself. He looks upon the brilliant portrayals that have brought him just fame in the past as a matter of course, and sees absolutely no use in referring to them again. Consequently we can only point out that very few players are as familiar with the development of the motion picture as this particular one, and if you happen to want further information about the "flickers" as they were 12 years ago, we strongly advise your questioning Mr. Holmes.—Marguerite Jones.

Doings At Vitagraph Plant

PRODUCTION activities at the Hollywood Vitagraph studios were decreased this week by the departure of two units. Earle Williams left for the Brooklyn studios where he will first film "The Fortune Hunter," and later, "Captain Swift." It is planned he will then return to the western studios.

David Smith who has directed the Bessie Love Company, has been granted a vacation, which he is now taking, and upon his return will film a number of O. Henry stories.

William Duncan plans to have the "Smashing Barriers" serial completed ahead of schedule, he now having but four episodes to film. These are the most difficult episodes to make, and his sucess in making a new record will depend entirely upon climatic conditions.

Noel Smith, directing the making of Jimmy Aubrey comedies, has a modiste, hair-dressing and manicuring shop, as well as gymnasium sets for the fanciful comedy now in production, which has not been named.

Virginia Nightingale has been selected as Vita's prize vamp for the "Simple Harry" series of comedies now being made by Harry Mann with Margaret Rooker.

The first four episodes of "The Secret Service" serial made by Director William J. Bowman, and starring Antonio Moreno, were shipped to the eastern offices of the Vitagraph Company this week.

The Montgomery and Rock Company have had created no end of small town settings for the rural comedy on which they are now working.

"The Westerners" Given Strong Publicity in Cleveland

Benjamin B. Hampton's first Great Autors production, "The Westerners," by Stewart Edward White, last week received a very large volume of newspaper paid advertising exploitation and promotion in Cleveland, it is said. Charles H. Miles used three-quarter page advertisements at the beginning of his week's presentation of this big picture in all four newspapers of the city; two Sunday papers, the News-Leader and Plain Dealer; an dtwo afternoon papers, the Press and News. The dominant note of this advertising to the public was addressed to the readers of the famous Stewart Edward White novel, as well as to the readers of all other White novels and magazine serials.

Edward S. Moffat Made Manager of Universal's Advertising

The appointment of Edward S. Maffat as the advertising manager of Universal was announced this week by Carl Laemmle, Universal's president. He succeeds Nat. G. Rothstein, who has resigned.

Mr. Moffat has been in the advertising business more than 10 years. He gained invaluable experience with the agencies of Street and Finney, Calkins and Holden, and with Frank Seaman. Mr. Moffat is not only an ad writer and manager but is a writer of novels, among them being "The Desert and Mrs. Ajax," "Go Forth and Find," and "Hearts Steadfast." He has been in charge of all the Jewel advertising for Universal for the past two years.

Hill Bernstine Joins Bee Hive

R. C. Cropper, President and General Manager of the Bee Hive Film Exchanges, has added Hill Bernstine to his growing staff. Mr. Bernstine was with the Chicago staff of the United, and very well known in the film fraternity. For the time being Mr. Bernstine will work under jurisdiction of the Chicago Office.

Fox Plans Wide Exploitation

Magazines in all Parts of Nation to be Involved in Ad Campaign for 1919–1920 Schedule

THE Fox Film Corporation announces that it is planning, and has already set in motion in some fields, an unusually vigorous and extensive advertising campaign in support of the Fox screen schedule for the season of 1919–1920. The Fox Corporation, according to its report, began this campaign in September with full-page ads of a distinctive type. The campaign being worked out now contemplates the appearance of full-page advertisements in twenty-seven magazines of the country; and in some cases it is planned that the ads will cover two pages. These advertisements, it is said will extend over a period of nine consecutive months, and will embrace every class of magazine and periodical possessing suitable circulation.

Thus far the publications carrying the William Fox ads include the Saturday Evening Post, Collier's, the Ladies' Home Journal, the Woman's Home Companion, The Pictorial Review, the Delineator, the American Magazine, the Red Book, People's, Picture Play, Photo Play, Magazine, Motion Picture, Photoplay Journal, Photoplay World, Ainslee's, Detective, the Popular, Top Notch, Smith's, Adventure, All Story, Short Stories, the Argosy, Register, the Home Sector, Vogue and Vanity Fair.

The campaign, it is asserted, has a wider purpose than merely the exploitation of the products of the Fox Studios; for, according to the statements issued, distinct efforts are being made to tie up the campaign with the box-offices of the Fox exhibitors, so that the exploitation will redound to the immediate benefit of the exhibitor showing the Fox productions. As an instance of this plan the Fox concern points out that the above magazines are now exploiting Fox films and the theatres where they are shown.

In addition to this plan, others are reported to be under consideration in the executive offices of the corporation, and the entire organization is represented as bending every effort toward the perfection of every picture released.

"The Blue Bonnet" Still Scores

Reports From Pittsburg Maintain Feature Attracts Big Crowds; Millinery Tie-Up Aids

ACCORDING to reports, "The Blue Bonnet," the National Film Corporation of America production, starring Billie Rhodes, proved a big attraction at all of Rowland and Clark's Pittsburgh and suburban houses last week after a powerful three-day advance exploitation drive aimed to attract big crowds to all theatres in the successful circuit following the first-run engagement at the Regent, where the Billie Rhodes pictures played to three days' capacity business.

The Rowland and Clark management, besides its regular newspaper and billboard advertising appropriation, went to additional expense in the distribution of 2,000 window cards, on which the Hodkinson 24-sheet on "The Blue Bonnet" was reproduced. During the run at the Regent the production won added prominence through window displays in six downtown millinery shops. These were duplicated later in the week by the smaller shops in Pittsburgh residential districts when "The Blue Bonnet" was the attraction at the Arsenal, the Strand, the Belmar and the Plaza.

The Goodwin Theatre, Newark, N. J., gave "The Blue Bonnet" a seven-day presentation last week that pleased its regular clientele and hundreds of new patrons, it is said, who had been attracted by the special poster advertising campaign the management waged on the Billie Rhodes production.

Inspired by her two previous successes, Katherine MacDonald, generally termed the most beautiful woman in motion pictures, is making her third production to be distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The picture is "The Turning Point."

In and Out West Coast Studios

Goldwyn Studio Notes

THE Goldwyn producing organization has a number of new faces, among them being Thomas Mills who has just arrived from New York to direct Tom Moore. After reaching the studio it was found the first subject Mr. Mills would direct is "Duds" a serial story which recently appeared in the Saturday Evening Post, and inasmuch as Mr. Moore was in New York and many of the scenes for this required a New York atmosphere, it has been decided that Mills shall return east immediately and film the exteriors.

A number of players engaged by the New York office of the Goldwyn Company have arrived and are at the coast studio, and have been cast in productions during the past week.

William Parke, who is to make the Eminent Author's production, "The Tower of Ivory" from the story by Gertrude Atherton, has been assigned a cast which includes Barbara Castleton, John Bowers, Sidney Ainsworth, Doris Pawn, Eleanor Hancock, Lawson Butt, Edith Chapman and Carrie Clark Warde.

Another production put in operation this week is the adaptation from the Rex Beach book and play entitled, "Going Some." Harry Beaumont will direct the all-star for this, which includes Ethel Gray Terry and Lillian Hall, who reached the studios this week from New York, Helen Ferguson, Lillian Langdon, Cullen Landis, Willard Lewis, Walter Hires, M. P. Flynn and Forrest Seabury. Director Frank Lloyd is completing the filming of "The Silver Horde" and Victor Schertzinger is making the last scenes for the Mabel Normand picture.

Universal Activities

UNIVERSAL City is this week graced by the presence of the General Manager, Tarkington Baker, who arrived a few days ago to spend a week with Production Manager, Harry Klein, in going over plans for the future of the big producing plant.

As the result of Mr. Baker's visit, definite information was given out concerning the change of policy of the Universal with respect to discontinuing production during the rainy season months in California. This policy, which has been followed for the past two years, will not be adhered to during the months of January, February and March, as in previous years, but instead, it is the plan of the Universal to continue production on the gigantic scale now effective. There will be no decrease in the producing staff, but on the contrary, it is planned that several additional companies shall be added, and at the present time two stars have been signed who will shortly begin work at Universal City.

It also became known that since the arrival of Harry Klein, and his taking charge of the production manager's work, he has made many plans for the improvement of Universal films. All of these are being gone over by Mr. Klein and Mr. Baker, and it is expected that the number of changes may shortly be announced.

Will T. Gentz, who has been identified with a number of theatrical enterprises in New York, Chicago and other eastern cities, has been employed as production editor of Universal films, and arrived at Universal City this week to begin his work.

Director Lynn Reynolds and Harry Carey Company filming "Overland Red," are still on the desert for exterior scenes.

Wallace MacDonald has been engaged for the lead of "Rouge and Riches," starring Mary MacLaren, and the other players are Alberta Lee, Fritzi Ridgeway, Lloyd Whitlock, Dorothy Abrill and Helen Sullivan.

The first story to be filmed by Wm. Christy Cabanne for Universal, will be "Triflers," which will have Edith Roberts, David Butler and Forrest Stanley as leads, with an unusual cast which will contain Kathleen Kirkham, Frederick Vroom, Lillian Langdon and Emmett King.

Jack Ford is at San Francisco with the Corbett Company making the initial scenes for "The Prince of Avenue A" serial. The cast for this is announced to include Harry Northrup, Mary Warren, Cora Drew, George Fisher, Richard Cummings and others.

What Metro Is Doing

WHEN president Richard A. Rowland of Metro Pictures Corporation arrives in Los Angeles within the next few days, he will find many changes have been made since his visit to the coast in June. It is expected that president Rowland will remain on the west coast for two or three weeks and the principal reason for his trip is to confer with director-general Karger with reference to forth-coming Metro and Screen Classics productions.

Clifford P. Butler, one of the oldest employees of the Metro Pictures Corporation, was this week appointed manager of the west coast studios and will have the supervision of the mechanical, technical and clerical departments of the studio where Nazimova and Screen Classics productions are made. Joseph Strauss has been appointed Butler's assistant. Another appointment announced this week was that of David H. Thompson as casting manager.

The Metro technical staff is more than busy with the construction of a number of big settings for forth-coming productions; one is a Japanese home, another, an artist's studio, while a Scotch castle, a boiler room of a yacht and the mammoth library of an attorney are needed for coming scenes. Two complete villages were recently constructed in the foothills for the Nazimova subject now being filmed. John Ince is still at Laguna Beach where the sea coast village scenes for "Should a Woman Tell" are being made with Alice Lake, Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier in the leading roles and fifty extra people.

The other Metro and Screen Classics Companies absent from the studio this week are Bert Lytell who is working in the streets of Los Angeles in "The Right of Way," Viola Dana, directed by Henry Otto who is making "The Willowtree" scenes near Silver Lake, and director Ray Smallwood, who, with a company of all-star players is at Beverly Hills in "The Best of Luck" scenes.

Bert Lytell, after the completion of "The Right of Way" will work in "A Message from Mars," which will be an adaptation from Richard Ganthony's fairy tale play, recently purchased by Richard Rowland. Lytell will appear in the role of Horace Parker, astronomer who is styled "the most selfish man in the world."

Jesse D. Hampton Notes

ONE holiday present for the Jesse D. Hampton studio players will be new quarters amid most desirable surroundings, for it is now planned that the new Hampton studios now being erected on a 15-acre plot of ground at the corner of Santa Monica Boulevard and La Brea Avenue at the west end of Hollywood, will be ready for occupancy by December first.

The site selected by Mr. Hampton is a most desirable one and consists of a level tract upon which the necessary stages, buildings and exterior sets will be built. Mr. Hampton purchased ten acres of this valuable ground, and five additional acres are under lease for the next five years. The buildings now being erected include one for the administration office, one for carpenter shops, others for property and wardrobe departments and three mammoth enclosed stages. The floor space for these will be 120 x 120 feet with extremely high walls which give a clear space to the cross beams thirty-two feet above the stage floor.

The Hampton Company filming "The Deadlier Sex," starring Blanche Sweet, is at work in the snow country near Truckee, California, under the direction of Robert Thornby, but is expected home within the next week.

Henry King is to commence work in the filming of "The House of a Thousand Candles" by Meredith Nicholson within the next week. The continuity for this adaptation was written by Eugene B. Lewis and H. B. Warner will be starred.

The third Hampton Company is not working because of the absence of William Desmond who was called east because of the serious illness of his mother. As soon as Mr. Desmond can return to the studios, filming of the very well-known play "The Parish Priest" by Dan Hart will be put into production.

Charles Ray, whose contract with Thomas H. Ince terminates in January, and who has a contract to produce for the First National, has leased the Willis and Inglis studio on Fountain Avenue, Hollywood, now in use by Jesse D. Hampton.

Christie Advancement

A LANDMARK of the west coast film colony disappeared this week when dressing room row at the Christie Film Company studio was torn down that the grounds could be used to a greater advantage by the erection of larger and more spacious quarters. The buildings raised were the first built by any film company in Hollywood, and were erected under the supervision of Al E. Christie, who came west and selected the site of the present Christie studio, for the studio of the Centeur Company. The first pictures made here were taken on the shady side of a barn, the eves of the barn serving to hold one end of the diffusing system made up of a number of bed sheets sewed together. This company, pioneers of the west coast filmdom, arrived in Los Angeles on Thanksgiving Day, 1911.

The expansion work, commenced at the Christie studio several weeks ago, has progressed most satisfactorily, but it will require several weeks for the completion of all improvements planned. The building being erected now will consist of two floors, and will serve as dressing rooms, the quarters of the scenario department, publicity bureau and still photographing department. As soon as this work is completed, the present administration office will be moved a short distance from the sidewalk line on Sunset Boulevard, and a new two-story concrete fire-proof building will be erected around the present offices. By this manner of construction, the improvements will not effect the working conditions to any material extent, and will make possible continuing production of the five companies under the supervision of Al E. Christie, without a break.

The most important producing improvements of the studio is that of the enlarging of the stage space. The open air stage is now the full length of the Christie grounds, extending from Gower to El Centro. The enclosed stages have been increased in size, and additional lighting facilities have been added to the electrical department.

Here and There

WINFIELD R. SHEEHAN departed for New York after three weeks at the west coast William Fox studios, where he supervised the making of plans for a number of innovations and a material increase in production activities. Arthur James, director of advertising and publicity, who came to the coast with Mr. Sheehan, preceded him East, leaving Sunday after a most beneficial visit to the producing plant. Sam Dembro, representative of the New York office, met Mr. Sheehan in Los Angeles, and after going over matters pertaining to the coming Fox entertainments, accompanied Mr. Sheehan to the Northwest and Canadian Northwest where together they inaugurated a campaign for more popularity for Fox pictures in the British possession.

Josie Sedgwick, who has been featured in a number of west coast subjects and played leading woman roles for many others, has been engaged by the William Fox Company, and will play leads in coming productions.

Jesse L. Lasky arrived on the coast during the past week for a stay of several weeks during which time he will give his entire attention to producing matters After a very strenuous few months in New York he sought a short vacation upon his arrival in Hollywood and at the termination of this will be extremely busy at the studio.

C. B. De Mille is making his final scenes for "Why Change Your Wife" and upon the completion of these will leave for a trip East. On this trip he is to be accompanied by his producing manager Howard Higgin, director of photograph, Alvin Wyckoff, costumers Claire West and Mitchell Leison, and it is probable that Gloria Swanson and Tom Meighan will go East at the same time in order to be present at the opening of Mr. De Mille's most recently made subject, "Male and Female," in which they appear in the leading roles. Mr. De Mille plans to be absent from the studio for several weeks.

Promise was made at the Chaplin studio that the fourth First National subject's negative would be ready for shipment to the eastern laboratories within three weeks. This film has considerable water stuff and the scenes for it are being made this week on beaches near Los Angeles. Mr. Chaplin made the statement to his producing organization that he is going to make this the best picture in which he has appeared. He basing his statement on the fact that he has a very excellent story with many "gags" that are entirely new.

Expect "Miracle Man" to Score in Southern California Too

It is claimed that the distribution of the Paramount-Artcraft special release, "The Miracle Man," will in all probability start a new era for the Southern California territory.

The remarkable business on this picture is said to be largely due to plans made and carried out by Harry Ballance, local Famous Players-Lasky exchange manager. After seeing the picture for the first time, Ballance decided it could be made a one dollar top attraction for the territory, and instructed all contracts be made on this basis. The results were advantageous to the exchange and the exhibitors as well. The picture ran five weeks continuously at the Kinema Theatre, Los Angeles, and every town in which it has been booked, these prices have been maintained. Five prints are needed in the Southern California territory, and they are booked solidly until the first of December, it is reported.

Hallmark Exchange Force Shift

S. T. Stevens is Appointed Manager in the Field; Number of Other Men Are Added to Force

WITH the acquisition of the Exhibitors' Mutual Distributing Corporation's exchanges throughout the United States, Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, has made some important changes in the personnel of the managerial forces of the twenty-six exchange centres with two important additions. W. F. Rodgers, general sales manager, Hallmark Pictures Corporation, under whose supervision, the sales department comes, has appointed S. T. Stevens, long identified with Exhibitors Mutual in the capacity of general supervisor, as field manager of Hallmark exchanges. Mr. Stevens left New York last week on an extended trip which will carry him to every exchange centre in the United States. He expects to be gone several months. M. J. Mintz, formerly with Exhibitors' Mutual and the Unity Corporation of Chicago, left at the same time, in a similar capacity for a trip through the Middle West, his mission being the same as that of Mr. Stevens — to make a thorough investigation of the exchanges and supervise the business of the sales forces.

Mr. Rodgers announces as other additions to Hallmark's exchanges and sales forces, Thedore Holland, recently returned from oversea duty and for a time associated with the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, as branch manager of the newly acquired Indianapolis office of Hallmark; J. E. Poland, as manager of the newly acquired Oklahoma City office; F. L. De Lorenzo, manager of the Milwaukee office; R. A. Morrow, manager of the Dallas office and Nat A. Royster, manager of the Atlanta office. With these additions and newly-created offices, in its sales forces, Mr. Rodgers contends that Hallmark Pictures Corporation has a selling and managerial force that can compete with that of any other distributing organization in the field.

In order to get the fullest co-operation from its sales forces, Hallmark Pictures has put into active operation a profit-sharing plan, whereby each member of its sales forces, regardless of his or her position, is to share in the profits of the exchange he or she represents. The plan goes into effect as of September 1st, giving everyone concerned the opportunity to benefit in their efforts for two months back. In the creation of this plan Mr. Rodgers, believes he has offered an incentive that will assure the exhibitors dealing with Hallmark the closest attention and the best that is possible to offer in service.

Bigger Goldwyn Scenario Dep't.

Under Direction of Eugene Mullin Expansion on Forward Lines is to be Inaugurated

UNDER the direction of Eugene Mullin, scenario writer and editor who has come East to head Goldwyn's scenario department in New York, the scope of this branch of Goldwyn's eastern organization will be broadened.

When interviewed on his arrival in the city, last week, Mr. Mullin referred to plans for the enlargement of the eastern force to keep pace with Goldwyn's increased production. Mr. Mullin said that the Culver City scenario department, conducted by J. G. Hawks, had turned out a tremendous volume of work during the past six months, but that the building up of a greater organization in the East had become imperative, especially in view of the productions to be made at the studios which Goldwyn is going to erect in or near, New York.

Geraldine Farrar is star in "Flame of the Desert," a Goldwyn release

Although still in his twenties, Mr. Mullin is classed among the veteran scenario writers who broke into the game in the day of the single reel.

For one thing, Mr. Mullin expressed himself as being convinced that the intelligent and critical public of today would not accept the trite, artificial, unlifelike type of romance that in five-reel form is merely a padded elaboration of the old one and two reelers that went under the head of "movies."

A plot and a continuity in order to pass muster with the Goldwyn scenario department must above all be consistent, even if some of the treasured traditions of producers, such as the happy ending, are sacrificed. Mr. Mullin did not mean that a cheerful story is not more likely to be popular than a sombre tragedy, rather that it is absurd to unfold an essentially tragic study of character or social conditions and then tag on an illogically happing ending.

If a story has enough strength and human appeal to justify its presentation, Mr. Mullin believes that an audience prefers seeing it carried through to a natural conclusion.

G. Kleine Buys "Deliverance"

Will Exploit "Helen Keller" Story Throughout U. S. and Canada; Had Long New York Run

ACCORDING to a report recently received, George Kleine has acquired the world rights to the Helen Keller film of "Deliverance," which was produced in New York City at the Lyric Theatre on August 18th and pronounced by the New York critics without a dissenting voice as the most remarkable achievement of the age.

Helen Keller, though born deaf, dumb and blind has conquered all obstacles in the world of education and letters and has passed through the highest colleges and universities of America with great honors. She has recovered her speech and though deaf and blind has written many interesting books. She has added another laurel to her honors by appearing successfully in a motion picture. "Deliverance" is the story of her life and her message to the world. That it will add hugely to her fortune is beyond question, for wherever the voice of man is heard the fame of this courageous and high-minded deaf and blind girl is known.

George Kleine has been identified with some of the most dignified and pretentious productions of the cinema art. It was George Kleine who brought "Quo Vadis" to America, the first big feature production ever presented, it is claimed, upon its individual merits and which, is still regarded by some as one of the great classics of the screen. Mr. Kleine will exploit the "Helen Keller" story throughout the United States and Canada with special companies and production, disposing of the foreign rights to interested parties.

Famous Director Films on Way

Keanan Buel Finishes First of the Series for Hallmark and Will Start on Second Shortly

KEANAN BUEL, directing for Hallmark Pictures Corporation, completed, this week, the first production for the Famous Directors' Series at the Fifty-fourth street studio. Following the cutting and editing of his production, Director Buel will commence on his second production for the Famous Directors' Series, the title to which is not yet announced.

The release title has not been chosen. It was written by J. L. Burke and adapted and scenarioized by John Glavey of the Hallmark scenario department. Anna Lehr, whose latest work is seen in Dallas Fitzgerald's production, "The Open Door," has the principal role. Ralph Kellard, Dorothy Walters, John Charles, Frank J. Murdock and William Carr are seen in the principal supporting roles.

Miss Lehr has the role of Margaret Fallon, whose father has met with financial ruin. She meets an unscrupulous society youth and through his machinations she is deceived into marrying a man whom she does not know but who, through a strange turn of events, proves to the man she loves.

Director Buel announces that he will have his first production for Hallmark cut and edited within two weeks. It will be the November release of Hallmark on the Famous Directors' Series.

T. A. Liebler Acting Publicity Manager for United

Pending the selection of a successor to Horace C. Judge, advertising and publicity manager of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., who has left that organization to join the Universal staff, the work of the department will be conducted by Theodore A. Liebler, Jr., United scenario and film editor.

Six Lew Cody Specials Are Bought by Robertson-Cole

The determination of Robertson-Cole to take a leading place among producers and distributors who are committed to the policy of the best in motion pictures is emphasized by the announcement of the purchase of the six Lew Cody specials being made by the L. J. Gasnier Company, and of the purchase of the big Tourneur production "The Broken Butterfly."

"The Beloved Cheater," the first of the Lew Cody pictures is said to be one of the finest comedy dramas ever put on the market. No expense was spared to make the picture supreme in the quality of the sets and technical details and a strong cast was chosen to work with Mr. Cody. Eileen Percy appears in it and several society leaders volunteered to show in some of the scenes of social events.

"The Broken Butterfly" is an intensely dramatic tale in which is interwoven great moments of pathos and sacrifice. In the cast are Pauline Starke as the heroine Marcene and Mary Alden as the revengeful governess.

Paramount-Artcraft Pictures Winning in Australasia

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that the Paramount-Artcraft pictures have made marked gains in popularity during the last two years throughout Australasia. Two years ago, according to a Sydney newspaper, Paramount transacted 8 per cent of the film business of Australasia. To-day, according to the same source, the percentage has been increased to more than 60 per cent, and advices reported to have been received from Australia indicate that there is no intention of a letup in the Paramount-Artcraft drive until an even higher percentage is reached.

The influenza epidemic is now over, and the film industry in Australia is said to be enjoying the greatest prosperity in its history, according to advices received from Alec Lorimore, managing director of Feature Films, Ltd., the distributors in Australasia of Paramount-Artcraft pictures. New theatres are being built, old theatres are being improved.

Fox News Correspondent Goes to Palestine to "Shoot" Scenes

Taking advantage of the British conquest of the Holy Land, including capture of Jerusalem by General Allenby, Viviane Whittall Adams is on her way across the Atlantic, her destination being Turkey, Armenia and Syria. Mrs. Adams, who is the wife of Major John Quincy Adams of the United States Marine Corps, is a writer and photographer of note, under the name of Viviane Whittall. On her travels, she will obtain scenes for Fox News, as she has arranged with Fox News to act as its camera correspondent with a roving commission. According to reports she will also assist the Commission for Relief in Armenia, her knowledge of the Turkish country and the language being of great value in that connection.

Her plan in the Holy Land is to follow the route that the British army took up through Mesopotamia—a long, uncomfortable journey, but one that offers a tremendous amount of interest. The Holy Land, she says, she will cover from Dan even into Beersheba.

Male Lead for Alice Joyce for Fourth Time

Percy Marmont, Vitagraph leading man, who has already supported Alice Joyce in "The Winchester Woman," and "The Vengeance of Durand," and who has also played opposite Corinne Griffith in "The Climbers," has just completed his scenes with Miss Joyce in "Pride." This forthcoming production was written expressly for the star by William B. Courtney and was directed by George Terwilliger.

Next week Marmont commences work on his fifth Vitagraph picture. This will be his fourth consecutive performance opposite Alice Joyce—a record for this star's leading men. The vehicle selected is an adaptation of "The Sporting Duchess."

First Gayety Comics Announced

Following the release of "Dropped Into Scandal," the first of the new series of Gayety Comedies, featuring George Ovey, which was announced last week, many humorous attractions are being planned, it is said, which will be presented on a weekly basis by leading independent exchanges. The comedies are one reel each in length and are described as "polite slapstick,"—in other words, comedies of situations and "gags," without the rougher forms of slapstick "humor."

Ovey, with Lillian Biron and the Gayety Girls, is featured in both of the first two releases, "Dropped Into Scandal" and "Are Flirts Foolish?"

Distribution of "The Confession"

Due to the conflicting reports regarding the distribution of "The Confession," it is announced that George Davis is now distributing this picture independently, since he severed his connection with Sol Lesser's Midwest "Hearts of the World" Company.

Canyon Westerns Will Prove Up

Jack Weinberg, President of Company, Confident Farnum two Reelers will be a Hit

JACK WEINBERG, President of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, who are starring Franklyn Farnum in two reel western features, said last week:

"I am firmly convinced that the two reel western picture classics produced by our company will fill a long-felt want, as the public is eager at all times, to see true stories of the west, if they are produced in real western atmosphere and portrayed by a competent cast of players.

"No one can dispute the fact that stories of the west, with its red blooded men and courageous women, offer more opportunities for real amusement than stories of another kind; our most famous screen stars having only achieved fame through their portrayal of western life, and the present up-to-date exhibitor is anxious to book western pictures, providing they come up to the present day standards.

"The Canyon Pictures Corporation, fully realizing this, have first secured stories from such eminent authors as B. M. Bowers, Bertram Sinclair, Frederick Chapin, and William E. Wing; then engaged the sterling actor, Franklyn Farnum, who through his past professional experience, personal charm and popularity, is the ideal type to portray the stories of the above gifted writers.

"To further insure the success of these short features, have engaged Seligs studio at Los Angeles, Cal., so as to have real western locations and atmosphere. The supporting company is composed of real star material, among whom are Lola Maxam, Vester Pegg, Minnie-Ha-Ha, George Pankey, and Bud Osborne, and under the competent direction of Leon de La Mothe, the independent exchangeman is assured of an ideal production that will add prestige to his exchange and will meet with the approval of the exhibitor and the exhibitor's patrons.

"Then to properly present these little classics, the Canyon Pictures Corporation have engaged several well known artists, who are making special designs for art titles and Etographs, as it is the aim of our company to spare no expense from any angle, from the beginning of the production up to the final proper exploitation.

"Of course, we expect some of the skeptical to say, 'Show me.' Well, we are prepared to show. We have the first four releases now ready, and believe me, they hold you in breathless suspense, have heart interest stories, and the spirit of the west fairly breathes through them. The State Right Exchange who is fortunate enough to secure a franchise on these features for his territory, will surely reap big profits.

"In conclusion, I wish to extend my heartiest thanks in behalf of the Canyon Pictures Corporation, to Franklyn Farnum, the director, Leon de La Mothe, the entire supporting company and entire staff of Seligs Studio for their co-operation in making these short western features of the class and calibre that are bound to give box office results and also strengthen the position of the Independent State Right Exchanges."

Metro Productions are Scoring

Exhibitors Give Further Evidence of Popularity of Films Under the New Policy

REPORTS reaching the home offices of Metro Pictures Corporation that Viola Dana's latest release, "Please Get Married," is cleaning up are coupled with the congratulations of enthusiastic exhibitors that the new policy of "fewer and better" pictures has caught hold and is spreading with the rush of a prairie fire. Taken in conjunction with a rising flood of booking orders, these letters and telegrams indicate to the company officials that the recently inaugurated program is gaining more and more momentum over its first big rush.

The following telegram was received by C. E. Almy, branch manager for Metro at Cleveland from H. C. Horator, managing director of the Alhambra and Pantheon theatres in Toledo:

"Manager Metro Pictures Corporation, Sincere Building, Cleveland, O. You certainly have my endorsement for fewer and better pictures. 'Please Get Married' and 'Fair and Warmer,' two of the first four under your new plan, will be shown at the Pantheon, our new theatre, second and third weeks. 'Lombardi, Ltd' proved to be the biggest box office attraction of the year, excepting Nazimova, who always cleans up. Too bad you could not arrange as per my suggestion to Fred Nugent to open the Pantheon November 15th with a Metro Picture. H. C. Horator."

This telegram was added proof of the way exhibitors have been booking the "fewer and better" pictures solid for week runs, as urged by the Metro company in the cause of better pictures and the interests of exhibitors in building up better business and a steady clientele.

Earl Hurd Made Supervisor of Lasky Educational Dep't.

Earl Hurd, whose reputation as a newspaper cartoonist and comic artist and as one of the originators of the animated cartoon in motion pictures is of long standing, has been appointed supervisor of animated cartoons for the Educational Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. In his new post Mr. Hurd, who arrived in New York this week to assume his new duties, will have under his direction a staff of twenty artists who will prepare animated cartoons and animated diagrams in connection with films produced by the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky.

Capitol's Decorations Attract

A. Lincoln Cooper, Head of Famed Firm of Art Decorations Does Wonders in New Theatre

WHEN Managing Director Edward Bowes of the new Capitol Theatre sought for the most reliable and artistic concern to furnish the decorations for the "largest theatre in the world," it was decided that Messrs Cooper, Sampietro & Gentiluomo be given the contract. Messmore Kendall, president of the Moredall Realty Company, owner and operator of the Capitol, chose this firm of well-known decorators, because it was imperative that an institution like this wonderful playhouse, resplendent in its luxuriant surroundings and palatial appointments appointments should have decorations in keeping with the magnitude and grandeur of the house.

One determining fact was that A. Lincoln Cooper, representative head of this concern and an artistic decorator of no small distinction, was to bring his talent into this work. The management may proudly acknowledge Mr. Cooper's efforts. He has brought the beauteous and soul-inspiring art of Fontainebleau and Versailles to embellish the already gorgeous Empire architecture of Broadway's "Capitol." Students and lovers of art are enjoying a treat in these wonderful decorations; a maze of color; beginning with the imposing entrance, the striking lobby with its majestic murals and shimmering chandeliers of rock crystal; the grand marble staircase leading to the huge carpeted promenade; the vast auditorium with its vistas of Roman columns—a blaze of ivory and gold, blended soothingly into one harmonious whole.

A. Lincoln Cooper is the artist who won the $16,000 prize in the government competition some time ago with the seven best decorators in the country. Cooper, who evinced a marked talent for drawing when quite a boy, studied under such famous men in the world of art, as Frank W. Benson and Edmund C. Tarbell. He won the Sears prize at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston, besides many other scholarships. Abroad, he studied under the direction of John Paul Laurens, Bougereau and Jose Garnelo, court painter for the king of Spain. Among his best known works are the murals in the San Francisco Custom House and the Federal Court and Post Office building at Columbus, O.

Arrow Film Issues "The Chamber Mystery," Five-Reel Feature

The Arrow Film Corporation is offering a new mystery picture in five reels. The title is "The Chamber Mystery," written and directed by Abraham Schomer and produced by Schomer & Ross. Claire Whitney and Earl Metcalf are the stars. "The Chamber Mystery" has already been sold for a number of territories and an advertising campaign will start at once in the trade papers.

The Release Date of "A Girl In Bohemia" is Changed by Fox

Owing to a combination of circumstances surrounding the completion of "The Web of Chance," with Peggy Hyland as the star, which was listed for release early in November, the announcement is made from the offices of the Fox Film Corporation that the schedules of releases for that month has been changed.

"A Girl In Bohemia," a novel tale of life among the long-haired men and short-haired women of New York's so-called artistic centre, by the well-known author, H. B. Daniel, as a stage play, is now slated for release in November, "The Web of Chance" being put back to mid-December.

Besides Miss Hyland, the other members of the cast in this picture include L. C. Shumway, Melbourne McDowell, Betty Schade, Edward Cecil, Winter Hall and Josef Swickard.

With the change in the release dates of these two pictures, the exchange branches of Fox Film Corporation have reported unusual activity in booking the new picture.

Director Golden and Company Go South to Take Exteriors

Director Joseph A. Golden of the new Allgood Pictures Corporation serial, starring Charles Hutchison, has completed his arrangements for taking his company to Florida next week or the week following, in order to begin "shooting" exteriors for the serial's second episode. The company are now completing the interiors for the first and second episodes at the Crystal Studios, Claremont Parkway, in the Bronx.

Society of Motion Picture Engineers Holds Convention in Pittsburgh

THE Fourth Annual Convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was held at the William Penn Hotel in Pittsburgh on October 13, 14 and 15. More interest was taken in the three days' session than at any other time in the history of the society. Most of the time was taken up with the reports of the various committees and the election of officers for the coming year, although several interesting papers were read and discussed.

H. A. Campe, Reelected President of the Society. Through his leadership during the last year the S. M. P. E. passed the most successful year in its history

Mayor E. V. Babcock of Pittsburgh opened the proceedings on Monday morning and although his time had been taken up with the steel strike then in progress in Pittsburgh and vicinity, he found time to welcome the members in a manner which left no doubt of his intent to insure the best of treatment by city officials. In responding to the mayor's speech of welcome Mr. A. F. Victor, president of the Victor Animatograph Comany of Davenport, Iowa, voiced the sentiments of the society in a dignified and eloquent reply.

Following the opening ceremonies President Campe addressed the meeting, pointing out many of the possible lines of action which lie before the Society.

In the afternoon the following officers were elected for the year 1920:

President, H. A. Campe.
Vice-President, A. C. Roebuck.
Vice-President, M. A. Mayer.
Secretary, A. F. Victor.
Treasurer, W. C. Smith.

With one exception these officers were re-elected. Mr. E. K. Gillett, who had held the office of secretary since the inception of the Society, found his other work to be so pressing that he was forced to tender his resignation, and Mr. Victor was elected to fill his place.

On Manday evening a banquet was provided for all members of the Society and their guests. Throughout the evening a continuous cabaret show of high quality was run off to the edification of the guests, and particularly the older ones. At the conclusion of the banquet two reels of Prizma natural color films were thrown on the screen. After the completion of this exhibition, Mr. W. V. D. Kelley, who has made possible the films in natural color, was presented with the first bronze medal ever awarded by the Society.

The greater part of the second day was consumed with the reading and discussion of papers. Mr. C. Frances Jenkins was unable to be present and his paper on "Stereoscopic Projection" was read by the chairman. Following this paper there was considerable discussion by Messrs. Roebuck, Victor and Edwin S. Porter, on the practical possibilities of stereoscopic projection in the light of present day knowledge.

At the Davis Theatre on Tuesday night a block of seats had been reserved for the Society and a special program of vaudeville acts arranged.

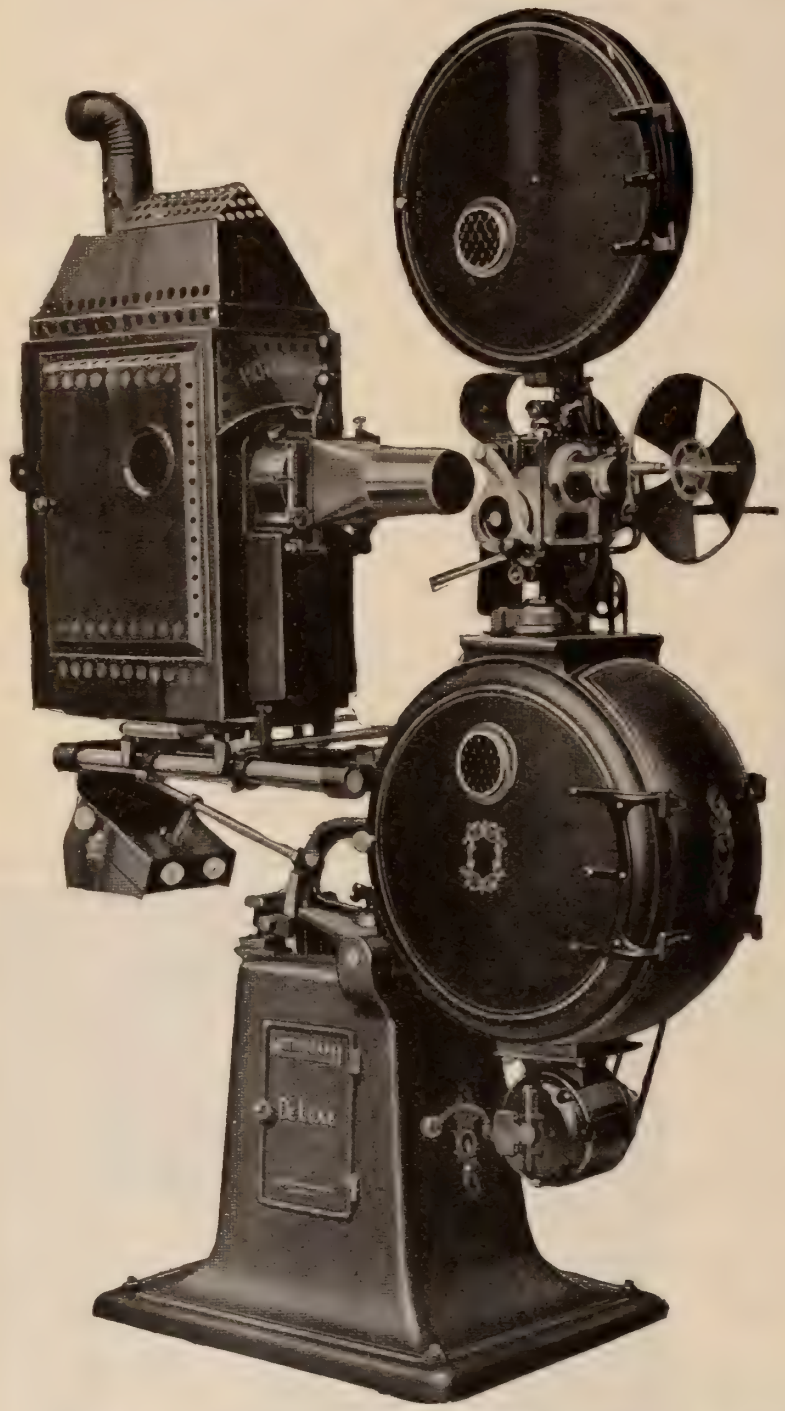
On Wednesday papers were read by H. A. Campe and H. F. O'Brien on "Three Unit Motor Generator Sets for Studios," by A. F. Victor on "The Design and Construction of a Reduction Printer," a treatise on "The Elements of Color" by Messrs. Mayer and Kelly, and an informal talk by Dr. Story of the Research Laboratory of the General Electric Company, describing some experiments on optical systems. Dr. Story's talk is to be presented in the form of a paper to be included in the bound volume of the Transactions of the Society.

Much of the success of this Convention was due to the efforts of Mr. Harvey Wible, chairman of arrangements, and Mr. P. A. Boyd in charge of publicity. The members of the Society found every hour of their time occupied either with meetings or some amusement arranged for them by the committee.

Through an invitation extended by Mr. George Perkins of the Perkins Electric Company of Montreal the next meeting of the Society will be held in that city sometime in May 1920. An unusual program of papers has already been arranged for.

A. F. Victor, Elected Secretary of the S. M. P. E.

ACTUAL PERFORMANCE PROVES MOTIOGRAPH'S WORTH



Mr. C. A. Pratt of the Electric Theatre Co., Washington, Iowa; Fox Theatre, Washington, Iowa and Pratt's Theatre, Winfield, Iowa, writes:

"Although you have our money and I have two of your De Luxe Motiographs installed a year ago last July, I do not feel that our deal is entirely closed because, first, I want to thank you for the service that has been rendered us by you since the installation of these machines and, second, I wish to give credit where credit is due—then I will feel I owe you nothing.

These machines have not only given us perfect satisfaction, but have placed the picture on the screen as good or better than any other machines we have ever installed and this is saying something when you stop to consider the fact that we have run them all. So here's good luck to you from a satisfied De Luxe exhibitor and one who who would not hesitate to recommend your product to any brother exhibitor."

If it is Service—if it is Definition of Picture—or, if it is the Best Machine on the Market you want—your selection should be a MOTIOGRAPH DE LUXE.

Flashbacks from the S. M. P. E. Convention

Oh, Boy!

A great time, what!

Pittsburgh surely knows how to entertain.

Pittsburgh has set a mark for other conventions to shoot at.

The Westinghouse company showed that it meant what it said when it invited the S. M. P. E. to come to the Smoky City.

Those of us who found it necessary to be there on Sunday were greeted by the usual type of a Pittsburgh day — cloudy and drizzly. But it cleared off later.

The eminent Drs. were amongst the first to arrive. Kellner and Story breakfasted together probably with the idea of straightening out the optical system before Richardson pulled in.

That special room, number 521, was like an oasis in the desert of impossibilities. What you couldn't find in that room was not worth having in this united state of prohibition.

The Board of Governor's convened in Roebuck's room and promptly discovered a dead ghost of Mr. Busch of Milwaukee. You simply can't get away from the fact that this old-country of ours — and especially Pittsburgh — has not as yet succumbed from thirst.

Long Lanky Bill Kunzmann, the man who keeps National craters in their proper place, was early on the spot. Even the arguments of the rabid mazda fan doesn't seem to furrow the Kunzmann brow, eh, Bill?

Some terrible disappointments:

Bill Smith's stories, taken from the French.
The main act at the banquet.
Night Life in Pittsburgh.
That we couldn't use the "Police Cards."

There is one city we know of where the Mayor is a regular fellow. The city is Pittsburgh and the man is Babcock. After his short informal greeting a feller felt like having the right to use the Mayor's office for a lounging room.

In the list of those to whom the credit is due for the success of the convention the name of P. A. Boyd should be near the top of the list. He was the busy, unassuming chap who was here, there and everwhere taking over the details. No convention before this one had been so well press-agented — and Boyd was the man behind it.

In everyday life Boyd is the newspaper man for the Westinghouse company and what he doesn't know about the press-agent game hasn't yet been written. His life is just one continual convention after another.

It's a rare (but frequent) treat to see Doc Kellner light, or rather ignite, a cigar. First off it resembles a boy lighting a fire-cracker. He holds the animal at arm's length and twirls it in the flame of the match until the temperature of combustion has been overreached, etc., and then he applies his bellows.

A good many of Doc's cigars hated like sin to ignite and someone ventured to remark that he was smoking "Non-Flams."

Thirty-seven years ago on October 13 there was a rugged, roly-poly boy born either in Youngstown or Hubbard, Ohio. The citizens of Youngstown claim that he was born in Hubbard; while those in Hubbard deny all such statements emphatically, and insist his birth took place in Youngstown. Well, anyway, Cudmore wouldn't allow any such disagreement to interfere with his celebration — nor would he allow the convention to postpone it. He brought his-er-er- birthday cake right along with him and anyone who wished to drink his health was invited to 607.

Who said "Optience?"

We thought Pittsburghers were hardened to the sacrilege of their city. But, no! Victor sprung one on Wible that made the latter gentleman want to commit murder in every degree.

Says Alexander: "Do you know, Mr. Wible, how I tell the difference between night and day in your town?"

"How's that?"

"Well, when I come down from my room and see the night clerk on duty I know it's night and when I see the day clerk at the desk I know ——"

Were it not for the Iowan's agility this note would be in blackface.

That Monday night banquet, furnished by the Westinghouse company, was a real affair.

The little dancer — the Jazz Baby — was certainly clever. And her sister entertainers "went across" in fine style.

S'funny though, how the cabaret-ists fell for the older fellows when there was so much good looking young stock that could have been had for the asking.

For instance, there was McNary of the New York office of Westinghouse. We have a hunch that he can dance that jazz stuff in three languages but did the "Rose of No Man's Land" pull his whiskers and sing to him?. Not by the beard of a scientist or the weight of a supply dealer, she didn't. However, it is to be assumed that old age must be served first.

Although, you understand, we are not speaking from absolute knowledge we have an idea that if Will Smith had "gone into the intimate side of Paris," that other traveler, Willard Cook, would have added a few words on the same subject.

Did any of you notice how popular the nearby Child's restaurant became for midnight parties. Some of the visitors to Mrs. Child's kitchen talked as though they found a cabaret show at the place.

INFORMATION WANTED:

A suitable reward will be paid for information leading to the apprehension of the wide awake opportunist at the first table on Tuesday night. This person with malice aforethought was so inconsiderate of the feelings of the members of table No. 3, at which a charming lady was being entertained, that he deliberately pikerized the diners at this table with one flower act of his imagination.

There is a rather interesting fact in connection with the appearance of the Literary Digest in typewritten form. Although this is the first time that a magazine has done away with compositors, the possibilities of this method was brought forward some ten years ago by "Dr." Mott of the National Carbon Company. At that time Mott described the value of the white flame arc light in photo-engraving, but it remained for the present emergency to emphasize its commercial worth.

Many thanks, Mr. Heinz.

We liked your plant very much.

We are thinking of asking our employer to put in a swimming tank, gymnasium, some manicurists (these especially) and a free restaurant, such as you have for your workers.

You treated us fine. Now take, for instance, that luncheon. All of us liked the Heinz Tomato Soup.

Heinz Baked Beans.
Heinz Spaghetti.
Heinz Plum Pudding
Heinz Peanut Butter (Bob Burrows liked this especially. He took four out of the six sandwiches allotted to our table. Mr. Heinz, when we come again please seat him at some other table).

How's that for free advertising?

You can't keep a good man in Brooklyn. After Max Mayers had announced his non-appearance he P. R. R.'d to Pittsburgh from New York.

All honor to Bill Kelley. As the first man to receive a medal from the society he has earned a distinction which it is to be hoped will be worth considerable in years to come. It is doubtful if there is another man in the industry who will carry the honor with such good grace and poise as the man who made Prizma.

But we'll wager that after the banquet Kelley said to himself: "I'm darned glad this medal wasn't to be awarded for the PROJECTION of these pictures tonight."

Suggested subjects for arbitration at the first meeting of the League of Nations:

Award of medals.
Sale of Honorary Memberships.
Safety Standard.

Edison Lamp Works was well represented. Porter, Kroesen and Burnap were the Incandescent Kids.

Did any of you notice how much better Victor can talk when he puts one knee on a chair. On that basis we wonder how eloquent he could be if he put both feet up in the air.

Monday, the thirteenth, was a great day for Bill Kunzmann. The waiter decorated his coat with a "soup medal;" someone sat down on his new $8 Stetson, and finally he dropped a hot ash on his trousers and set 'em afire.

Handicapped, But Still at Your Service

An Open Letter

Mr. H. A. Campe,
President of the
S. M. P. E.,
5550 Raleigh street,
Pittsburgh, Pa.

Dear Herbert:

You fellers out there
On the Monongahela
Gave us an awful good time
And everything;
But there was one thing
That you slipped up on
And I want to Tell you about it
Because it might have Turned out differently
Well, you know
You hired Room 523
For a Rest Room —
And for other purposes —
But you forgot to tell the Hotel Flat-foots
That we weren't
A gang of Chautauquans
And the mean things
Took advantage of us
And everything
And if it hadn't been
For Bill Smith's quick wit
And Joe Moulton's persuasive vocabulary
You might not have had
A quorum
On Tuesday morning.

You see, H. A.
Five or six of us
Were having a little game of er — er — Authors
And naturally got a little excited
And made a
Few appropriate remarks
But nothing
Out of the ordinary
When what should we hear
But two knocks on the door
Like this * *
And some one got up —
I think it was Norrish from Ottawa —
To open the door
And there stood
Two "Flats"
Looking just as they did
In Old Nick Carter Stories
Well, they asked
Who owned the room
And Bill Kunzmann told 'em
It belonged to the Hotel
And they got sore at that
For some reason
And begun to get nozey
And when they asked what we were playing
Perkins — You know Perk, Herbert —
Perkins told the guys
It was a game
Called Syncopated Tiddle-de-winks
But the little fat man
Thought he was smart and said
"Those colored disks looks like Poker chips to me"
But Joe Moulton laughed, and said
"My good man,
Those disks are Cylindrical sheets of Uniform Fibrous cross-section
And are used in Color Cinematography
For the purpose of rendering opaque
Certain prizmatic agerrations
To the optience"
And the little fat man
Put his hand to his head
And backed out the door
Without saying another word
But the gang seemed to grow sleepy
All of a sudden and Decided to leave for their rooms at once
But what surprised me was
Why all of them decided to use
The stairs instead of the elevators
I thank you

National Anti-Misframe League Pledge

AS a motion picture operator who has the interest of his profession at heart and is willing to assist in eliminating some of the evils practised in the operating-room, I promise that I will to the best of my ability return films to the exchange in first class condition. Furthermore, I will when it becomes necessary remedy all misframes, bad patches, etc., that may be in the film which I receive and in this way co-operate with my brother operators and give greater pleasure to those who make up the motion picture audience by showing films that are free from such defects. I also promise that I will not make punch marks in film, and when film is received by me, with punch holes, I will notify the exchange to that effect so that they may use their efforts to correct this evil.

Breezy Bill Kunzmann, Travelling Diplomat for the National Carbon Co., was a visitor in our coop the other day. Bill was on his way from Boston to Philadelphia and stopped off here to change trains. He was in the Hub while the riots and community crap-shooting was going on and reports a fine time.

Long years ago, so it seems, when Edison was a factor in motion pictures, J. H. Farrell was one of his right hand men. Since that time Farrell has been connected with several other concerns but now he is hatching up something better still. Perhaps he will have something to say soon.

CROWD YOUR THEATRE

PEOPLE resent long waits in line—they want to see the "start" of the picture.

A SLOW-MOVING crowd in front of your ticket window drives business away—it isn't necessary.

The Lightning Coin Changer

—by actual test—will handle crowds 200% faster than the old way. The Lightning way is not an experiment; it is a proved success—proved by some of the best and largest Motion Picture houses in the country. The owner of eighteen houses tried out one Lightning; within a month he ordered seventeen more.

The Lightning is sturdily built to stand long and hard service—easily operated—and is the only change making device on the market that delivers change to the customer.

R. R. Chase, No. 1102, Troy, Ohio:

It has been about two months since I first received my first issue of the NEWS. Since then I have looked forward to each week when I shall receive my next copy.

After receiving, the first thing I do is to turn to the Projection Department and read from the first line to the last. I think this department is a wonderful help to projectionists, not only to those who write in for information but to those who sit back and read like I do; but I am not saying just how long I will do this, for if I want information I'm certainly going to write to the NEWS.

Troy is just a small place, population about eight thousand, with two small theatres owned by the Troy Amusement Company. I have been projecting a little over five years and at the present time I have under my care four machines, two in each theatre. They are all Simplexes, and I've had very little trouble, not enough to speak of.

Now for the N. A. M. L., I think this is a fine organization and only wish all projectionists were members and would observe the rules, for only last night did the projectionist at the other theatre tell me of trouble with the film he had just run. The man who had that show last didn't take the time to use cement to make the patches but just used paper to stick the film together. Now I know he was not a N. A. M. L. member or he would have had better sense.

Now for a concluding thought I would like to know if some day it would be possible to have all the N. A. M. L. operators' names in print, that is, separated and divided into their respective towns and states. This would enable a projectionist going into another city to meet and talk with a N. A. M. L. brother. I would certainly be glad to meet any N. A. M. L. member if ever in Troy.

REPLY:

We have often debated the question of whether a listing of the members of the N. A. M. L. would be appreciated and we are glad to see that you are in favor of it. If the idea was carried out the best way would be to separate the names by states and then subdivide the states into the towns and cities. This wouldn't be a difficult job since the names are all cross-indexed here in the NEWS office. Perhaps you will see this done in the near future.

How about some photographs of the two projection rooms in your charge. No doubt you have some devices that would be of great interest to others if it was only known how you are using them. Send us in a picture or two with a complete description of your equipment and dare us to print. it.

Coin Changers Go Over Big

THE Lightning Coin Changer, although introduced but a short while ago in the theatrical field has met with such instantaneous success that the manufacturers of it have been obliged to open larger manufacturing quarters in order to meet the demands for the machine.

The Lightning was a long-felt want and it filled the bill as no other coin changer on the market ever did before.

After giving the Lightning a most severe test in every way possible and in actual comparison with other changers on the market, the Lightning was unanimously adopted by such representative houses as follows:

Marcus Loew's Circuit.
Martin Beck's Circuit.
Balaban & Katz.
Fiber & Shea.
David V. Picker.
Lubiler & Trinz.

The above houses found the Lightning to be absolutely correct, that it eliminates the long standing line and is the greatest source of satisfaction to their patrons as well.

The operation of the Lightning is very simple. The cashier presses a button for the desired change and this change is automatically delivered by means of a gravity slide chute into a specially designed scoop-shaped cup, direct to the patron. Regardless of the fact whether the patron may have gloves on or not, she can remove the coins from this cup with one grasp of the hand. This in itself is a great time saver, as in the old method of change making the change is handed out on a slab and the patron must pick up each coin individually.

Tuberculosis kills 150,000 Americans every year, and yet the disease is preventable and curable.

The White Plague flourishes because of carelessness, ignorance and neglect. If the entire country knew of the menace, the death rate from tuberculosis would drop almost immediately.

Use the Motion Picture slide you have received in your theatre calling attention to the fight on tuberculosis and the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals.

The screen is the most potent force in America and the use of this slide will do more than any other one thing to awaken the people of America to their danger, and will help in obtaining the necessary money to finance the year 'round campaign against tuberculosis.

Where the Wheels Go Round in the Capitol

By William C. Francke

TO those "movie" pilgrims who make a visit to the new Capitol Theatre a part of their itinerary while in the city of New York we would say that their round of inspection had not been completed until a visit to the magnificent projection room had been made, as the entire success of the screen results depend entirely upon the equipment of this portion of the theatre. Much attention on the part of the management has been given to this detail and the Precision Machine Company, whose product comprises the major portion of the equipment, has put into it all that would go toward keeping the installation of the projection room up to the high standard which the general surroundings of the Capitol has decreed.

A short upward climb on the iron ladder leading from the entrance behind the balcony on the Fiftieth street side of the theatre brings the visitor to the level of the ceiling dome. A few steps across an iron-grated walk brings us into the projection room. At first glance one is impressed by the imposing line-up of nickel-trimmed battleship gray finished machines that under the electric lights glisten like a well-kept battery of big guns on the modern dreadnaught.

This line-up comprises three Type "S" Simplex Motor-Driven Projectors, two Special Simplex Spotlights and one Special Simplex Dissolver, the latter being the first model of a newly created machine which contains two distinct lenses and slide carriers but is equipped with but one lamp and which, by the way, is receiving the closest attention of all who have thus far had an opportunity of viewing it, as it marks another new step in the line of progress that has been taken by the builders of the Simplex Projector.

The projection room is 41 by 14 by 14 feet, these dimensions giving the entire room a generous proportion. At one end of the projection room is located a modern equipped rewinding room where the latest devices for the examining and rewinding of the film are installed. A rest room for the projectionists wherein are located numerous conveniences occupies another section of the projection room, while directly adjoining is the rheostat chamber where are located the rheostats that control the electrical arc lamp service. The service current is supplied to the projection room from Edison service through three 300,000 circular mill cables, these being rated to carry 600 amperes at 120 volts D. C. All wiring is placed in approved electric conduits that are concealed in the walls, floor and ceiling, thereby doing away with the unsightly and oftimes annoying spectacle of miscellaneous wiring that prevails in a great many projection rooms.

The lighting system of the projection room comprises as individual drop and pilot light for each machine and three X-ray indirect fixtures suspended from the ceiling furnish the lighting for the projection room itself.

In the rheostat room are located the rheostats that are built on the new multiple unit system and are so constructed as to allow for the increase of light intensity at the arc by the putting-in to the circuit of added resistance instead of cutting out the coils in series as has been customary in resistance systems heretofore in use.

Two screens are being used at the Capitol Theatre. The distance from the front screen to the projection room is 159 feet, the size of this screen being 14 by 15 feet, while the projection distance to the main screen is 141 feet, this screen being 16 by 21 feet in diameter. Special attention has been given to the screen surface that was to be installed at the Capitol Theatre and in order that the very best surface could be selected to suit the conditions prevailing, a great many experiments were made before the final selection was decded upon.

The projectors are each equipped with the new Simplex arc control which will soon be on the market as regular commercial stock but which in this instance were manufactured by the Simplex factory toolmakers at considerable cost. These arc controls incorporate an entirely new principle which eliminates springs, pawls, ratchets and other mechanism and are dependent entirely upon specially designed motors that insure positive results.

On the left-hand side of the projectors are located two of the new Simplex Spot Lamps, similar to those installed in the Newman Theatre at Kansas City recently. These equipments are mounted on special ball-bearing pedestals and are counterbalanced to insure ease of operation. A feature of these equipments are the curtain dissolvers and the extra large Iris diaphragms that permit the user to obtain either a uniform spot or flood instantaneously. These spot lamps, as well as the new dissolver were also made by hand in the toolmaking department of the Simplex factory, the officials of which hope to announce in a short time their future policy concerning the marketing of these machines.

In front of each machine, directly under the look-out ports are located handsomely finished control panels that are set in flush with the front wall. On each panel board are mounted a volt meter, ammeter, Robin Speed Indicator, Robin Signal Indicating Telegraph, radical arc rheostat and control switch.

All look-out ports and projection room openings on the front wall of the projection room are protected by a novel automatic fire shutter system. A fire-proof door operating in sliding ways and held in position by counter-balanced arrangement of levers is situated over each opening. These fire-proof doors are individually connected with a fusible link which, being of a very soft material would part at the first indication of abnormal heat, and thus allow for the dropping of each of these doors practically sealing the projection room and thereby eliminating any possible danger that might occur through any projection room emergency. This system of fire shutters has been installed as an added precaution to this splendidly equipped theatre which in every detail has been constructed with a view to the safety of the audience always in mind. Connected with this fire shutter system is a device which at the dropping of the fire shutters automatically sets in motion the large ventilating fans and turns in an automatic fire alarm.

So great is the distance from the screen to the projection room that a special system of lenses has been installed, this system including a device which has been permanently secured to the front wall of the projection-room upon which has been fitted a set of soft rubber eye-shields similar to those used on the navy telescopes and through which the projectionist may obtain a magnified image of the picture, which at all times allows him to determine whether or not the picture is in correct focus.

The majority of accessories enumerated as being a part of the projection-room equipment were furnished and installed by the Cinemaquipment Centre of New York City and were designed by J. E. Robin, whose activities in the field of progressive projection-room equipment are well-known to the trade.

The volt and ammeters upon the panel boards at each machine register the voltage and amperage, respectively, that is being used at the arc lamp of the machine. The radial switch cuts in or out the resistance which, being connected in service with the arc lamp, increases or decreases the screen illumination which can be changed at will according to the density of the film subject, much in the same simplified manner as the turning up or down of an ordinary gas jet. The amount of voltage and amperage being used is readily determined by a glance at the volt ammeters.

The speed indicator indicates the speed in terms of feet per minute that are being run through the projector, designating also the time per 1,000 feet that is consumed in the running.

Another novel and entirely new device which has not yet been used at any other theatre is the signal indicating telegraph. This telegraph is of the visual type and indicates the order of the program. Should any change be made in the regular order of program as originally arranged, the projectionists and musicians alike can be notified of such change instantaneously. The speed indicator and signal indicating telegraph described herein are part of the "Robin Cinema Electric Time System, which system is interconnected between the stage manager's office, orchestra conductor's stand and with all of the projection machines in the projection-room. Its action is automatic and its sensitiveness and accuracy are extreme. The use of this system permits the operating of the entire performance upon a definite schedule and the synchronizing of the music with the picture can be reduced to the fraction of a minute, all instruments connected with this system being timed to operate simultaneously.

The signal indicating telegraph is equipped with six indicators, one for each machine, so that the projectionist can without moving away from his position at the look-out port read any required signal. This telegraphic signaling device does away with the usual telephone system and the detraction from the required work while the telephone is being answered.

In the rheostat room is also located the large switchboard which is also of special design and which controls everything electrical that is located in the projection-room. A feature of this switchboard is the special interchangeable "plugging" system which provides for the quick throwing-over into another circuit in the event of a fuse blowing, thereby eliminating any delay that would ordinarily be occasioned through such an accident and which incidentally will be looked upon as a great time-saver in this direction.

Mr. Thomas Walker, whose experience with motion picture road shows is well known to those actively engaged in the projector line, will have charge of the projection at the Capitol Theatre, and under his capable supervision the Messrs. George Bothwell, Frank Nealy, Arthur Smith, Leopold Allen, Edward Fitzgerald and Benjamin Leffler, all of them members of the New York Operators' Union, Local No. 306, will see that at all times the screen results viewed at the Capitol Theatre will be in keeping with its splendid surroundings.

Besides the projection-room in the theatre, another smaller theatre is located at the Capitol Theatre, this being used for a reviewing-room where will be run any photoplays that the management may wish to review or edit. This room is also fitted up in the latest approved fashion.

"The Primal Law"
By Isabel Ostrander

The Plot: This story has to do with the working of the primal law — the law of self-preservation — on Mary Tinney. Born in a mill worker's family in a wretched New England village, surrounded by dirt and shiftlessness, forced to work long hours for small pay, with a drunken father and brother, a slatternly mother, a deserted sister — left by a drunken husband to bring up their child — Mary Tinney takes stock of her surroundings. Bessie Price, a frail girl who was pining away in the mills and who ran away with a stranger, has returned to the village, not repentant, but cheerful, well-dressed and bent upon making easier the lot of her mother and sister. A stolen conference with Bessie convinces Mary that of two evils, she would do better to choose to go away with Marcus Beeman, traveling salesman, than to marry Ben Donahue, mill worker. Having made her choice, Mary wastes no time in putting it into execution and goes that very night to New York where she becomes a member of the sporting set, living an easy, affluent life, Beeman's wife in everything but name. She finds, however that these affairs are short-lived as a rule. Beeman finds a new interest in St. Louis, and, hearing of this, Mary sails for Europe with Frank Kelly, horse trainer, whom she finds interesting and for whom she has a real, but not a passionate attachment. Kelly is sent home because Mary feels that it is her duty to herself to better her condition by taking up with Baron Iverskoi. Cope-Harrington proposes marriage to her but she refuses, although fond of him, because she feels that this would ruin his career. One or two others follow and then Mary falls in love with Richard Daingerfield, who is seeking a model for Lillith. Mary poses for him, but awakening to love for the first time her expression ruins her as a model for Lillith. Daingerfield, soured by an unhappy matrial experience, does not even know that Mary loves him and gives her no opportunity to tell him so. The failure of his picture ruins him. To escape this situation she goes away with Lord Eshelbury but cannot put up with his insolence. Mary, who by now has not only educated herself but feathered her nest, sails for America where she finds Daingerfield, a physical wreck, hovering between life and death. She nurses him but can only make his last days comfortable. Reviewing her career she finds that she has ruined the only man she ever really loved and that all of this has come of her natural effort to follow the law of self-preservation.

The Complete Plan Book

"Who's Your Brother?"

THE initial picture of the Curtiss Pictures Corporation appears to be an earnest of the slogan, "fewer and better." The producers have come into the field with something to say and if their future pictures maintain the excellence of "Who's Your Brother?" they will not need to look for a market—the market will come to them. Their offering is a message picture, though the message does not assume the aspect of a sermon. John G. Adolphi has attended to that. He has directed the play so that its dramatic highlights are ever dominant. Which is remarkable, considering the frail character of the theme.

It is based upon happiness, as it is concerned with unselfish service for others. The strong and wealthy are made responsible for those who are not so fortunate. In fact it is a plea for the betterment of the lot of man wherever he is oppressed. There is a spiritual note—a human note which is exemplified in the biblical quotation, "I am My Brother's Keeper." The picture proves that we are all brothers and sisters—that we all belong to the human family regardless of race, color or creed. To emphasize its message a romance is used as a foundation. And it furnishes the necessary conflict and contrast to make it interesting as a play, and these elements bring out the value of the theme.

Mr. Adolphi has punctuated the story with brief interludes of comedy, and his human touches are discernible throughout the feature. If there is any fault it can be found in a few subtitles which can be trimmed. The picture would carry more spontaneous action if the conversation was confined to few words. The message is in the play and the titles are too elaborate. The picture is in the hands of an excellent cast headed by Edith Taliaferro. It is due mainly to her work and Mr. Adolphi's direction that the story does not become a preachment. The backgrounds provide an adequate setting.

"Who's Your Brother?" carries good advertising possibilities, for an exhibitor can link up with the churches and uplift societies and bring patronage to his house. The picture should attract filmgoers, however, even if it does not have the benefit of an exploitation campaign.—LAURENCE REID.

"Start Something"

(First Rolin Comedy in One Reel starring Harry Pollard—Released by Pathe October 26)

HARRY POLLARD gets a pretty good start as a comedy star. For a long time he has been featured with Bebe Daniels in the Rolin one-reel comedies, starring Harold Lloyd.

Now that he is a star in his own right, under the direction of Hal Roach and Alf Goulding, he will supply the one-reel comedies for the Pathe Program that Lloyd formerly supplied, since Mr. Loyd has now entered the two-reel class.

In "Start Something" the comedian is a traffic cop and succeeds in mixing things up by trying to flirt with every pretty girl motorist. The sergeant is at his heels at all times and finally transfers him to the toughest beat in town. A little colored boy stealing a fowl and being discovered by a negro policeman is a little side incident injected here.

A dope fiend also enters for a few scenes and the little colored boy secures his needle and inserts it into the comic cop who is trying to escape from two rough burglars. This imbues the comic cop who then turns on the husky burglars and beats them up.

The girl in the house claims him as her hero but he is discovered by his wife and three children in short order, and the fadeout shows the comic cop wheeling the baby buggy home surrounded by his family.

A fairly entertaining comedy with plenty of fast action and no vulgarity.—TOM HAMLIN.

"Screen Supplement"

(Photoplay Magazine November release through Educational—One Reel)

"STUNTS at the Ince studio" make up the first scenes of Photoplay Magazine Screen Supplement for November. This shows Thomas H. Ince, Charles Ray, Doris May, Douglass MacLean, Louise Glaum, Hobart Bosworth, Enid Bennett and others.

Besides intimate close-ups there are several impromptu activities as the screen artists romp through stunts. It shows a mid-summer half-holiday at the Ince studios and vicinity in Culver City, California.

This is mildly entertaining and possesses the essential value of being novel and unique. It will interest everybody generally.

Then we have Priscilla Dean, the Universal star, picking a lemon from a corner of her own orchard and will say that Priscilla does it very gracefully.

Florence Vidor "and her Royal family" is shown next. King Vidor, her husband, is able to direct his wife on location and without argument.

The last scenes on the reel portray a group of performers with Ann Little and George Melford on an Idaho location, staging a real snowstorm in August.

As a whole this may be considered very satisfactory material to show on any program at any theatre anywhere.—TOM HAMLIN.

'THE FLAME OF THE DESERT'
(GOLDWYN)

Conventional Story is Rich in Color

GOLDWYN has given Geraldine Farrar a titled Englishwoman for her newest characterization, and as she is keenly alive, there being nothing of the British reserve about her it is rather hard to accept her in her present role. The picture is built from a conventional background and the interesting points are found in the bizarre color scheme and the atmosphere, for the story is quite improbable and full of incongruities.

The author would have us believe that an English spy can successfully masquerade as an Egyptian and hoodwink not only the wily natives of the Nile country but his own people. For the purposes of the story the Englishwoman is made to fall in love with him and you don't doubt for a moment that he will eventually reveal his identity and marry her (no member of the nobility ever marries beneath her station). The action takes a melodramatic turn and the customary uprising in the desert is the background. Her ladyship's caddish brother must needs be intrigued by the chief revolutionist which gives her a reason to save him and defend her honor at the same time. To maintain the suspense her rashness involves her in difficulties so that the English sheik is forced to come to the rescue.

The picture is slow in development and when it does gain momentum it has nothing to offer. Mr. Baker has produced the work on a lavish scale. It is good that he did so, for the story is negligible. Lou Tellengen enacts the sheik like a true stoic of the desert. Macy Harlam plays the revolutionist with plenty of Oriental guile.—Length, 5 Reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Geraldine Farrar, the Goldwyn star, will appear at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her newest production entitled "The Flame of the Desert." As Lady Isabel Channing, she brings to the part all the warmth and color of her personality. Her performance is distinguished for its depth of feeling. It is at the London Victory ball that Lady Isabel meets Sheik Essad and is much attracted by him although she thinks him an Egyptian and beneath her in caste. In reality he is a British army officer who the Bedouin tribesmen think is one of their own people.

Her brother, Sir Charles Channing, is in gambling difficulties and he is provided with a secretarial post in Cairo. And Lady Isabel accompanies him. Aboul Bey, the leader of the sullen natives, plans a rebellion. His intentions are to take the city. To further his scheme, he succeeds in getting young Sir Charles in his power, and in payment of a debt, the boy gives him translations of the government code messages from England. But Aboul Bey has not counted on the activities of the spy, Sheik Essad, whom he thinks a loyal Egyptian.

At her every meeting with Essad, Lady Isabel falls more desperately in love with him. When her brother confesses his treachery, the English woman rides to Aboul's tent to settle the forged check of Sir Charles out of her own funds. The wily Egyptian throws aside all pretense and demands the promised code. Natives seize her and to save his sister the boy tells Aboul that his government knows of the uprising. Essad arrives just as Lady Isabel has stabbed Aboul to save her honor. Racial barriers are removed when she learns that the Sheik is one of her own countrymen. Miss Farrar is supported by a capable cast. Reginald Barker directed the picture.

CATCH LINES

The glamour of the Orient will cast a spell over you when you see "Flame of the Desert" with Geraldine Farrar. Don't miss this vital, throbbing drama of the Nile country.

She fell in love with a Sheik of the desert. And followed him to Egypt. What happened? See "Flame of the Desert," a picture of the Orient.

See Geraldine Farrar in the sumptious spectacle, "Flame of the Desert." You will hear the call of the East. You will discover why an Englishwoman left her native country.

The tom-toms were playing in the streets of Cairo. It was fascinating, this sight to the Englishwoman. She had heard the call of the Orient and responded to it. What happened?

PROGRAM READER

Lady Isabel Channing had met a handsome sheik and promptly fell in love with him. There was nothing of the British reserve about him, though he was considerably of a stoic. What could it mean? Was this titled Englishwoman going to renounce her own race and marry an Egyptian? Impossible! Yet she followed him to the desert. She had heard the call of the Orient. What is revealed thereafter can be found in Geraldine Farrar's new picture, "Flame of the Desert," which comes to this theatre beginning ————.

"23 1-2 HOURS LEAVE"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Best Comedy Offering of the Season

THE reviewer boldly pronounces this the best all-around comedy of the season and cannot just recollect that he ever saw a better one. It is distinctively wholesome and 100 per cent pure, occupying a pedestal all its own. There are no lagging moments and no vulgarities injected.

Douglas MacLean, Doris May and Thomas Guise give clever performances and the entire cast represents perfect types. At its premier release as a regular offering at the Rialto Theatre in New York it provoked chuckles from its inception. These chuckles soon developed into hearty laughter which became continuous and at the conclusion the heavy applause which rewarded the picture was as remarkable as it was unusual.

A silent offering must be considered very striking to be encored in this fashion by a blase audience. Direction, mounting, story, continuity, photography and laboratory work were all above par. The action takes place in an army cantonment on this side.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and exceptionally pleasing; Elite, strong puller and highly pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Labor, good puller and entirely pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released, November 16.—TOM HAMLIN.

Story by Mary Roberts Rinehart
Scenario by Agnes C. Johnston
Directed under supervision of Thomas H. Ince.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Thomas H. Ince, the producer, has a Paramount-Artcraft picture coming to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' run beginning ————.

It is entitled "23½ Hours' Leave" and was written by the famous author, Mary Roberts Rinehart. Douglas MacLean and Doris May are featured. Mr. MacLean has formerly appeared in support of Mary Pickford, Dorothy Gish, Dorothy Dalton and Enid Bennett.

This is a comedy that tells of a young sergeant who disliked the many regulations imposed upon him in army life. He owned the dog that bit the commanding officer's leg and then made a bet that he would be eating breakfast shortly at the General's own table.

And of course the General has a pretty daughter and the usual things happen when two goodlooking healthy young persons meet and are then forbidden by one or both parents to cut the other. When the young sergeant obtains 23½ hours' leave he is halted because his new uniform does not meet the requirements of the regulations. In fact he has to loll around in his B. V. D's.

With a long ulster around him he escapes with the girl in her automobile in this unconventional attire. They accidently discover two spies and after capturing them the young sergeant is a hero and soon afterwards wins his bet by eating breakfast at the General's table. And he also wins a bride.

This is described as one of the best of Mary Roberts Rinehart's stories and a strong cast of capable artists interpret the various roles in what is heralded as one of the best screen comedies of the season.

PROGRAM READER

One young sergeant owned a dog that bit the General's leg.

When his comrades chaffed him about his punishment and the sad repute he had fallen heir to the young man made a foolish bet.

He declared that he would shortly eat breakfast at the General's table.

Here was where the comedy began. The young man soon became aware that the General had a beautiful daughter.

When the young man secured 23½ hours' leave he attempted to leave camp with his new tailor-made uniform.

But he was stopped because the uniform did not conform to army regulations. Stripped down to his B. V. D.'s he escaped covered by a long ulster. He plunged into the automobile being run by the General's pretty daughter.

It was unconventional but before they got back they had captured a couple of spies. So the young man was a hero; ate breakfast at the General's table; won his bet and won a bride.

Douglas MacLean was the young sergeant and Doris May was the girl. And this Thomas H. Ince production is coming to this theatre next week as a Paramount-Artcraft picture.

It is entitled "23½ Hours' Leave" and was adapted from Mary Roberts Rinehart's story by John Emerson and Anita Loos.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture you should take advantage of all these well-known names and emphasize that this is a Thomas H. Ince production for Famous Players-Lasky as a Paramount-Artcraft picture from a story by Mary Roberts Rinehart adapted by John Emerson and Anita Loos. These names are too well-known to be slighted. And, of course, the names of the featured artists, Douglas MacLean and Doris May, should be used although they are not so well-known. If you can get the addresses of all returned soldiers you should send them announcements. Announce this as not a war play, but a comedy in army life.

CATCH LINES

When the young lady found that her escort was clad in B. V. D.'s underneath the stolen ulster she naturally thought he was an unconventional youth.

"THE CLIMBERS"

(VITAGRAPH)

Food for Thought in this Entertainment

CLYDE FITCH'S play is certainly adaptable to he screen not only because of its wealth of dramatic attitudes but because of its message. We call "The Climbers" excellent entertainment, for it is unusually well fortified with plot and characterization and points a moral in the bargain. You might almost say that the picture is director proof, yet Tom Terriss has incorporated a deft touch which makes it sparkle with vitality. His skill in bringing out the highlights of the play reflects on his intelligent direction. Mr. Fitch usually wrote with his tongue in his cheek and his gift for a satirical turn has been appreciated by the director.

And where could you find a more suitable actress to interpret the author's whimsical vein than Corinne Griffith? She brings a fragrant personality to the role — a charm and aristocracy of breeding that vitalizes the idea. She is intrigued into marriage by a climber after wealth. She is ever climbing herself for happiness while her relatives are constantly stepping upward for greater social recognition.

Space does not permit the outlining of this clever picture Suffice to say that it generates conflict and contrast and all the accepted ingredients. And it moves forward with compact and spontaneous action pointing its moral, and sending out on its journey rays of sentiment and shafts of genuine drama. The pathos is admirable commingled with humor. It is staged in exquisite taste. A logical picture — a human picture and acted with understanding by the star and Percy Marmont. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Climbers," a screen adaptation of the late Clyde Fitch's great drama of America's society folk, in which Amelia Bingham appeared some years ago and which has been ranked as one of the greatest plays of all time, comes to the ..... Theatre beginning .....

Corrine Griffith, the Vitagraph star, who has been the featured player in so many great pictures, has the title role, that of a beautiful and pampered young society girl who marries the wrong man yet lives to enjoy true love with the faithful Ned Warden of Mr. Fitch's story.

Miss Griffith has never secured a more congenial role and is most ably supported. Unlike many screen versions of stage successes, "The Climbers" has proven excellent photoplay material and much of the sparkle which characterized this playwright's works has been retained in the picture. The story value of the production remains untouched, and therefore one of the best pictures of the season may be expected. The supporting cast in this picture contains many notable names, which include Hugh Huntley as Richard Sterling and Percy Marmont as Ned Warren. The feature is a remarkable technical success as well as a strong dramatic offering.

SUGGESTIONS

We would emphasize the fact that this is one of Clyde Fitch's most successful plays and work the long run of the stage version into our advertising. Tell your people that much of the Fitch brand of satire and clever wit has been retained and assure them that the star has an excellent role.

Two giants, both over seven feet in height, are given parts in an allegorical sequence. These men are good for mention as the curiosity is always aroused by the unusual.

There is an exciting boat wreck in the feature which should be given some space in your selling talk. The locale of the picture is a fashionable summer resort, and you may promise your fans a view of many handsome gowns and a real glimpse of the ultra smart set and the way they live.

Give Miss Griffith a good boost in this one and promise that it is one of the best roles of her career. Make mention of the work of Percy Marmont as the hero and let them know that Charles Halton and George Spotswood have good roles.

Many of the scenes for the drama were taken at Bayshore, L. I., which is a fashionable resort. This fact should be of interest to your women patrons.

In our selling talk we would tell them a little of the story, enough to explain what a "climber" really is.

PROGRAM READER

Blanche Sterling, reared in the lap of luxury, finds she has married a cad who loves only her money and openly conducts a love affair with a notorious woman. Then the wealth which has gratified every wish is lost in a stock speculation in which her father becomes involved. Her husband becomes not only a cad, but a criminal. Life seems to have little pleasure in store for her. Only one good, true friend, a refused suitor of her girlhood days remains. He lends assistance in many ways. From this point events draw toward a smashing climax. In the end the lives of the true hearted characters are straightened out and virtue receives its reward and villainy its just deserts. This feature is Clyde Fitch master of dramatic situations and dialogue at his best. It is Corrine Griffith's greatest picture, one which will amuse, entertain and instruct.

"THE BROKEN BUTTERFLY"

(ROBERTSON-COLE)

Humanities Spoiled by Illogical Climax

THE constant search for a new twist to tack on to the climax of a conventional story mars what otherwise would be an acceptable offering in "The Broken Butterfly." Tourneur's melodramatic conceptions have robbed his latest contribution of its humanities. He would strive for a novel climax although his subject matter was building logically to its orthodox conclusion. The result is the dominant note of sympathy in the characterization loses its grip on the spectator providing he is not swayed by the beautiful word pictures. It is a play of charming titles rather than a thing of movement. A simple play and a human one until the illogical climax.

A child of nature loves unwisely and too well. When the man returns it is too late. She is a suicide supposedly. Time eventually erases the grief from his heart and he marries his victim's sister, which robs him of sympathetic interest. His honesty looks like a pose in the situations that follow. The strange climax presents him at the shrine of his first love where he finds the dream-child not dead, but dying these many years of a broken heart.

She has hardly passed away before he takes his wife into his arms. Here is a man supposed to be bowed down with grief but during his stay at the scene of his indiscretion he flies from one pair of feminine arms to another. Why didn't the sister go out of his life? Why did he go back to the shrine, which of all places should have been sacred? One can ask many questions out of this unnatural conclusion.

Pauline Starke makes the tragic figure a thing of beauty. The picture will please those who are not searching for truth. Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

By Penelope Knapp.
Directed by Maurice Tourneur.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Broken Butterfly," will appear at the ..... Theatre, beginning ....., with Lew Cody and Pauline Starke as the featured players. This is a human story because it depicts human frailties, yet it has a sweep of dramatic power and such appealing ingredients as sentiment and pathos. Mr. Cody and Miss Starke are excellent players for the interpretation of this heart interest story. The former brings a poise, a restraint to the role which makes it a perfect thing of its kind, while the latter's wistful personality is wonderfully becoming for the fragile wisp of femininity.

As Marcene Elliot she is shown as a child of nature who loves unwisely and too well. In her dream world had come a true poet like herself, and before he knew it, Darrell Thorne had loosened the floods of his passion. He wanted to come back and right his wrong, but circumstances prevented. When he does return he finds the child a suicide. So he travels the wide world over in an attempt to overcome his grief. Time heals the wound and he marries Marcene's sister. And the honeymoon is spent at the shrine of his first love.

Sweet memories of the past take shape. For Marcene is alive though dying of a broken heart. The old love fanning itself into flame, he asks his wife to commit a sacrifice. Will she leave him so he can repair the wrong? And she gracefully consents, though she does not go away from the vicinity. The little broken butterfly dies — the shock of her new-found happiness had been too great a shock. Darrell takes his wife in his arms. He is sure to find solace with her since the wrong is righted in his mind.

CATCH LINES

A little dream-child of the woods gave up her heart because love was beautiful. Hers was a life of sorrow because she suffered keenly. Come and enjoy a delightfully human play and meet this broken butterfly.

She loved unwisely and too well. "But he will come back because I need him," she said as she tenderly picked the flowers. Did her sorrow turn to happiness? See "The Broken Butterfly."

The Fairy Prince of her imagination galloped into her life. And in her web of fancies was created a beautiful love. But, Ah, it was too great a love for it was founded on sorrow.

He went out of her life and she had a broken heart. Yet her sorrow did not rob her of the beautiful fancies she had created. Her dream world remained. See "The Broken Butterfly."

PROGRAM READER

A beautiful story of a wisp of a girl who dwelled in a dream-world and judged all people by nature's gifts about her is presented in Maurice Tourneur's production, "The Broken Butterfly," which comes to this theatre in the near future. She loved unwisely and too well, did Marcene. Her own people didn't understand her. But HE did and the gypsy woman did. The fortune teller told her that she would love and die as a mother. HE lived in a dream-world too. And love came to them. They discovered themselves and somehow were frightened. Life was so beautiful. And he went out of her life. Did he return? What became of her? Did she die of a broken heart? And what of him? Did his conscience trouble him? These questions are all answered in the picture. Don't miss this human offering; it is a rare treat. It presents a beautiful love — A love that violates the sanctity of the heart ONLY IF YOU DRAW THE WRONG CONCEPTION. To err is human. And they were as weak as all of us.

"SACRED FLAME"
(SCHOMER-ROSS)

Dramatic Meat in Heart Interest Story

ABRAHAM SCHOMER is always serious in his photo-dramas. He believes in going right down to the bed-rock of human emotions and revealing with a powerful magnifying-glass, the heart throbs of blighted romances. But in realizing his dramatic points and his moral (a Schomer play always has a moral) he is often inclined to soar. He must sermonize with his titles and incorporate a lot of extraneous matter which counteracts the development of the action. Explanatory and lengthy captions comprise the only weakness in "The Sacred Flame," a study in broken hearts.

His material may be familiar, but he makes it compelling and often gripping. And the dramatic values, logical throughout, appear with remarkable humanness and vividness. The denouement of the story reaches tragic heights, the climax revealing the despair of broken love. Theatrical? Yes, but somehow convincing. The sacred flame burns out in a woman's heart when her faith in a lover is destroyed. An intense scene shows him attempting to rectify his wrong, but it is too late. Death relieves him of his sorrow and the moral is forced home that the sanctity of pure love cannot be violated.

A play of heart-throbs and sympathy — a play which moves forward with powerful strokes once the "planting" of the theme and characters are over. But Mr. Schomer can dispense with his cemetery scene which concludes the play. This is unnecessarily piling on the agony. The youth's soul will requiescat in pace in the minds of picturegoers without visualizing the body's final resting place. Emily Stevens portrays the woman who loved and suffered with keen sympathy and understanding. A capable cast renders adequate support. Length, 6 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Sacred Flame" will be the main attraction at the ———— beginning ————. This is a drama of life drawn in colors of truth by Abraham S. Schomer and interpreting it is the emotional actress, Emliy Stevens, and a capable cast that includes Muriel Ostriches, Earl Schenck, Lionel Adams and others. The sacred flame is the love that burns in human hearts and which dies out when the sparks have lost their passion. The drama points a moral that one cannot violate the sanctity of pure love.

Rosalie Allen has taken Lionel Brooks from the gutter and pushed him forward until he stands a MAN. Her love is a wonderful thing. Marriage can wait. He is inspired until he reaches the heights and he shows his gratitude in every manner possible. A time comes however when he meets another woman — a woman younger in years and with more social recognition than Rosalie. Torn between the old love and the new, the young man is unable to make up his mind. Finally he reaches the great decision.

He will go to Rosalie and tell her that he can never make her his wife. His announcement is such a shock that she has a breakdown, but recovers. Brooks discovers in time that Ray Palton has only temporarily infatuated him. When he attempts to pick up the threads of his old romance, Rosalie would erase him from her memory. Her broken heart is mended by a steadfast suitor, Dr. Duncan. She is happy as his wife. Brooks on the other hand, cannot become reconciled to her happiness with another, and he dies of a broken heart. A vital, vivid play of human emotions is "The Sacred Flame." Mr. Schomer's direction is as splendid s his story.

CATCH LINES

She picked him up from the gutter and made a man of him. It was a wonderful love they displayed. When he was on the high road to success — the flame burned out in his heart. What happened?

See "The Sacred Flame," a play of human emotions — a play of heart-throbs — a play of tremendous appeal.

You cannot violate the sancity of the heart. Learn the lesson that is drawn in colors of truth. See "The Sacred Flame."

She gave him her wealth and her heart to do with as he might. He spent her money and trampled upon the other. The sacred flame of love had consumed itself.

PROGRAM READER

It was a beautiful love that Rosalie and Lionel expressed for each other. A product of the streets, she had rescued him and through her kind philosophy had made him into a man. She had been his inspiration through the years that brought him success. And he showed his gratitude by gracefully abiding his time until they could be married. Then like a flash the flame of love died in his heart. He confessed that he no longer loved her. A terrible shock, it caused a breakdown and a broken heart. But his new infatuation was a thing of the moemnt and when he would renew his old love, there were no dying embers to fan the flame of her love into expression. So he learned a bitter lesson that one cannot violate the sanctity of pure love.

"THIEVES"
(FOX)

Gladys Brockwell Stars in Crook Melodrama

IN the delineation of crook roles Gladys Brockwell is in a class by herself. Fox has appreciated her talents in this direction by giving her a melodrama of the underworld to interpret, and the star rises to the occasion with a performance, the perfection of which cannot be denied.

The plot of "Thieves" is cut from a familiar cloth for the motive behind it is redemption. Yet there is a freshness in the development which eliminates the obviousness of the action. The heroine and her pal decide to reform. Out of this decision the sustaining points of the story are made. A benefactress assumes responsibility for the girl after the latter had attempted to steal the good woman's purchase. You think you are in for the usual mawkish sentimentality, but the story loses its conventional form at this point and becomes a decidedly novel and interesting bit of screen fiction. The benefactress has mercenary motives. She would employ the underworld at her old profession in order to recover stolen property for her fiancee.

Which is the occasion to introduce the long arm of coincidence. The heroine is glad of her opportunity because she can strike back at the master crook who was instrumental in making her steal the very papers she has set out to recover. A bit of a struggle — a fight in which her pal comes to her rescue and it is over. Miss Brockwell's company is efficient. The picture carries a number of moving moments and the usual quota of suspense. Length, 5 reels; released, December 7.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Gladys Brockwell, the Fox emotional star, will be seen at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in her latest photoplay entitled "Thieves." The star, always praised for her emotional acting, plays the role of Mazie, the crook, with deep feeling. She is an actress who has the faculty of holding an audience throughout, a task which few can accomplish. As Mazie, she is commissioned by the boss crook, Martland, to steal a packet of papers from a certain young man. This accomplished, she and her pal, Jimmy, decide to reform.

One day in a store the old yearning comes over her and she steals a woman's purchase. She is saved from arrest however, by the customer refusing to press the charge. In fact the woman assumes responsibility for her redemption. And so Mazie is happy in the knowledge that she is leading a virtuous life. But her benefactress had a motive in taking the thief home. She would use her to recover the very property which she had stolen some nights previously. Martland, it seems, is desirous of marrying the wealthy woman and because of her refusal he had struck at her fiance.

Mazie recovers the bonds all right but in doing so she finds herself in a struggle — a struggle which might have ended disastrously but for the timely arrival of Jimmy. The result is the fiance is released from jail and Martland gets his just deserts. Mazie and Jimmy? They are more resolved than ever to lead an honest life — but together. The star is supported by a capable company. The film was produced under the direction of Frank Beale from a story by Will C. Beale.

CATCH LINES

In which Gladys Brockwell plays the part of a thief. See this emotional actress in a powerful story of the underworld.

She would strike back at the master crook. But how? You will find out in Gladys Brockwell's latest picture, "Thieves."

How a girl brought up in a life of crime sees the light of redemption and follows it. See "Thieves," a picture of intense action and powerful suspense.

She was a thief who became a saint. How was her reformation brought about? See Gladys Brockwell in "Thieves."

PROGRAM READER

Mazie had decided to reform. It didn't pay to be a crook. But try as she might she couldn't make her fingers behave when there were such pretty things to be stolen in the stores. Lucky for Mazie, however, that the woman she had stolen a purchase from had decided not to have her arrested. She would take her home and cure her of her criminal tendencies. So Mazie thought. The girl was on the right road when her benefactress confessed that her motive was mercenary, that the only reason she had taken her in was to make her continue as a thief long enough to recover some valuable papers for her fiance.

Mazie at the consternation of the woman, was not indignant. She was glad of the opportunity to strike at the boss crook who had commissioned her to steal the very papers now in his possession. This is the outline of "Thieves," the Gladys Brockwell picture which comes to the ———— soon. We cannot go into details. That would be spoiling the story. Rest assured it is a genuine treat.

"THE ISLES OF CONQUEST"

(SELECT)

Will Pleasantly Entertain Majority

NORMA TALMADGE goes through half of this picture clad in an abbreviated costume on a desert isle with a stoker who happens to be a woman hater and was formerly a successful ship builder until his sweetheart heartlessly jilted him and brought the youth to his present low estate.

Although the story is familiar, having been utilized by some of our most popular novelists for many years, it possesses charm and will undoubtedly delight the majority. Direction not up to the Emerson-Loos former standard but the cast is adequate.

A very easy picture to view and quite light and airy without the heavier emotional material to intrude. The sort of offering that will not register strong enough to leave many indelible impressions but will assuredly pleasantly entertain throughout.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, big puller and very pleasing; Elite, strong puller and quite pleasing; Family, big puller and highly pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—Released, October 26.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

Ethel Harmon.....Norma Talmadge
John Arnold.....Wyndham Standing
Van Surdam.....Charles Gerrard
Mrs. Harmon.....Elder Hopper
Janis Harmon.....Natalie Talmadge
Claire Wilson.....Claire Whitney
Jack Frazier.....Garreth Hughes
Dr. Chase.....Joe Smiley

Adapted by John Emerson and Anita Loos from the novel "By Right of Conquest," by Arthur Hornblow.
Directed by Edward Jose.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Norma Talmadge is due at the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ——— in her latest Select Picture.

"The Isle of Conquest" is the title and John Emerson and Anita Loos adapted the screen version from the novel by Arthur Hornblow called "By Right of Conquest."

Miss Talmadge has her sister, Natalie Talmadge, in her cast and Wyndham Standing is her leading man. Garreth Hughes is another well known member of the cast.

The mother of the two girls is a frivolous widow and rather than have them home for their vacation she lets them face the dreary prospect of spending their vacation at Holy Cross Academy.

When the mother visits a restaurant in company with the wealthy Van Surdam for whom she is angling she is dismayed to observe him flirting with a young girl. The young girl's escort is John Arnold, a young shipbuilder. She brings on her prettiest daughter to enable her land the wealthy Van Surdam into her family at least as she needs the money. Finally the wealthy bachelor proposes to her daughter and the mother urges her to accept because of their straitened circumstances.

After the marriage there is a shipwreck and the young wife finds herself stranded upon an island with John Arnold. When they are rescued the old husband is so jealous that he works himself into a frenzy and dies of heart disease.

This leaves the pretty young widow to wed the man of her choice, John Arnold. This picture is heralded as an exceptional romance and is said to possess great dramatic values.

PROGRAM READER

Two young girls were doomed to spend their vacation at the academy.

They felt forlorn but then things began to happen rapidly.

The mother of the two pretty sisters was a very frivolous widow apparently, but the real truth was that she felt she had to marry some wealthy man in order to provide properly for her beautiful daughters.

When a young girl attracted her last suitor from her she determined to win him back for her family by having one of her daughters step into the breach. The wealthy old fellow is captivated at once and urged by her mother the young girl marries him.

It was some time afterwards that through a shipwreck she is separated from her husband and finds herself on an island with a nice young man. They are there, the only human beings on the isle, for a long time before being rescued by her husband.

The old fellow was so jealous that he contracted heart trouble and passed away. It was the only considerate thing he ever did.

The young persons, very much in love with each other, were wed and assured of a happy life forever after.

Norma Talmadge is the girl in the case. She comes to this theatre next week in her latest Select Picture entitled, "The Isle of Conquest."

SUGGESTIONS

Norma Talmadge is your best to concentrate upon when exploiting this picture after you have booked it. The next bet is the fact that Lewis J. Selznick presents it as a Select Picture. These are all well known names. On top of all this you have an author and story that are popular. "By Right of Conquest" by Arthur Hornblow. And John Emerson and Anita Loos are also well known. They did the adaptation. You could not ask for any more good angles. Use your mailing lists and the star's photographs and cuts wherever possible.

CATCH LINES

She was an old man's darling and wanted to be a young man's slave.

Alone on an island was one young couple and romance bloomed before the girl's husband rescued her. It was not a popular rescue with her or the young man.

"THE LOST PRINCESS"

(FOX)

May Slightly Amuse Average Audience

IF you want peace and quiet after the turmoil of the front pages in the newspapers, this offering may appease you. It's a modern fairy tale bidding for pretty romance honors.

Voluminous subtitles almost equal the scenes in length which signifies that most of the production was made in the laboratory.

The tenor of this descriptive matter is directed against the high cost of living and many of the insertions were cleverly put. When you think the picture is finished, as the two young ones fondly embrace, the fellow wakes up for another reel and you discover that many of the preceding scenes are a dream, although the reviewer could not figure out just where the dream started.

It is decidely a wholesome picture and a sheer novelty for charm in that it is so different. There's not a murder or a marriage in it. The young farm boy goes to the city and manages to secure a position on a newspaper with the aid of a young girl on the staff. The villain is the Sunday editor. May slightly amuse the average audience.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities should register about the same in all localities and with all classes of audiences. It will please as light entertainment and will not offend the fastidious. Length, 5 reels; released, Oct. 19.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"The Lost Princess" is the modern romance scheduled for the ——— theatre for ——— days beginning ———.

This is a William Fox picture featuring those youthful artists, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.

The young farmer boy is ambitious to exchange his plow work for a writer's life on a big city newspaper and finally persuades his parents to allow him to make the plunge.

Time after time his articles are turned down by the heartless editors until finally a young girl writer intercedes for him and helps the boy make good on the Sunday Magazine section. His big story is that of a lost princess who had escaped to America. It turns out that the girl who helped him was the princess.

But this is not all. The high cost of living comes in for its share in this picture and is dealt several punches and staggering body blows. And there is a villain in the picture that somehow got to be a Sunday editor on a big newspaper.

And like all other villains he was finally foiled in the end and the young couple are on their way to live happily ever after.

PROGRAM READER

He wanted to change his plow for a typewriter and write stories in the big city. The boy wanted to be in the midst of things.

The old folks noticed that his furrows were growing too slow and irregular. And finally they consented to the boy's ambitious plans.

City editors are heartless according to all reports. Of course this in the opinion of all budding writers. All the boy's stories were refused. A young girl who wrote the "heart balm" gush for one large newspaper finally interceded for the young fellow and he was assigned to write the feature story for the forthcoming Sunday magazine section.

And he was stumped. He could not muster an idea.

The girl told him a sort of fairy story in the park about a young runaway princess who had escaped her European environments and fled to America. He used the idea for his story and made good on his city job.

But this same story was noticed by certain gentlemen who were in search of a princess and lo and behold this girl was the runaway princess. The boy saves her for himself by proving that her country had since become one of the many new republics.

Those youthful artists, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair are featured in the William Fox picture coming to this theatre next week, "The Runaway Princess."

It is a wholesome comedy drama and a pretty little modern romance.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture it should be billed correctly by all means for just what it is. "A pretty little modern romance featuring those youthful artists, Albert Ray and Elinor Fair." Go after the young folks and use all the school advertising you can secure as this is a wholesome little picture and the youthful element should be catered to directly. You will make a mistake if you try and get adults to any great extent.

CATCH LINES

A writer this farmer boy would be, but it took a little city girl to put him on the right track.

After one girl gave an ambitious writer an idea for a story he gave her the star role.

The boy wanted to exchange his plow for a typewriter but for a while it seemed that he was spoiling a good farmer to make a poor newspaper man.

'LONG ARM OF MANNISTER'
(NATIONAL FILM)

Good Dramatic Production Should Satisfy

IF they want a very good dramatic production, interpreted by a capable and well-balanced cast, you can count on this picture satisfying your patrons and it will prove excellent for the big majority.

Henry B. Walthall perfectly fits the star role and he has a story of the type in which he particularly shines. While not very melodramatic as regards thrills or fast and furious action, it has the desired quality of suspense generally, and possesses many tense periods.

A group of men plot against another man to secure his fortune, and permit him to view his wife in what he thought was a compromising situation. He had also been placed in a similar predicament by an unscrupulous woman and his wife sees him. When she elopes with a renegade he follows the couple leaving his fortune at the mercy of the group of plotters who soon ruin him.

The long arm of Mannister, the dupe, finally reaches each member of the group and the husband and wife are finally happily reunited. Sets, continuity, direction and photography are up to standard.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, good puller and entirely pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing. Length, 7 reels; released in several territories already.—TOM HAMLIN.

From Novel by E. Phillips Oppenheim.
Directed by Bertram Bracken.
Produced by National Film Corporation.
Distributed State Rights by Pioneer Film Corp.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Henry B. Walthall comes to the ———— theatre for a ———— days' engagement in his screenization of the E. Phillips Oppenheim story, "The Long Arm of Mannister."

This story by the famous author first appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and has since had several editions in book form.

The star role, as interpreted by Mr. Walthall, is declared to be very forceful and he is supported by a notable cast of players. Bertram Bracken directed this production for the National Film Corporation and the Pioneer Film Corporation reports that the picture is registering heavily throughout the world.

A group of men in trying to secure control of a man's fortune manage to stage a very compromising situation for their victim's wife. This is worked both ways as his wife is later permitted to see her husband in what looks like a similar compromising situation in the company of an unscrupulous woman.

The wife elopes with a renegade and the avenging husband follows the couple almost around the world, coming up to them in the desert.

In the meantime his fortune is at the mercy of the group of plotters who make ducks and drakes of it. It is then that the film lives up to its title and "The Long Arm of Mannister" reaches back and one by one each member of the group is made to feel the weight of it.

And toward the last the avenger finally determines that it shall not be an eye for eye and a tooth for a tooth all along for he finds that he can forgive some.

This is declared to be an intensely gripping tale and is heralded as one of the best screen dramas of the present season.

PROGRAM READER

He was permitted to see his wife in another man's arms.

But it was a frameup against him by enemies trying to ruin him and his wife was their innocent aid in the plot.

In order to estrange the couple the plotters secured an unscrupulous woman to place the husband in the same situation as he had found his wife.

And then they brought the wife over so that she could witness the predicament of her husband.

So she believed the apparent evidence of her own eyes and eloped in a fit of pique with a renegade.

The husband chased the couple around the world. And then the long arm of Mannister reached back and administered justice to all those in the plot that destroyed his home and ruined him financially.

There is a tremendous denoument in this great dramatic production which stars Henry B. Walthall.

"The Long Arm of Mannister" is the title, and it comes to this theatre next week. E. Phillips Oppenheim is the author of the story.

SUGGESTIONS

After you have booked this picture you certainly have several strong avenues of exploitation open that will immediately occur to you. To emphasize the name of the star will be the first thing to bear in mind. Henry B. Walthall undoubtedly has a big following from the time he appeared in "The Birth of a Nation" down through his other big screen offerings.

And E. Phillips Oppenheim is known the country over as a novelist and the author of many popular successes. "The Long Arm of Mannister" has had wide vogue as a story and when you have a big star, a great author and a popular story you should concentrate on those three elements for pulling power at the box office.

"BONNIE, BONNIE LASSIE"
(UNIVERSAL)

Wholesome Comedy Drama Is Entertaining

THIS can safely be branded a good wholesame comedy drama. Although the plot is not new by any means, it is presented attractively and will no doubt prove very entertaining to the big majority.

The cast is capable and well balanced. Mary MacLaren has David Butler as her leading man and they both register neatly. Spottiswood Aitken does a very likable characterization. The direction, mounting, continuity and photography are up to par and although this cannot be called a real big production it possesses simple charm that will please.

A Scotch lassie visits an old wealthy friend of her grandfather in America and the old man tries to marry her to his favorite nephew, an artist. The nephew runs away and the other nephew does not suit the girl, so she also runs away. The romance develops when she becomes the working partner of a roving sign painter, who afterward proves to be the runaway nephew.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and very pleasing; Elite, average puller and quite pleasing; Family, big puller and very pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing. Length, 6 reels; released, October 5.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

Alisa Graeme.....Mary MacLaren
Jeremiah Wishart.....Spottiswoode Aitken
David.....David Butler
Archibald Loveday.....Arthur Carewe

Story by Henry C. Rowland.
Scenario by Violet Clark
Directed by Tod Browning.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Mary MacLaren comes to the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ———— in her latest Universal picture, "Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie."

Henry C. Rowland wrote the story which was run in Ainslee's Magazine. David Butler is Miss MacLaren's leading man and Spottiswoode Aitken enacts one of the principal roles.

The girl comes from Scotland to America to visit an old wealthy friend of her grandfather. The old man conceives the idea of having her marry his favorite nephew. But the young fellow runs away without seeing the girl. The old man is furious but finally determines that the girl shall wed another of his nephews. But this one did not suit the girl so she also runs away.

In her flight she runs across a young fellow painting a billboard in the country and he shares his lunch with her while she in turn helps him correct some of his work. They form a working partnership and rove around the country painting signs until they eventually fall in love.

When they parted in anger it was because he told her he could not marry her because at this particular time he was not fixed well enough financially.

One day he is assigned to paint a sign right across from his uncle's home And the uncle recognizes him from his wheel chair. A girl passed and also recognized the artist and helped him again with his work. The uncle almost threw a fit when he saw that the girl was acquainted with his runaway nephew and in the humorous scene that followed the young couple found happiness.

PROGRAM READER

She liked him so she asked him to marry her.

And he refused.

Of course this made the girl quite angry. She was a pretty girl and a good girl.

So she left the town that claimed him and went to the city.

He was an artist and had refused to marry her at that particular time because he did not have what he considered a sufficient amount of money.

When she saw a sign painter many weeks afterwards in the big city she recognized her artist. And she was delighted.

But she was not the only one that recognized him. He was painting the billboard right across the street from the residence of a very wealthy man.

And the wealthy man saw that his artistic nephew was now doing some real good work for society.

With both money and abiding love, what more could any young couple want?

"Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie" is the Universal film coming to this theatre next week.

Our Mary MacLaren is the star.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture tell them that it is from the popular magazine story by Henry C. Rowland which appeared in Ainslee's Magazine. And mention Mary MacLaren's other screen offerings such as "Shoes," "Bread," "The Unpainted Woman," etc. If you have any Scottish societies in your city use their mailing list for announcement cards. Mention that David Butler and Spottiswoode Aitken are in the cast of this Universal Special Attraction.

CATCH LINES

When the girl innocently proposed to him the man refused.

The boy ran away and the girl ran away rather than wed a stranger. And then these two strangers met over the hills so far away.

He was an artist but his wealthy uncle did not care for art until his nephew started to paint a billboard just outside the old man's residence.

Two persons, a boy and a girl, were partners in business. They were roving sign painters and got along fine until they fell in love with each other.

Romance mixes in paint pots and brushes and out of this mixture grew a great love until finally a happy couple emerged.

Plain As Daylight!—

Lots of folk are not convinced until they see it "plain as daylight."

A glance through the files of the motion picture trade press would prove to the most ardent "show me" skeptic that Motion Picture News has won out by several lengths over the field in the Printing Handicap.

It has maintained its high quality and abundant quantity of service, with an average of 130 pages to the issue.

And Motion Picture News has been published each and every week.

What's in a Name?

An age-old familiar question.
Sometimes there's a great deal in a name.

What would you give to own a substantial interest in any of these names?

Uneeda Biscuit! Royal Baking Powder! Gold Medal Flour! Victrola! Ivory Soap!

The power of these names, their immense commercial value, was the result of just two things:

Extensive, discriminating advertising!

Backed by a product of recognized excellence!

And that accurately describes PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT PICTURES:

A product of recognized excellence!

Extensively and discriminatingly advertised.

Every exhibitor is being offered the opportunity to acquire a substantial interest in the names PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT.

Names which represent as much in the realm of motion pictures as do those mentioned above in THEIR individual fields.

AND REMEMBER:

A reputation which associates any name in the mind of the public with quality in product requires years in the making, years of consistent performance.

The reputation for quality which is ineradicably associated with the names PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT is already established.

Exhibitors can achieve their share of the prosperity which attaches to these nationally advertised AND ESTABLISHED names by simply

MAKING THEIR THEATRES "THE PLACE THAT SHOWS PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT PICTURES."

Does any one dispute the statement that PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT PICTURES lead the field in consistent quality production and extensive advertising?

The history of the forward progress of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation is the best answer to this question.

It is a record of brilliant success, a success which could only be attained by advertising and "delivering the goods."

What's in the Names—PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT?

"Who's Your Brother?"

One of the Sweetest Love Stories Ever Screened

"Who's Your Brother?" is clean, sweet, wholesome, a real love story and withal, a tense, interest-holding drama from beginning to end. Miss Taliaferro is supported by a splendid cast including Frank Burbeck, E. Coit Albertson, Gladden James, Paul Panzer, Herbert Fortier, Elizabeth Garrison, Edith Stockton, Elizabeth Kennedy, Martin Faust and others.

WILLIAM DUNCAN
VITAGRAPH

"Smashing Barriers" is William Duncan's current Vitagraph production. It was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, and directed by Duncan himself. The record number of bookings, the opinion of exhibitors and the box-office receipts that have followed in the wake of "Smashing Barriers" all prove Vitagraph's claim that "Smashing Barriers" is the best Duncan production to date.

"The Invisible Hand," soon to be released by Vitagraph with Antonio Moreno as the star, holds many suprise thrills. The authors, Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, have created a role for Moreno which fits him perfectly. He appears as an ultra-fashionable detective, trailing the chiefs of a Crime Trust, and eventually bringing them to justice.

QUICK ACTION

I am offering for sale 3 of the greatest plays ever submitted to Picture Producers, namely:

"NOTHING BUT THE TRUTH"

"THE VERY IDEA"

"NOTHING BUT LIES"

Price $40,000 each—No agents need apply.

All three are big stage successes. Since I must make a quick turnover of these rights, I cannot entertain offers from agents.

NECESSARY!

"Nothing But the Truth" is the first one.

William Collier starred in it over a year in New York, at the Longacre Theatre, under the management of Anderson & Frazer.

The play was equally successful in Chicago, Philadelphia, Washington and other big American cities.

Then it went to London, playing more than a year there.

James Montgomery, author of "Ready Money" and other dramatic hits, made the play from a novel by Frederick Isham. The publishers, Bobbs Merrill, put out twelve editions of this book.

Since then "Nothing But the Truth" has been translated into every language—including the Scandinavian—and acted in every country in the world, except South America.

These facts show that the play is a proven success and that the buyer will have the advantage of tremendous previous advertising.

"The Very Idea" is the second one.

Written by William LeBaron, the cleverest satirical playwright in this country.

It ran for a long season at the Astor theatre, under the management of G. M. Anderson.

"Nothing But Lies" is the third.

William Collier made as big a hit in this as in "Nothing But the Truth."

Aaron Hoffman wrote it.

Its run in New York, under the management of G. M. Anderson and Lawrence Weber, was extended over several months and proved highly profitable financially.

These are the three big plays to which I have the rights. I prefer to sell them in a block, but I will receive bids separately if they come immediately.

THE DRAGON PAINTER

WITHOUT a single exception every reviewer who saw "The Dragon Painter" said it was close to perfection in artistic detail and production. Some said it was perfection itself. At least one critic said it was the best motion picture play she had ever seen.

If you are selecting pictures with a view to pleasing a discriminating audience and not merely filling in open dates, if you want a picture that will give reputation to your house and dollars to your box office, screen this one and you will book it.

THE ILLUSTRIOUS PRINCE

by E. PHILLIPS OPPENHEIM

THE work of Sessue Hayakawa has carried him into the popular favor of audiences in approximately five thousand theatres in the United States. They have clamored to see him in something typifying the Oriental in the Occidental World. As the Prince in this great story by E. Phillips Oppenheim he is part of a wonderful production of intrigue, mystery, romance and dramatic tension. Hayakawa is the one man to perfectly fit this part and his characterization of it makes the play one of extraordinary merit and of special appeal to Hayakawa followers.

BLIND BOOKINGS

A THEATRE run by an exhibitor who carefully selects his pictures is a sound commercial proposition, but a house operated by a man who merely fills his open dates is a gamble. If you were offered the choice of a gamble or a sure-thing at this minute which would you take?

The most discriminating exhibitors in this country, the leaders of theatre craft, have selected the pictures of Sessue Hayakawa. In more than five thousand theatres his photoplays are an important feature. There is no good reason why you should gamble when the following eight productions have been proven sure-thing Box Office winners:

"THE FATAL FORTUNE"

STARRING

HELEN HOLMES

Charles Wood in The Trade Review:

Judging from the first three episodes of "The Fatal Fortune" it reaches a pinnacle high as serials go. Having real heart interest, thrills, hair-breath escapes, very clever situations, an undercurrent of comedy and with its qualities of drama and melodramatic action it should appeal to a wide public. If not the best it is one of the best serials of late production.

Laurence Reid in Motion Picture News:

The exhibitor who is looking for a serial will be displaying a good sense of showmanship if he selects "The Fatal Fortune" for the picture is well calculated to draw patronage. It is mostly melodramatic in theme if one may judge from the first three episodes, although here and there the tension is lifted to exploit heart interest.

Margaret I. MacDonald in Moving Picture World:

The new Helen Holmes serial "The Fatal Fortune" promises to be one of the best on the market. Three of the fifteen episodes recently exhibited to the press revealed a carefully devised story with plenty of melodramatic fire and action that increases consistently. The story told thus far is convincing and does not depend on the ready-to-order thrill to carry the interest.

Eclipses Greatest Stars in Box Office Receipts

MICHIGAN FILM REVIEW

KUNSKY GIVES ACTUAL RECEIPTS ON "THE THUNDERBOLT"

For the first time in the history of the Madison theatre John H. Kunsky gives out actual figures at the request of the Michigan Film Review... We have been hearing so many reports of "records," that we asked him about "The Thunderbolt," which played there last week. Here are the comparative figures of gain over the biggest week the Madison ever had:

"The Thunderbolt" beat "Virtuous Wives" by $3,360.97.

"The Thunderbolt" beat "The Perfect Lover" by $2,576.88.

"The Thunderbolt" beat "Sunnyside" (Chaplin) by $3,226.66.

"The Thunderbolt" beat "Shoulder Arms" (Chaplin) by $1,271.76.

It is interesting to note of the six biggest weeks in the history of the Madison five were First National Attractions.

Is it any wonder H... he has the greate...

The Michigan Film Review further comments:

"It is doubtful if a screen star was ever more quickly and firmly established in the favor of motion picture goers than the First National star, Katherine MacDonald, whose opening release, "The Thunderbolt," is already setting the country talking. The picture has created a veritable sensation, not only because of the peculiar nature of the story, but because there is a new star, whom the public is quick to recognize as a real actress."

A First National Attraction

Watch for this Series of Startling Pictures

The First National is planning for the immediate future, a series of the greatest attractions for

Katherine MacDonald

The American Beauty

Now acclaimed the brightest star in the film firmament.

She will appear in startling stories, specially picked for her, the only star of her type.

No pains nor expense will be spared to get the best material obtainable, and the best supporting casts.

We announce with confidence that her present phenomenal success will increase with each picture.

THIS MEANS BIG BOX OFFICE RETURNS FOR YOU.

A First National FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS CIRCUIT Attraction

The World's Treasure House of Greatest Pictures is Unlocked!

PERFECTION cannot be improved.

It is admitted that the Triangle in the days of Griffith, Ince and Sennet; of Dorothy Dalton, Fairbanks, Hart, the Gish sisters and all the rest of that brilliant galaxy, produced the greatest pictures that the world has ever seen.

Those pictures were and are perfection in pictures. The judgment of the world's best audiences pronounces them so.

No producer today could afford to place in one organization the men and the women that made the Triangle great; no producer today dares to put into his pictures the surpassing care, the painstaking deliberation, the frequent rehearsal, that were put into these scintillating achievements.

When they were produced the keenest critics said they were "ahead of the times." It was so, Time has proven it. Furthermore present day skill in production has not yet caught up with these shining masterpieces of all time!

The door of the world's treasure house of greatest pictures is unlocked for you. You may now show to your audiences the best the business has yet evolved, pictures that will still be great a decade hence; pictures that only a small portion of our population has seen; pictures of truer first run quality than 99 per cent of the pictures of today, re-created in a marvelous manner.

We invite for these pictures the personal and careful inspection of every exhibitor who desires for his audiences only the best.

Dorothy Dalton
in
The FLAME OF THE YUKON

A Vivid flash of red, a burst of flaming genius, a dynamic mistress of the shadow stage—Dorothy Dalton in a picture of the hard living, easy dying Alaskan days, a picture that is superb in acting, direction and story.

What a contrast between the warmth and passion of that tempestuous dance-hall girl and the flinty hardness of her associates; between the forbidding barrens of the far North and the richness of her nature!

Dorothy Dalton at her best in a wonderful production that is purest drama; that is, and will continue to be, a real classic.

GREAT names here! Certain to draw the respectful and eager attentions of your patronage.

Charming little Miss Gish in an "ugly duckling" role that carries her through to the "swan" stage; a story of abused innocence and a forlorn step-child that in its delightful delineations does not fail to be dramatic.

Percentage Is Coming

ACCORDING to figures recently published the gross box-office income of picture theatres today in this country is $750,000,000. Of this sum the producers and distributors receive $75,000,000. This, of course, is exclusive of foreign sales.

In other words, according to these figures the producer is getting only ten per cent of what the exhibitor receives from the public, or one dollar in every ten taken in.

* * * * *

THESE gross income figures may be somewhat large; it is very difficult to get exact returns. The figures of $75,000,000 are apparently about correct. But at any rate the average rental price today does not exceed 12½ per cent of the exhibitor's box-office intake. This is, seemingly, low. For instance, to compare with another business, you would scarcely expect a shoe manufacturer and wholesaler to receive between them $1.25 for a pair of shoes for which the retailer received $10.00.

This figure, of a rental price of 12½ per cent of the exhibitor's weekly intake, will, we realize, be received by exhibitors with the most varied feelings. Some — small houses mostly — are paying 25 per cent and even more; some — large houses mostly — are paying less than 10 per cent. Closed towns are getting low rentals: towns and locations where theatre competition exists pay more. And so it goes. There is no stability nor standard to the rental price.

* * * * *

Some time ago we took this question of rental prices to an experienced distributor and got the following and very practical information: "It's a cold blooded proposition: where the exhibitor controls a town we take what he gives: where competition exists the exhibitor pays what we ask. Consequently some exhibitors pay too much and some too little."

And this we believe covers the situation today.

Some exhibitors are paying too much: some are paying too little. Some distributors are asking altogether too much: some are getting too little — too little to encourage the production of pictures the public wants.

There is much inequality.

* * * * *

BUSINESS is business. It is human to exercise an advantage. Just the same, the exhibitor who, with a "closed town" is using this power to force prices way down and the distributor who is using a similar power to put over average stars and mediocre pictures at an exorbitant price are deadly enemies to this business.

They are deadly enemies to themselves — unless they count only on a quick clean-up — and out.

You cannot take out of this business and not put back. You cannot — with any business.

That is destruction.

What we need in this business today above any other factor is — constructionists.

We have too few.

That is just what is meant when it is often said that we lack enough big men.

Big men are constructionists. They work and wait for big developments. They don't take out and not put back. They don't milk dry the momentary opportunity. They don't flash and gamble. They build.

* * * * *

YOU cannot, however, get away from the bald facts that the producer and distributor today are receiving only ten to twelve per cent of the business' gross intake.

Speaking Editorially:

Percentage Is Coming

That is not enough: and so long as it is not enough there will not be enough good pictures.

Nor can you get away from the producer's offer to play percentage.

If the producer wants it and the exhibitor doesn't — well, what is wrong with percentage? And why?

Percentage seems to us the only solution. You can never standardize rental prices because you can never standardize box-office returns. The quality of the pictures, the showmanship of the exhibitor are each too intangible.

* * * * *

WE are inclined to agree with one producer who prophesies that within two years a percentage division of the picture's earnings will be the common arrangement between producer and exhibitor.

Until that time comes each will try to gain the advantage. Each will use power and threats. Each will draw up battle lines against the other.

There is a lot of unrest in the business today and while there are other and deeper economic causes for it the immediate issue is rental prices.

Rental prices are back of the exhibitor coalitions in the way of local and national chains and circuits. Rental prices are back of the acquisition, threatened or actual, of theatres by producers.

* * * * *

Percentage playing — and only this logical division of picture profits — will settle these disturbing issues.

There are other big advantages to percentage playing.

It will determine picture values. Good pictures will travel on their full strength; poor pictures will be known for what they are. Pictures will be booked on proven merit not on wild promises.

From our viewpoint it would seem that percentage playing right now is about the biggest issue confronting this business and the most ready solution for its gravest problem.

"Big Six" to the Front

THE most interesting announcement of the day is the reported coalition of a group of directors whose work counts heavily in the producing world — Messrs. Ince, Sennett, Tucker, Neilan, Tourneur, Dwan.

All are now under contract; and of course, many things, many readjustments may happen meanwhile in this swift changing business.

Mr. J. D. Williams, in commenting upon the move, welcomes it as a striking evidence that independent productions will rule in the future.

We assume it also means fewer and better pictures — an added impulse to the constant and inevitable trend toward this production ideal.

Last week the writer had separate interviews with the heads of two entirely different picture organizations. Each, by an interesting coincidence emphasized warmly their common belief: that individual initiative and unhampered effort must rule in the making of better pictures. There must be and there will be many different minds at work. Creative ability must be utterly free. Time and money must also be spent freely — not wastefully, but as needed. There must be no time rule, no machine restrictions.

Two recent pictures are outstanding proofs of this: "The Miracle Man" and "The Eyes of Youth." These pictures sound the keynote of future production. We shall have more such pictures and they will come from varied sources of creative effort.

Dealing In Personalities

GOSH, but it feels good to be back on this page once more! We wonder if anyone but the proofreader has missed us since "Personalities" disappeared from sight in the printers' mix-up. You never can tell. For one thing, at least four of our creditors have been thrown completely off the track. And it's a sure bet that they'll never find us again as long as The News is in this ungainly small size.

Speaking of the small size—

The last few weeks have certainly given us a good many laughs. There were one or two advertisers who kicked when The News went from the small size to that smashing large page. And we don't ever remember hearing that they were reconciled to it.

Then, lo and behold—

When we run into a stone wall of trouble and overcome it at the expense of going back to the small size, there are one or two advertisers who kick because they must have the large-sized page to get proper display.

Yes—the same one or two who kicked before!

It's a great life if you take it that way.

JUST think of all the important things that happened while "Personalities" was "vacationing"—accent on the quotes.

Why the very first week Alex Beyfuss gave the crank a turn and out popped a free and independent Robertson–Cole organization with Bre'er Kirkpatrick at the head of a personally selected, live-wire selling force.

Modestly speaking, we are afraid our readers may not have got the full force of that news without "Personalities" to point the way. So just put these facts on your memory tablets: the Robertson–Cole organization has money—real money; the Robertson–Cole organization has ambitions—clean-cut, high ambitions; the Robertson–Cole organization has show-sense—as proven by its handling of the Martin Johnson pictures; the Robertson–Cole organization is in the game to stay—backed by a world-wide solidity.

Not to mention our own private conviction that a good part of the Robertson–Cole strength can be summed up in the possession of Alex Beyfuss and Sales Manager Kirkpatrick.

THEN Joe Lee had to pick out the time when there was no "Personalities" to take his hat from Louis Mayer's rack.

We refused to believe it until we heard it from Joe's own lips. We can hardly believe it yet. "Louis Mayer and Joe Lee" were two names that will always remain combined in our vocabulary. And for top-notch selling enterprise we will never forget Joe's work on "Virtuous Wives."

We could give you a lot of rumors regarding Joe's next connection but the Bostonian denies each rumor as fast as it comes up. We do know, however, that we never knew of so many offers from big fellows deluging a man as soon as it was known that he was free and clear.

PATHE'S exchange organization is putting over a "Quimby Tribute Week" and never was a tribute more deserved.

Fred Quimby is one of the Western boys who stepped into immediate popularity in New York when he came here to take the post of Sales Manager of the Pathe organization. We can't recall at this moment whether his title has been changed since then but we do know that he has moved up in importance to Pathe with each month that he has been here.

Which means that he must be producing results as a Sales Manager. And when a man produces results and still retains the popularity with the selling organization and exhibitors that Fred Quimby can boast of—why then you can be sure that he is a regular fellow.

So we say that Pathe has every reason to hold a "Quimby Tribute Week." Also, we might add that we know of some prominent exhibitors who will be glad of the chance to join in anything contributing to the glory of that always-smiling sales manager.

JOE Plunkett postcards us from London. To W. A. J. he writes, "This town is amusement mad. All good pictures go over here, no matter who makes them—just so they are good."

To "Personalities" he writes: "Just think—all you want to drink over here and no one to say when and where. And cheap as dirt."

What we want to know is why he picked on us for that message?

Not to say that we don't thank Joe for the tip. Guess we'll show the postcard to W. A. J. and see if there is any possibility of a "London trip on business."

But then, Havana is nearer. And we have a few dozen subscribers there who should be visited this winter.

DID you ever see a man with a broader smile than Harry Reichenbach after the showing of "Eyes of Youth" at the Astor last week?

Harry took an awful chance when he invited all the big and little fellows of film row to the pre-release showing of this first Equity. He certainly had a hard-boiled audience gathered that day if there ever was one.

All the more reason for Harry's broad smiles when the picture went over with a bang.

And we refuse to believe the fellow who says that Harry explained the fact that he is still smiling with the statement, "At last I have a good picture to handle."

WE hope you noticed that two page special we had last week showing the wide territory covered by the Famous Players–Lasky publicity efforts? Remember that page of reproductions showing smashing covers and double-truck spreads secured in all corners of the world. We had enough more specimens on hand here to fill a half-dozen pages.

We were wishing that we had a "Personality" page last week so that we could comment on that special and slip a boosting word to Jack Flinn on the crackerjack organization he has built up over there on Fifth Avenue.

If there is any angle of publicity—be it national general mediums, trade efforts, or international propositions that isn't touched on by that Famous outfit we'd like to hear about it.

Mae Marsh Signs With Gasnier

Two Year Contract Entered Into With Him and Cohan; Pictures Through Robertson-Cole

THE latest of the Robertson-Cole series of announcements of new stars and productions which have been causing the industry to sit up and take notice during the past two months, is the statement that Mae Marsh has signed a two-year contract with Louis J. Gasnier and Sydney L. Cohan for a series of big special pictures to be released by Robertson-Cole. Work will be commenced shortly at the Gasnier studios at Glendale, California and the greatest effort is being put forth at this time to secure for the famous star of "The Birth of a Nation" a story that will surpass as a screen vehicle any in which she has ever appeared.

In announcing the acquisition of the new star, Robertson-Cole state that they are offering another contribution to the movement for better pictures, for the contracts were signed with the express stipulation that not time but quality was the principal factor in production. At the most, six pictures will be made in a year and it is quite possible that but four will be completed because Miss Marsh herself insisted that the number of the productions each year would not be indicated in the contract and that the output would be governed solely by the ability of the Gasnier studios to produce pictures of the highest type.

Miss Marsh was emphatic in declaring that she was determined to appear only in big super productions and she is convinced that careful work can be executed only if there is no set time limit. She feels that with the greatest effort on her part, it will be impossible to complete more than six pictures and believes that four really great pictures is nearer the capacity of a star who desires to keep the full artistic value in the photo-play.

The announcement that the little favorite of the screen was to return to studio work attracted the attention of the leading producers of the country and many attractive offers were made to her.

Loew Enterprises Turned Over

Loew, Inc. Succeeds Loew's Theatrical Enterprises; Augmented Board of Directors

CONTRACTS were signed last week whereby the control of the Loew Theatres in the United States and Canada was taken over by Loew, Inc. This new corporation takes the place of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises.

Marcus Loew and his associates remain in control, however, with an augmented board of directors. The new board will include Marcus Loew, President of Loew, Inc., David Bernstein, Treasurer of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises; C. E. Danforth, of Von Emburgh and Atterbury; W. C. Durant, President, General Motors Corporation; Harvey D. Gibson, President, Liberty National Bank of New York; Joseph D. Knapp, President of the American Lithograph Company; David L. Loew, of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises; James H. Perkins, of Montgomery & Company, New York; Daniel E. Pomeroy, Vive-President of the Bankers Trust Company, New York; N. M. Schenck, Secretary of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises; Lee Shubert, President of Sam S. and Lee Shubert, Inc., Arthur M. Loew is Secretary to the Board of Directors.

The transfer of control will in no way affect the operation of the Loew Theatres. Marcus Loew and the former executive staff will continue as they have in the past.

In a statement sent out by the new company the net earnings of Loew's Theatrical Enterprises for the year ending last August were $1,119,740 after all taxes, were paid. The net earnings for the next two fiscal years are estimated at $3,000,000 and $3,900,000 respectively.

Marcus Loew acquires three new theatres through deals just consummated, two by purchase, and one which he will build. He bought the Francais Theatre in Montreal, about a mile from his present Montreal Theatre; and the Brevoort, at the corner of Bedford and Nostrand Avenues, in Brooklyn, close by his Fulton Theatre. He starts operating the Brevoort to-day, and will completely remodel the Francais for opening about January 1st.

The third theatre will be built on Yonge Street, about three-quarters of a mile from his Yonge Street Theatre in Toronto. It will seat 3,600 people.

Loew also has plans for the New York and Criterion Theatre property on Broadway between 44th and 45th Streets, which will be announced later.

WESTERN WAFTINGS

Sol. L. Lesser, who recently announced his intention of making Los Angeles his future Western headquarters, has spent several weeks in San Francisco winding up the important matters in connection with his film interests there, and is now in Los Angeles putting his plans into effect. At the present time, negotiations have not been completed, and Mr. Lesser prefers to withhold announcement until a later date.

After spending several weeks in Los Angeles working with Manager Wolff of the Los Angeles Goldwyn Exchange, A. S. Aaronson, West Coast representative, left this week for a tour over the territory to take in as far east as Denver, and north to Seattle.

Herman Brown, former Boise theatre magnate, who recently disposed of his property in Idaho, has purchased the Globe Theatre on South Main Street, Los Angeles, of P. Major. Mr. Brown was most successful as an exhibitor in the Northwest, and he has already made plans for improvements in this house which seats about 800.

J. E. Story, former branch manager at Kansas City for Pathe, who was recently promoted to the position of Western representative, arrived in Los Angeles this week on his first trip over the territory after spending some time at Denver and Salt Lake.

General Manager E. H. Emmick of the Peerless Exchange, Los Angeles and San Francisco, has contracted for distribution of the Hank Mann Comedies, and also the new Gaiety Comedies, and has already made his first bookings in the Northern city.

Harry Lustig, Coast representative for Metro, who has been in Los Angeles to meet President Richard Rowland and look after business of the Los Angeles exchange, departed for Denver, October 28, and from there will make a trip through the Northwestern territory.

This week will see the departure of the remaining members of the D. W. Griffith organization for the Eastern studio near New York City. The party consists of Elmer Clifton, director; George Hill, cameraman; Ralph Graves, and Business Manager Bidwell.

After spending six weeks in Los Angeles working in the forthcoming Dorothy Gish Paramount subject, Charles Gerrard is leaving this week for New York, where he has been engaged to play an important role in a D. W. Griffith production.

A quiet wedding occurred in Hollywood, Cal., Saturday, October 25th, when Paul Henry Dowling, director of advertising and publicity of the Christie Film Company, and Miss Ruth Moherman of Canton, O., were married. The couple will reside in Hollywood.

The Exchange Manager of Tomorrow

Executive Who Can Maintain or Raise His Rentals to High Mark and Retain the Good Will of Customers is Considered Cheaper at Quadrupled Salary Than is Problem-Dodger

THE future of the exchange manager, now faced with increasing responsibilities, and the part he will play in the shifting present day of the industry is the subject of the following article written by J. D. Williams, Manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit. The problems he faces, the difficulties he finds himself up against, are dealt with at length.

By J. D. Williams

What of the exchange manager — the trigger to the industrial gun — and his future in the aftermath of the evolution that is slowly, but surely, altering methods of distribution?

Standing on the frontier as the arbiter of values in the important work of converting production talent into rental money, he is a vital part in the machinery of progress, and he must be reckoned with, seriously and intelligently, if national distributing organizations are to claim a maximum of efficiency along the new lines that are now being laid.

New and greater responsibilities have become the lot of exchange managers within the year. And these responsibilities are about equally divided between moral and financial problems. The need for keen minded, alert business men as branch office executives is greater today than ever before. And this need will grow as time passes. The exchange manager of the future will find a complex problem to solve in meeting the demands of production which he must adjust with the conservatism of exhibition.

Home office executives are prone, in some instances, to discount the moral responsibilities that an exchange manager must carry, and some of them overlook entirely the importance of the personal welfare of their branch executives in relation to the results they obtain.

There is no industry which can compare to the motion picture in the importance which sales ability commands. With the era of bigger and better pictures there must be a companion increase in the abilities of the managers and salesmen whose task it is to market the new type of productions to exhibitors.

The question of present day scales of remuneration for exchange managers and salesmen is important, but not nearly as much so as the question of the future scale of salaries and incomes received by the managers and their road men.

Bigger productions need greater ability in the men who sell them — greater ability implies larger incomes to the individual's Exchange managers are entitled to good salaries, with bonus or special award arrangements, for several reasons that are pertinently the business of every person in the industry.

Home office executives in some organizations are satisfied if a manager rents a picture in a certain town for $50 a day. But if the manager exercises his sales ability, and convinces the exhibitor that a production is easily worth $150 a day in rental, because of its peculiar advertising and exploitation properties, the home office executives take the attitude that they expected that price, when the contracts come through. That kind of sales direction is wrong and unjust to the managers.

Any branch executive who is capable of increasing the rental values in a territory, and who can encourage exhibitors to do the things that will give them corresponding increases in receipts at the box office, deserves a salary commensurate with his accomplishments.

In many respects his sales problems are like those of a real estate agent. Real property values are, in the majority, chiefly a matter of personal opinion. An agent decides that a lot is worth $1,000. A prospective buyer reasons that it is worth only $750. If the agent is a good salesman, he gets his price and the buyer is convinced that his own appraisal was too conservative.

The time was, and quite recently, too, when the average exchange manager was never certain of his status for the day until he had read his morning's mail, and even then, telegrams were known to arrive shortly after lunch. His position was purely temporary. He held no confidence in the permanence of it. And because of this, knowing that a New York born whim might upset at any moment his good intentions and ambitions for the terriory, he took on the mental attitude of a "floater," and acted accordingly.

In the last two seasons this costly and intolerable condition has been reduced to a minimum of frequency. And with the coming of stability and assurance the opportunities for exchange managers have become greater and more tangible.

There is no branch of the industry which offers more for the future than distribution, and it is to this department that the business must look for the big work of balancing accounts between the theatres and the studios so that neither the exhibitors or the producers suffer in the evolution that is upsetting precedents and establishing an entirely new relationship.

The successful manager of the future is one who will produce his quota of rentals for his home office and still retain the good will and confidence of his accounts. It is no small task. Higher production costs, more elaborate pictures, demand bigger rentals.

To do this, satisfactorily to all parties concerned, will require tact and diplomacy, the nth degree of sales ability, and a thorough knowledge of all phases of distribution and exploitation.

It is an obvious inference that the prices paid for this greater ability must be in proportion to the intensified efficiency that is required. It will become more apparent than ever that a capable manager whose salary is $300 a week will be a less costly executive than an ordinary manager who is paid but $50 a week.

MUSICIANS OUT

Ohio Harmony Men Seem to Want to Run Theatres

MUSICIANS connected with photoplay houses in Tolelo, Ohio, aren't working these days, and as a consequence, every organ, piano or any other musical instrument used to entice the public into the theatre is silent as the night.

The reason for all this is that the musicians all went out on a strike last week. But strange to say, it is neither higher wages nor shorter hours that they are demanding.

All they want to do is to tell the managers of the theatres how their places of business should be conducted.

It appears that in Toledo, the first-run motion picture theatres use organs for their music. This, of course, necessitates only the employment of one or more organists. Now there are a lot of musicians in Toledo other than organists, who would like to play in the movie houses, so they demanded this strike stating that all first-run movies employ full orchestras in the future.

National Board of Review Votes Against Political Censors

The Annual Conference of City Officials of Eastern Cities and the National Board of Review has been brought to a close with the adoption of resolutions against motion picture censorship of a political character. The National Board sends its official weekly bulletin to the principal cities in 38 states, besides conducting a general information service with regard to motion picture productions. The conference, which was in session two days the end of October, was called for the purpose of enabling the National Board to come into closer touch with public opinion in various communities throughout the country as expressed by their respective officials in charge of motion picture regulation. During the conference the officials had the opportunity of listening to the points of view of men actually engaged in motion picture production.

Mr. Rupert Hughes, D. W. Griffith, Walter W. Irwin and Secretary William P. Capes addressed the conference on various phases of the industry in their relation to the work of censorship and the value of the motion picture amid present day complications and problems.

New Exhibitor Organization Backed by Pathe

THE Associated Exhibitors, Inc., has been organized in New York by the law firm of O'Brien, Malivensky and Driscoll to provide a circuit reaching 32 principal theatres in the United States.

Pathe Exchange will be the distributing organization, it is announced, and Charles Pathe and his associates will financially underwrite the new company.

Associated Exhibitors, Inc., will produce pictures of its own and will also buy big open market specials.

Exhibitors representing 32 districts will be franchise holders for the showing of the pictures, and will share in all profit.

"National Theaters" the Latest

Exhibitors get Another Chance to Join Cooperative Movement — Lewis J. Selznick the Head

THE news that film men have been expecting ever since C. R. Seelye left the storm-tossed United to join Lewis J. Selznick broke last week with the announcement of the formation of "National Picture Theaters, Inc."

The announcement from the publicity department declares the new corporation to be "a mutualized organization with its membership and directorate consisting of the influential representative exhibitors of America." None of the "influential exhibitors" are named in the first announcement.

The balance of the facts in the announcement can be summed up as follows: "The President, Vice-Presidents and Directors of the new organization will serve without salary; National Theaters will make its own pictures, but also, as opportunity offers, purchase complete pictures; distribution, both in this country and abroad, will be through Select exchanges."

The prospectus sent to exhibitors in connection with the offering of the preferred stock for sale contains more facts. Following are some quotations:

"National Picture Theaters, Inc., has been organized under the laws of the State of Delaware, with a capital stock consisting of 50,000 shares of non-voting 7% cumulative preferred stock (preferred not only as to dividends, but as to assets as well) of the par value of $100 each (aggregate total of $5,000,000) and 100,000 shares of common stock (no par value).

"Lewis J. Selznick has purchased the entire issue of common stock for $100,000 in cash. None but motion picture exhibitors may subscribe to preferred shares and only in connection with a franchise for the exhibition of pictures issued by National Picture Theaters, Inc.

"The preferred stock will be sold at par. Out of his holdings of common stock Mr. Selznick will give one share of common stock with each share of preferred stock purchased.

"Mr. Selznick will accept dividends only on as many shares of common stock as shall be held by exhibitors, waiving dividends on the balance."

The new organization would thus have five millions in the treasury, paid by exhibitors for the preferred stock, and the one hundred thousand paid by Mr. Selznick for the entire common stock issue. Control of the voting stock would be divided equally between Selznick and the exhibitors who had received one share of the common for each hundred dollars worth of preferred they purchased.

The prospectus goes on to say:

"The officers of the company will consist of a President, Vice-President, additional Vice-Presidents selected solely from exhibitor stockholders, thirty directors of whom twenty-six shall be exhibitor stockholders, and an executive committee of the Board of Directors. There will be no executive salaries.

"To insure the active co-operation and whole-hearted support of influential representative exhibitors who become Vice-Presidents or Directors of National Picture Theaters, Inc., and also to assure the main body of exhibitor members that these officers are financially committed to the success of the enterprise, each of such Vice-Presidents and Directors (according to the importance of their territories) will subscribe to no less than one hundred shares and no more than two hundred and fifty shares of the preferred stock."

The President and first Vice-President are unnamed, the balance of the officers and directors, with the exception of four of the latter, are selected from among the exhibitors who can afford the purchase of from ten to twenty-five thousand dollars worth of the preferred stock. The prospectus sheds no light on the manner of selection of the four directors who are not required to be exhibitor-members.

Other interesting sections of the prospectus read:

"No franchise contract will be valid unless executed in New York City by the President or First Vice-President of the Corporation."

"Either party may cancel on sixty days' written notice."

"For the benefit of stockholders and in order to establish just but profitable prices for non-member exhibitors, each picture owned by the corporation will be assessed on a basis of twice the actual cost of the negatives.

"While it will be the policy of National Picture Theaters, Inc., to make its own productions wherever the advantage of the organization can be so served, from time to time as opportunity offers, completed pictures of exceptional merit and distinction will be purchased."

THIS AND THAT

B. J. Myers, manager of the Gold Theatre, Chicago, Ill., announces that this theatre has been taken over by Samuel Abrahams, who still retains the Waverly Theatre in the same city.

Steps are being taken by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry to organize a post of the American Legion for eligible candidates engaged in the motion-picture business. Full information may be secured by communicating with the offices of the Association located in the Times Building, New York.

Harry L. Knapp, chairman of the State Board of Censors of Pennsylvania, has adopted a system for the board whereby each film approved by the board will have only one approval seal instead of two. This plan, it is said, will save to the State thousands of dollars annually. A monthly bulletin will also be issued containing a list of the changes ordered by the board for the preceding month and the names of the subjects disapproved.

The Crescent Amusement Co. of Nashville has leased a building, occupied at present by Miss Nell O'Bryan & Co., a millinery establishment. The company plans to erect a modern theatre on the ground floor, beginning work about January 1st.

The Dixie Amusement Company will tear down the old Metropolitan Theatre in Memphis in the near future, according to reports, and will erect a colored house, costing, it is said, nearly $100,000.

The S. Rankin Drew Post of the American Legion plans to celebrate Armistice Day in a fitting manner. Frank McCoy, stage manager of the Empire Theatre, is to be master of the ceremonies of the occasion. Raymond Hitchcock, the U. S. Navy Band, Roy Atwell, John Cumberland, U. S. Navy Quartette, an act from the N. Y. Hippodrome, Norman Sper, Irving Berlin, U. S. Glee Club Quarette and a motion picture showing how Amistice Day, 1918, was celebrated in the little town of New York, will be some of the program, it is said.

Willard, branch manager, this week is moving its offices from temporary quarters in the Consumers Building to the seventh floor of the Film Exchange Building, 207 South Wabash Ave. The entire floor has been handsomely fitted up by the Realart and their distributing agency for the district will be maintained there.

"CONFESSION" OPENS

Well Received at Premier in Boston, Wires Brand

THE premier of "Confession" was given at Symphony Hall, Boston, November 3, and according to dispatches from Joe Brandt, received a wonderful reception, exhibitors and State-right men predicting great success for the feature, which is said to give Henry Walthall his greatest film role.

The Alhambra Theatre of Ellwood, Indiana, has been acquired from Don Burley by J. H. Fihe. This puts Mr. Fihe, for whom Frank Mackey is manager, in control of all the Ellwood Theatres, with the exception of the Princess. The Fihe interests recently acquired the Colonial, which has been renamed, Baby Grand, and the Grand, which burned a short time ago, is being rebuilt with a capacity of 1,350 seats. As J. A. Humphrey, the veteran Vitagraph salesman acted as intermediary in the Alhambra transaction, it is safe to say that Vitagraph films will be given prominence on the programs of the Fihe houses.

A real life romance of the Moving Picture Theaters has had a happy culmination in the marriage of C. A. Seitz, manager of the Palace Theatre at Highland Park, Ill., to the lady manager of his theater located at Troy, Ill. The two theatres will have the unusual distinction from now on of being under the old and new management at the same time.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Chicago First National Office, has returned from a five weeks' trip through Illinois and reports conditions abnormal, but abnormal in favor of the moving picture exhibitors, and predicts that this will be the biggest year in the history of the industry. Mr. Weiss also says that this was the biggest trip in a business way that he has ever made and broke all records on a dollar and cents basis.

William McNamar, owner of the Rex Theater at Virden, Ill., has moved into his new 1,500-seat house, also called the Rex. The old structure will be torn down.

Frank Thielan is having plans drawn for new theaters which he proposes to erect at Elgin and Bloomington, Ill.

Jaxon Brothers, owners of the Opera House at Bushnell, Ill., have purchased the Gem Theater and are operating it while the Opera House is being wrecked to make room for a new and modern theater which they are planning.

All Southern California Houses Hit by Prosperity Wave

Perhaps the best indication by which to judge the business of theatres in Los Angeles and the Southern California territory, is by the fact that every theatre is now being successfully operated, and theatres are selling for prices two and even three times as much as they could have been purchased for one year ago. These statements, of course, refer to the suburban houses, and those of the smaller towns in California.

In all there are about 100 theatres in the city of Los Angeles showing motion pictures, and up until six or seven months ago, it was not unusual for at least fifteen per cent of these theatres to be closed a portion of the time. In fact, about fifteen per cent of the houses were looked upon as trading stock which changed hands very frequently. This condition does not seem to exist to-day and report from the owners indicate that all are making money.

One year ago, a theatre on Central Avenue was sold for $5,500, and this week the owner refused $15,000 for the house. Another instance which illustrates the prices being offered for theatres, was the purchase by a well-known exhibitor of a suburban theatre for $12,000, which could have been bought a year ago for three or four thousand dollars.

Directors' Assn. Hold Meeting

Messrs. Haas and Seessel of F. P.—Lasky Deliver Interesting and Instructive Addresses

AT the meeting of the Motion Picture Director's Association, held at 234 West 55th Street, Tuesday evening, addresses were delivered by Robert Haas and Charles Seessel, of the Art and Technical Department of the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. President George Irving was in the chair and the following members of the association were present: Fred Thompson, George B. Seitz, John S. Robertson, Kenneth Webb, Walter Edwards, George Sargent, Charles Giblyn, S. E. V. Taylor, J. Gordon Edwards, J. Searle Dawley, John Adolphi, Perry Vekroff, C. J. Williams and Ashley Miller.

After the regular business of the association was disposed of, President Irving introduced Mr. Haas, who spoke in part as follows:

"There are a great many definitions of the term architecture, but the best I think is this: 'Architecture is good construction made beautiful, reflecting the character of people.' The architecture of the Greeks expressed the sentiment and culture of their civilization. The architecture of the Romans stood for organization, formulæ, authority, etc. Mediæval architecture was the expression of religion and the sentiment of the infinite. America itself is the great melting pot of the races, so American architecture to-day is the fusing of many styles.

"A room should be designed to live in, with a sympathetic regard for the individual refinements of those who make it a home. Aside from a few things such as camera angles and photographic color values, lights, etc., motion picture rooms should be designed with exactly the same thought as an architect or decorator has for his clients, the thing uppermost in his mind being character."

Mr. Seessel's address was along more technical lines, "We meet the director," he said in part, "and the scheme laid out for the picture set is turned over to Mr. Haas. I make six blue-prints of the set. These show the number of pieces of furniture, character, size, shape, design, etc., and give the proportions needed; also lighting, fixtures, floor coverings to make a complete room. This is then submitted to the directors for their approval, as we believe in giving the director everything that he desires."

War Film of Catholic Council

F. P.—Lasky Produces Film, Due for Release Soon, Showing Services of Nat'l Catholic Council

THE Famous Players-Lasky Corporation announces that it has under production a picture entitled "American Catholics in War and Reconstruction." The picture is being prepared by the Educational Department of the corporation under the supervision of the Motion-Picture Committee of the National Catholic War Council with the co-operation of the K. of C. Committee on War Activities.

The picture epitomizes in narrative form the patriotic services of the hierarchy, clergy, the National War Council, the Knights of Columbus and the Catholic laity generally during the period of the War, according to the reports received. The film is said to be divided into five sections, the first three of which deal with the material just cited. The concluding portions deal with the "after-the-war" services of the Catholic Committee on Special War Activities, including the aims of reconstruction, vocational guidance, and the caring for the sick and wounded.

On behalf of the National Catholic War Council the preparation of the film is being looked after by the Motion Picture Committee composed of Charles A. McMahon, Chairman; Robert G. Drady, Frederick A. Sweet and Michael Williams. Mr. Sweet is doing the actual work of editing and outlining of the film at the Educational Department studios of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. According to reports, the actual work of production should be completed within the next week, and it is anticipated that the picture will be circulated among Catholic churches, parishes and clubs in the near future.

Rothapfel Works on Alterations in Calfornia Theatre

When the California Theatre in Los Angeles passes into the hands of its new owner, Samuel Goldwyn, on November 2d, it will be closed for a short time in order that decorations, alterations and other changes may be made to improve the theatre according to the ideas of Samuel L. Rothapfel, who arrived in Los Angeles October 22d, to assume the work of supervising the opening of the house under Mr. Goldwyn's management.

Although no statements have been issued in the West by any of the parties concerned, it is definitely understood that Fred Miller will continue as general manager and Roy Miller, who has been in charge of advertising and publicity will continue in that capacity. Mr. Rothapfel's work will be concluded in eight or ten weeks, according to his statement shortly after arriving in Los Angeles.

New Motion-Picture Theatre for Manchester, Tennessee

Cowan Oldham, of McMinville, Tenn., has recently purchased the interest of John A. Chumberlev in the Colonial Theatre at Manchester Tenn. The Colonial will be closed for about two weeks, during which time the theatre will be remodeled and an entire new outfit installed. It will then be reopened under new management.

Catholic War Council's Program of Film Civic Educational Campaign

On the eve of the initiation of its nation-wide Civic Education campaign, the National Catholic War Council has definitely announced a schedule of films to be used in connection with the work. In accordance with the contract recently concluded with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation the Council advocates the showing of clean comedies, pictures inspiring patriotism, offering vocational guidance of presenting subjects of educational value.

Each Civic Educational program will comprise 12 separate and complete entertainments, one entertainment to be given weekly until the series is completed. Five reels of entertaining motion pictures will be shown each evening, as follows: (a) a patriotic picture; (b) a travelogue; (c) an industrial or combination magazine feature covering subjects of educational or scientific interest; (d) a safety first, sanitation, recreation or better health picture and (e) a short dramatic or clean comedy picture.

The wholesome comedies of the Paramount-Drew pictures, the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, the Paramount Magazine and educational films will be available for the work of Catholic parishes in their educational program as a result. The probability exists that even broader limits may be attained in the consummation of these plans.

"American Catholics in War and Reconstruction," the film which has been prepared by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation under the supervision of the National Catholic War Council, depicting the wartime and reconstruction activities of the Catholic church, will be circulated among Catholic parishes as the initial offering of the Civic Education program.

"Hi" West Joins Lynch Forces

Another newspaperman has entered the motion picture industry. This time it is C. H. ("Hi") West, for seven years a city editor and a Sunday editor on the Minneapolis Tribune.

Mr. West has joined S. A. Lynch Enterprises and is with Charles G. Branham at Dallas, Tex. He read copy on the Chicago Examiner for a year and previous to that was a reporter in Philadelphia, Camden, St. Paul, Sioux City, Omaha, Duluth; was assistant city editor on the Spokane Chronicle and reporter on the San Francisco Chronicle.

The Lynch Enterprises expect to profit by the wide newspaper experiences of "Hi" West and is surrounding itself with publicity and exploitation fortifications in the shape of an efficient staff headed by Charles G. Branham.

New York F.I.L.M. Club to Give Dinner Evening of Nov. 8th

The New York F.I.L.M. Club will give a "Beeksteak Dinner" on Saturday night, November 8th, at Healy's, 66th street and Broadway. Tickets can be secured from any of the managers of the various exchanges. This is expected to be an unusual event and a large attendance is anticipated.

News of the Country Via Correspondence

CLEVELAND

Robert McLaughlin, author, playwright and scenarioist, is in the midst of a two-reel propaganda film to be used to help fill the coffers of impoverished Moses, Cleveland, when the city's community chest drive for $5,000,000 is started. The theme of the film is based on an allegory, showing an old miser in the hands of Faith, Hope and Charity, with Charity pointing out the city's empty chest, and Faith and Hope pleading for help.

The Rialto, one of the biggest photoplay houses on the West Side, opened its doors to the public at noon Saturday, October 18. This theatre will accommodate 1300 patrons comfortably. Everything is of the most modern, up-to-date type.

The Shaw-Hayden, also a 1200 seat photoplay house opened its doors to the public for the first time October 25. The Shaw-Hayden is the biggest neighborhood theatre to be built on the East Side. Nothing has been spared to make it complete both in structure, equipment, decorations or program. J. J. Mellert, who also runs the Fulton theatre, Cleveland, is manager of the new Shaw-Hayden.

W. H. Hoffman returned to Cleveland last week, after an absence of several years, to open a branch Pioneer exchange. The space formerly occupied by Hallmark, was selected and J. K. Mooney

Maurice Levenson, a film man whose experience in the industry have taken him from Dallas to New York and back to Cleveland, is now with Dave Warner in the Dave Warner Films. Levison has just been mustered out of the Canadian overseas service.

B. S. Gorby has recently purchased the Belmar theatre, Sebring, Ohio, and will give it his personal supervision.

H. E. Horwitz, owner of the Olympia theatre, Cleveland, has just closed a deal for the purchase of the new Rialto theatre, which is in the course of construction in East Akron, Ohio, directly opposite the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company. The house which will cost $250,000 when completed, will have all the latest building and projection equipment, with accommodations for 1200 people.

DETROIT

Frank W. Gebhardt, president of the Detroit Board of Motion Picture Exchange managers will represent the local organization at the meeting to be held in New York October 29, to form a national association.

I. Lesserman, of Chicago, has leased the Grand Circus theatre here. It is a downtown house, seating about 700. Plans are underway to redecorate and otherwise improve it. A Universal picture, "Common Property," goes in there for the week of October 26.

Howard O. Pierce has been again appointed publicity director for the John K. Kunsky theatres. Thomas Moule will manage the Madison and Adams theatres, with Clyde Wixom acting as assistant at the Adams.

The Pioneer Film Corporation has opened offices on the ground floor of the film building with Art. Blankmeyer in charge.

BUFFALO

The Star theatre which under its new holding company has been showing feature films for several weeks went into its new policy of popular vaudeville and picture, commencing Monday, October 27. The opening picture is Herbert Rawlinson in "A Dangerous Affair." The Griffith repertoire season was not a success at the Star.

Henry E. Wilkinson, manager of the Realart exchange, reports several bookings for the first production to be released by the company, "Soldiers of Fortune," and is planning to take several exhibitors to New York to see the picture.

Buffalo newspapers are beginning to cut down theatrical readers and are also eliminating special stories given some of the leading houses as midweek notices. This is especially noticed in The Evening News, the Courier and the Enquirer. Rates, of course, remain the same. They are almost the highest in the country.

Double feature programs are being shown at the Regent theatre, a neighborhood house every night. Billy West, the manager, says the patrons like it but admits it's an awful job booking films.

Al. Becker will show pictures across from the Buffalo Evening News, Election night. Mr. Becker who is manager of the Buffalo Theatre Supply Company has had charge of this Election night film show for several years.

John Fenyvessy, bother of Paul Fenyvessy and son of Albert A., theatrical magnate, took charge of the Star theatre, commencing Monday, October 20 as managing director. Paul has been acting as manager and will continue as assistant to his brother.

The new theatre being built in the South Park district by the Hall-Haney interests will be named the Piccadilly, it is learned. The house is fast nearing completion and will have cost $100,000 when completed.

A story was printed in the local newspapers last week that there will be a new 1,000 room Hotel Statler built on Niagara Square. This was good news to the Star and Shea theatre managements both of which houses would benefit greatly from the project. It is said the structure will cost $7,500,000.

That the Mark-Strand Company will build the largest of a new chain of theatres in Buffalo with a seating capacity of 4,000 cannot be confirmed here. If true, Buffalo will have two of the finest motion picture theatres in the world next year, with the completion of Shea's Metropolitan and this house.

SEATTLE

H. A. Johnson Company, Inc., announce to the trade that the officers of the company have been elected and it is their desire that the trade know that there will be no interruptions in the service of the house because of Mr. Johnson's death. Mrs. H. A. Johnson, is now president of the concern and Mr. L. E. Johnson has been added as salesman. All business will, as heretofore, be conducted under the able management of Mr. Ray Kelsall.

Since Mr. J. M. Dunn, has resigned as cashier of the Seattle Select office, as he has left for Philadelphia, Mr. O. B. Hergert has been appointed to his place. Mr. Hergert is well known in both lumber and film circles of the Northwest and has been rising rapidly in film circles since he has entered them.

Harry Hoyle who has been associated with some big picture concerns for the past seven years has been appointed assistant manager and booker in the Seattle Select branch.

PORTLAND

A special exhibitors' viewing held by Manager Sol Baum, of the Universal Film Exchange, in Portland, Friday, October 17, on the new serial, "The Great Radium Mystery," brought out a general attendance of local exhibitors and exhibitors from neighboring cities, and bore fruit in immediate bookings.

James Grant Kelly, former Portland newspaperman, has gone to California to manage the California exploitation for the Cloverio Film project, a local concern. He will also handle publicity for J. Warren Kerrigan.

"Doc" C. S. Crews, of the Liberty theatre, Walla Walla, Washington, has booked the Stage Women's War Relief Series to his house to begin the latter part of October, and will feature them as a special attraction. The Majestic theatre, in Portland, runs these features monthly on a double bill, giving the Stage Women's two-reel equal importance in the advertising, with the other feature.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

McVoy Says Film Service Must Drop

Interesting Letter on Admissions by Ross A. McVoy, Manager of the Morgan Theatre, Auburn, N. Y.

Some people who read this article might conclude that Mr. McVoy was born with a hatred for film exchanges or that his liver was bad the day he wrote this article.

Since we happen to know him personally, and right here we can tell you that there isn't a better showman in his neck of the woods, we can assure you that neither is the case.

McVoy likes to buy good films as cheaply as he can, which is laudable. He hates to come across for service not so much because he just doesn't like to give up the money but for the reason that at his prices of admission which he claims he doesn't dare raise, he can't afford to pay more than he has been paying.

In this we believe he is not alone, that the majority of the exhibitors in the size city Mr. McVoy inhabits are the ones who have been hit the hardest by the producers who have insisted on more money for their productions.

To our personal knowledge Mr. McVoy and also thousands of other exhibitors in the medium sized towns have played the biggest productions of the past year at the admission prices now in vogue at the Morgan. Is it any wonder that managers of McVoy's class view any raise in rentals with alarm? We think not.

Read what Mr. McVoy has to say, see if you are in the same boat with him and then write us about your exhibitor problem.

Must Get More

OUR prices are, afternoons, 11 cents straight, and evenings, children, 11 cents and adults 15 cents and we pay the war tax. Are we going to raise prices? I think that nights should be 11 cents for children and 17 cents for adults.

It is absolutely necessary that prices should be that amount in our theatre to make any money. Film rentals are boosted in Auburn, as a rule, 100 per cent. and in one instance a star whose two days' runs were $50 for two days, the writer was forced to pay $225 for three days and will no doubt only be able to use the picture two more days. It is highway robbery. It is uncalled for, and believe me, some day these same people are going to be beggars in the street if they keep up such tactics.

Our admission prices will positively be standard.

Can't Juggle Them

No successful showman can continue to "juggle" prices and succeed in this town or any other town where he has competition which is standard. Furthermore every theatre in a city of this size has a steady patronage. Those people should — but they do not, all read daily papers. They learn the price of admission and then come prepared to pay it. Some time you raise your prices, you advertise, you think, in every known way, but all your people do not learn to know it and some family comes down with the usual fare and they are surprised at the advance. Not only that, but they have no more money with them even if they wanted to pay it. They go to the other house, perhaps they see something they like and go again — good-bye — you have lost a steady patron even though you fattened your box office on that one play. What's the answer for the future? Watch your receipts — they will soon tell you. It's the business that stays is the business that pays and we are going to exert every effort to hold what we have.

The exchange man sends his representative out to the exhibitor with a lot of "con" about you must get more money, and then they turn around and expect you to hand it right back to them. And the exhibitor as a rule, including myself in some instances, does it and smiles even though he knows it's a knock-out punch and below the belt at that.

I'll gamble right now that before April first you will see the film rentals reduced fifty per cent. Any takers? Those who will want to say "no, it won't come down" are those poor "boobs" who fell for the first high rentals. Yes, I was one. I booked one concern's output and paid heavy dough for it and have been treated like a dog since the day I signed the contract and I do not mind saying that when my contracts expire with this company they will not play any pictures in our theatre unless they quote prices within reason.

It's an outrage. Film salesmen come through and take contracts for more than an honest exhibitor can pay and then go to a vaudeville house and because they see a few extra dollars they place their service there. Then they kick because the legitimate motion picture theatre cannot pay their prices. The time is not far distant when a great majority of the exhibitors will combine and do away with this cutthroat manner of doing business.

Thank the Lord the writer is tied up for 1919–1920 almost to a play-date with all but one line of concerns who have treated him pretty white, but nevertheless it's a rotten state of affairs.

The public has always looked to the motion picture like the working man did to his glass of beer. The beer is taken away, and the motion picture prices have been elevated to such a high standard of rentals that the poor people who were the supporters have turned from the motion picture theatre.

Admitting that everything is higher — sure it is; but has the completed product warranted anywhere near the increase in rentals which are asked? Receipts have not doubled and tripled, etc., yet rentals prices in some instances are five and six times what they were and for no bigger drawing powers. After the above, some bird will say: "Well, Mack, you know so much, what would you suggest?" What would I do? I would get producers, exchange managers and exhibitors and put all the releases through a film clearing house owned and operated by all the producing companies. Let each company have its own representative and a hundred and fifty or less exchanges in the country will do the trick. Let each representative cover his territory twice a year or more if necessary and make selling film a commercial, legitimate business. Play square and the answer is bigger and easier profits. Think of the expense that could be saved in the road men alone. Where do you find them most of the time? In the theatre helping the manager exploit his show? Not by a long shot, but hanging around the hotels playing cards or lapping up the remainder of Old John Barleycorn.

The waste must be eliminated before grand success can come. Somebody get at the bottom of the waste and you'll soon hear the boys all shouting good times, good luck and come again.

Sincerely,
R. A. McVOY,
Manager, The Morgan Theatre.

"Why, my good man," he asked, "what is this for?"

"War tax," murmured the soul gloomily as it passed through the heavenly gates.

Your Idea and Ours

WE felt quite sure that "Broken Blossoms" would get some good advertising, since exhibitors know that they have a great picture and will feel that the production justifies spreading themselves, and this display by the Rialto of Tacoma, one of the Jensen and Von Herberg houses is evidence that we were correct. This was a full page framed by Charles R. Rordigers, and was printed in three colors, a very artistic effect being achieved, especially in the face cuts of the two players within the pictured cup of the flower. By using one of the stills which shows Donald Crisp in the character of Battling Burrows, the three important characters of the film are brought to the attenion of the reader. There is a good line of selling talk on each side of the scene cut and the Griffith and title line are both nicely displayed.

We call this the best display to come to our attention on this picture. It is big space well utilized.

The banner show day of the year is approaching: Thanksgiving.

THE Hippodrome of Baltimore has taken a scene still from the very first scenes of "The Dragon Painter" and made a cut from it.

This is a peculiar sort of an offering, one of great scenic beauty and artistry and by the use of the cut shown the Hippodrome ad man has told his readers of this fact without laying emphasis on it in words. The absence of selling talk concerning this feature may be forgiven since the story is extremely slender, and since Hayakawa's followers are never so particular concerning what his pictures are about. This ad strikes us as being unusual and a sure attention attracter since the scene cut is so large and the reading matter so short. There are few pictures we would recommend a so restricted word announcement but we are inclined to give this one a good rating nevertheless. In size this was four columns wide and eight inches deep, not a very large display yet one which stood out on the page above a number of larger more complicated ads.

FOR a city of its size no better examples of good advertising come into the office than from Wichita, Kansas, and usually the displays which we admire from this source are the work of the Palace, as is this one.

As has been the rule on this picture the Palace ad man has given plenty of space to the listing with personal photographs, of the notable cast which had roles in "Her Kingdom of Dreams." In addition, a very good cut of Miss Stewart is given place in the top right hand corner. It serves to balance the display and attract attention. The Palace has a very good name cut. We like the selling talk used in this one too. It doesn't promise any wonderful picture but does suggest the romantic drama one would naturally expect from the title of the feature. The inference of its entertainment value may be gained from the splendid cast of characters listed. We would call this one of the most tasteful displays we have yet seen on this latest Anita Stewart picture. In size the ad was four columns wide by 14 inches deep.

HERE is a "Checkers" display by the Schenley theatre of Pittsburg which really is much too crowded yet which does not appear so since all the reading matter and cuts have been tied together so nicely.

Aside from the arrangement of cuts and selling talk this is constructed the same way as nearly all the ads we have seen on this feature. Picture of the horse, picture of "Checkers," emphasis placed on the spectacular stuff in the various scenes, etc.

However since this is the proper way to exploit this film, this display is entitled to commendation.

Attention is called to the fact that the Schenley has told Pittsburg people the time the feature will be screened. This is important nowadays when story counts in screen entertainment.

The Schenley also advertises a parking place for cars. This is the first instance of this service that has come to our attention.

Samson's strength was in his hair, and Mary Pickford's curls draw like a mustard plaster.

IT has remained for the Majestic (Columbus, Ohio) ad man to dig up another exploitation angle for "Lombardi, Ltd." in addition to the many we saw and others have seen in advertising it. What we refer to is billing Virginia Caldwell. Now, Miss Caldwell won't mean much to movie fans but they do know who Howard Chandler Christy is if for no other reason than his Liberty Loan posters and you can bet they will want to see what his model looks like. We would call this feature of the billing worthy of mention in every ad on "Lombardi, Ltd."

The display is also a bit out of the ordinary and certainly is framed just the way it should be on this picture, since the big bet is the title and the fact that it is from the celebrated Morosco play. We have one small criticism to make and that is that this ad does not state that it is the picture version of the play which will be shown at the Majestic and is so worded that one might infer that it was the stage play which is being advertised. However, since Columbus people no doubt know that the Majestic is a picture house this may be passed as too small a matter to devote space for criticism.

We like the Majestic selling talk and the way the ad has been framed below the title line. In fact, this is an ideal style for a space of this size and shape, five columns by eight inches. If you are going to play "Lombardi" you can not do better than to copy this display for your newspaper ad.

WE use quite a lot of the Strand's and New Garick's (Minneapolis) ads, not because we admire them so much but because they are different and therefore entitled to space since we attempt to give displays attention which are out of the ordinary rut for some reason or other.

Personally we don't think so much of this one yet it certainly would attract attention since it is bold and of good size, three columns by fourteen inches.

We sort of think that the basis of this cut with the figure pointing to the world aflame come from the producers. At any rate it seems to us as if it is a first rate idea badly carried out.

The figure is almost a caricature and certainly does not look like Frank Keenan and the suggestion of a blazing earth is not very convincing. We do like the display of the star's name and the billing of the title, "The World Aflame," however.

As to subject matter this is excellent, much better than the way the talk has been displayed.

This rates as good advertising, perhaps an average with the added recommendation of being somewhat different as we have stated.

Films suggested for strike benefit shows: Window cleaners, "The Climbers;" Firemen, "The World Aflame;" Barkeepers, "When Bear Cat Went Dry."

IF you want to frame one along different lines for "The Miracle Man" here is a display used by the Regent, Wichita, Kansas, which is all of that. In this the four most popular stars or at least four very popular stars are quoted as to what they think of the Tucker picture. Certainly this ad will get attention and the only point involved is whether as good results are obtained from quoting anyone, even such famous people, as you would to use a good scene cut from the many provided by the producers and add to it a good line of selling talk about the play. That is for you to decide. We would suggest however that here is a great ad for use after the engagement is well under way and the merits of the production have been extolled until there is nothing new to say about it.

A Good Idea for Both Health and Publicity

GOOD ideas often have their birth out in the "tanks." Here is one for Easley, S. C., according to the newspaper directory boasts a trifle less than 3,000 people. The following is a clipping from the Easley Progress and will explain itself:

"In view of the fact that the country is liable to be visited with an epidemic of influenza again this fall, it becomes every person who has the management of a school, church, theatre, cotton mill, or other place where a crowd of people congregate, to have the buildings well ventilated before and after every such congregation. It would also be well for people to ventilate their homes by leaving the doors and windows open as much as possible.

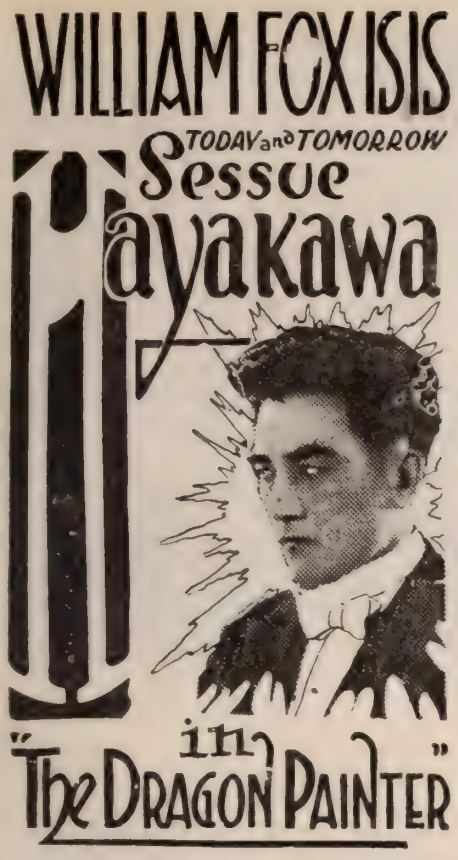
How Exhibitors Advertise



THIS little single column, four-inch ad is mighty artistic and where small space is used so that selling talk is prohibited we would say quite a masterpiece. Personally we like the hand-drawn ad, but do not use them so extensively for these pages as we would, if the majority of exhibitors were able to do anything along these lines, as we figure that the greatest value "Your ideas and Ours" has to the exhibitor is to show him a good display on some particular picture he will run and thereby help him to frame his own ad when his engagement begins. This display is a style effected by the Isis, that of mere announcements which may or may not be the correct policy, as against a more expensive and liberal advertising campaign plan.

"Our" pictures: "The Hushed Hour," "The Witching Hour," "The Eleventh Hour," "One Hour," "The Final Hour," "The Mystic Hour," "Her Hour," "The Trembling Hour."

HERE is a good one from Baltimore, the home of the New Wizard, which begins with a bang up good attention attracting line, "The Best Entertainment of the Season" and tells what "Twenty-three and a Half Hours Leave" is about in just the way it should be advertised.

There are a lot of pictures which we would hesitate in coming right out in the open and boosting the way the New Wizard man has done on this feature but according to our opinions this picture is just what has been said about it, therefore the the theatre management will need no alibis.

The use of two head cuts to introduce the two new stars is good stuff if for no other reason than that the pictures serve to brighten the appearance. We also like the way the New Wizard has announced the featured players. In our opinion one or two good pictures will put any real screen personality over with the public and these people are finds, therefore the sooner they are introduced to Baltimore fans the better. The New Wizard ad gives the added attraction about the right space, especially in the matter of the bathing girls line and also has shown good judgment in selecting some real business getter to help get the people in to see a mighty good feature picture, since we have not as yet come to the point where fans will consider the fact that a picture may be the best ever and still not have a cast composed of their favorite players. The billing the New Wizard has done on this picture, together with the added attraction, guarantees a good week for the theatre and the next time McLean and May play the house they will have a reputation.

Here is also one that we would recommend you to save as copy when you play "Twenty-three and One Half Hours Leave." In size this display was just a trifle short of a half page.

We forgot to say that — mentioning the story as a Saturday Evening Post serial and the matter is correct.

Two Advertising Novelties of Proven Merit

ONE of the office know-it-alls says these stunts are so old that they're new, which perhaps is true but nevertheless either of them is worth pulling once in the while for they do not cost much and are always sure of bringing a certain amount of results.

Arthur A. Fruedenfeld, director of publicity for the Butterfield circuit up at Battle Creek (this is no Postum story) sends in two cards which will explain themselves.

One is a tag about two by three inches, on which is printed "Your attention is arrested (this last word in bold caps much larger than the other printed matter) to the fact that." Then follows the bill at the theatre. The "arrested" tag was used on the steering wheels of cars which were parked about the streets.

The other tag is the shape and size of a theatre ticket and printed so that at first glance, it would look like a free pass to a theatre. In small letters (eight point) was printed "This is not" and then "Free Ticket" followed in bold caps. Following this line was some more eight point saying: "But you will have to" with "Admit one" in bold caps next. "Thing" in eight point was on the next line with some more selling talk concerning the program being shown at the theatre.

Mr. Fruedenfeld reports that both stunts were good business producers.

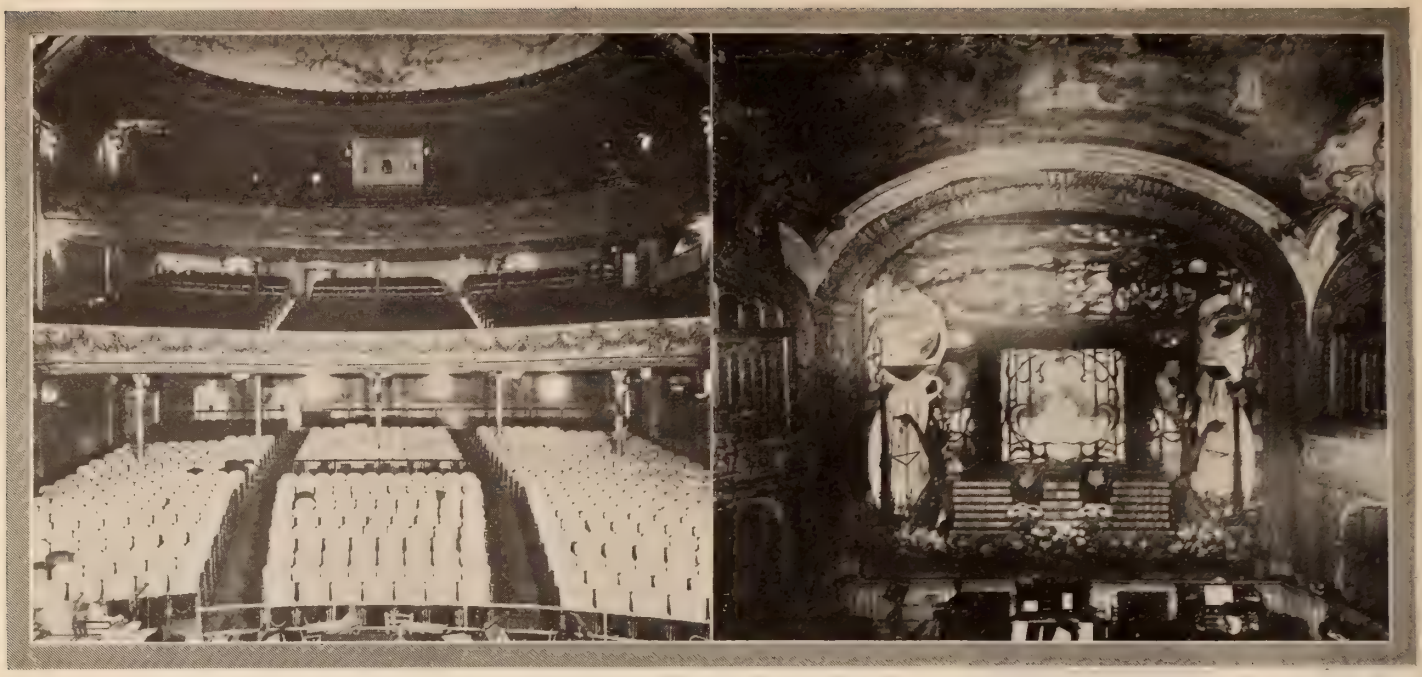
Two New Novelties from Frudenefeld

ARTHUR A. FRUDENFELD publicity director of the Buttefield circuit, with home offices at Battle Creek, Mich., has orginated two new advertising stunts which cost little and furnish some excellent publicity.

For "The Kingdom of Dreams" a little eight page phamplet was put out. On the cover page was the following: "14 reasons why we should adopt the Bolsheviki form of government," then followed on the inside pages other matter, one of which lists the fourteen reasons and leaves the space to the right where explanation of the reasons would be made, blank. Then Mr. Frudenfeld advances 17 reasons for seeing "The Kingdom of Dreams" in the seventeen star players the film boasts. There is a bit of a kick in this one in that the point of the "14 reasons" is somewhat involved. However the stunt is an attention attractor and won't make anyone "sore."

Mr. Frudenfeld's other stunt is a sheet of paper with a typewritten announcement on one side for the Regent theatre attractions and in the middle of the other side the address of "Mr. and Mrs. Kazoo, City," an imitation of a post office cancelling mark and a postage stamp cancelled. When folded and stuck together the sheet of paper looks like a sealed envelope.

It is small ideas like this which we believe are most effective in advertising a production, considering the fact that the cost is nominal.



The auditorium and stage of the New theatre, Baltimore, Louis De Hoff, manager

De Hoff, of Baltimore, Is An All-Around Showman

IT is easy to manage three theatres at one time after one has systematized his work. This is the dictum of Louis A. DeHoff, pioneer in the motion-picture field in Baltimore, who has done much to educate the people of that city to an appreciation of the photoplay and who is now manager of the New and the Garden Theatres. Mr. DeHoff has likewise been assigned to the office of managing director of the $1,500,000 playhouse which the controlling interests of these theatres plan to erect on Lexington street, Baltimore's principal shopping thoroughfare.

The use of courtesy, good advertising and hard work are all that is necessary to build up such a system, Mr. DeHoff explained when pressed for the reasons for his success. These opinions, it might be said, are worth regarding with more than passing interest because within the last five years this young man,—he is not yet 35,—has built up such a patronage for his theatres that the "S. R. O." sign makes its appearance frequently in the course of each show. He writes all the copy for his newspaper advertising and plans "ballyhoo" features, in which form of exploitation, he is unsurpassed by any other exhibitor in Baltimore. Although he has never had any training in the advertising profession, DeHoff manages to draw up adds that "pull." All of his copy is of a high artistic grade and is set off by a wide margin of white space. He was one of the first to realize the value of newspaper advertising and he set out in the DeHoff way to get the co-operation of the local newspapers. Greatly through his influence, the journals were persuaded to give much space to motion-picture news with the result that the interest of the public in the photoplay was stimulated and increased 100 per cent. It also had the effect of augmenting greatly he "pulling" power of the moving-picture ads.

The paradox of DeHoff, however, is that while he is without question, in a class by himself in manufacturing publicity by means of "ballyhoo" stunts, yet he does not believe in this form of advertising, which he says, does not appeal to the class of people to whom his theatre caters. Yet, whenever a producer fails to furnish advertising that measures up to DeHoff's peculiar standard he thinks up some original means of exploiting the film, that gathers in front of his theatres, crowds large enough to block traffic on Lexington street.

Manager L. A. De Hoff of the New theatre, Baltimore

For instance, when he was showing "Tarzan Of The Apes," he converted the lobby of the New Theatre into a jungle with a number of live monkeys hopping around in a cage before the entrance. The jungle effect was one of the most beautiful lobby displays ever seen in Baltimore.

"Louie" also shows plainly by many little examples that he follows to the letter, his rules about courtesy. For instance, on one occasion, while the writer was interviewing him, word was brought to him by one of his assistants that a woman had tripped on the carpeting on the balcony and had torn the heel from her shoe. Immediately the manager excused himself and went in person to the woman and showed her to a seat in the foyer while he dispatched an errand boy with the injured footwear to a nearby shoemaker's shop where the damage could be repaired."

"That woman paid eleven cents to see our show," he said when he returned, "and it will cost me fifty cents to have her shoe repaired, but it's worth it in the long run. She'll tell her family and all her friends about the good treatment the patrons of the New receive."

This policy is one that makes itself felt. "The patron is always right," is the first rule that New Theatre and Garden employees are requested to learn. And whenever a person has a "kick" to make they are sent to see Mr. DeHoff who settles it in a manner creditable to his reputation or if he is not present at the time, one of his subordinates will handle the matter in a manner that is in accord with his policy. They are instructed to do this and they know better than to fail.

The Linwood Doesn't Run Itself Anymore

TARKIO, isn't a city in Japan but a nice little quiet town in Missouri, where E. S. Nesbitt lives and operates the Linwood Theatre, along with two others in Nebraska.

Nesbitt didn't build the Linwood. He came along and bought out a manager who used to "run" the place.

But Mr. Nesbitt believed that instead of letting a theater run itself it should be run by the owner. Of course there was the incentive to let things run themselves because the Linwood was the only moving picture show in the town of 1,700 persons. But to let the show run itself meant death, both to the house and to the owner. And Mr. Nesbitt was not ready for his grave — as yet. No, he was very much alive.

So, he set about to let folks know that the house was not only running and catering to them but that he had something very good to show them.

For instance he is soon to run "The Red Glove." And he has a new idea for exploiting it! Here it is.

On the opening night of the picture Mr. Nesbitt is going to put up a screen on the wall across the street and show interesting scenes from the first episode on it. When the exciting parts are nearly over he will skip a part to come to another section. In order to see this picture in parts the people will be on the side of the street on which his show is located. Then, if they are interested enough to want to see more all they have to do is to turn around and walk into the show.

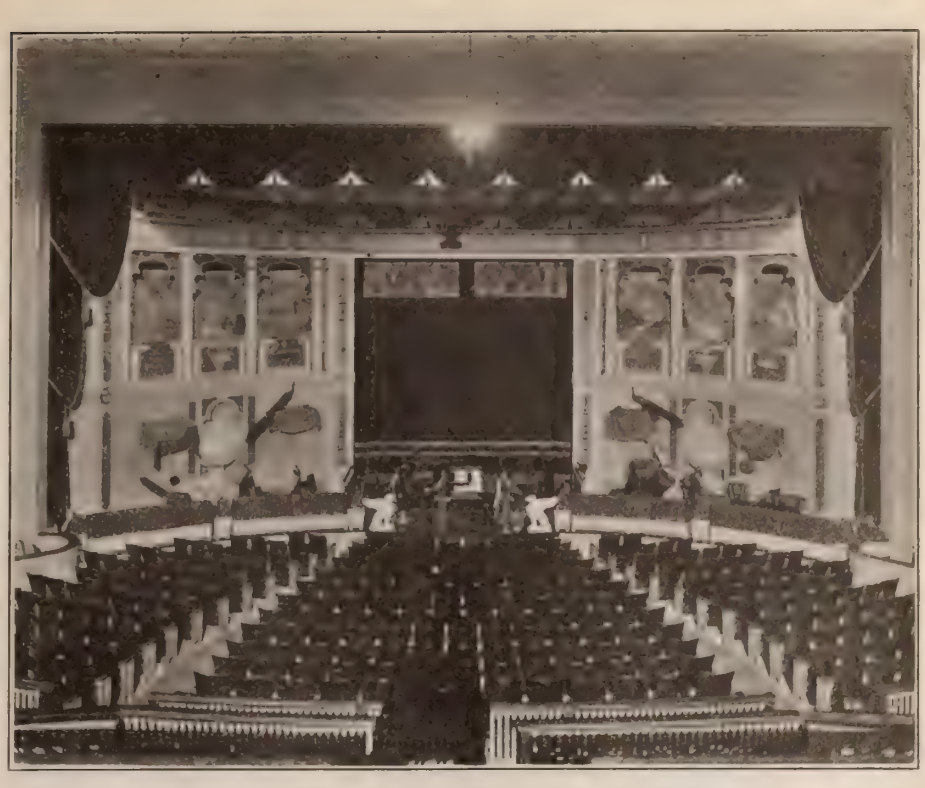
Pritchard's ad Monday, a week before the opening



Stage setting for "Sahara" at the Allen theatre, Toronto, Canada

Blazing the Trail in Canada

We have prevailed upon R. E. Pritchard of the Allen Theatre Enterpises, to write a series of articles on his advertising campaigns in his new field. Beginning on this page is the first, a detailed account of the way "Sahara" was advertised over the Allen circuit. A second article on "Happiness Week" will appear later. Others will also be announced and published.

ONE of the most remarkable campaigns in the history of motion picture exploitation is now under way throughout the Dominion of Canada with the showing of the J. Parker Read production of "Sahara." This campaign, which was planned by R. E. Pritchard, formerly director of the Exhibitors Service Bureau of the Motion Picture News and now director of advertising and publicity for the entire interests of the Allen Theatre Enterprises of Canada, and splendidly carried out as the result of the excellent co-operation of the various managers, might be said to represent the highest development of film exploitation methods.

Immediately after seeing this production at its original showing the Allens purchased "Sahara" for all of Canada, but they regarded it as too striking a production to be shown in the summer months when it could not command the fullest attendance. Therefore, its showing in Canada was held back and Mr. Pritchard selected the offering to inaugurate his new advertising policies. It was the first time in Canadian history that a general advertising campaign was created for a production and carried out through the entire Dominion. The production has now had its showing in most of the principal cities but it is booked ahead for many weeks and even the smaller communities are using a portion of the same advertising material that was employed at the "first run" showings in Canada.

Another remarkable thing has been the amount of work that the various managers of the Allen theatres have given the local exploitation of the Louise Glaum success. Advance information about the pictures and general suggestions were sent to all of the houses, but every manager seems to have set out to combine his own ideas with the best that were offered to him with the result that there was a competition that had not been arranged for. It is in a measure unfair that the efforts of all of the theatres cannot be recited here, but many of the leading houses are still to play the offering as this is written. Only the display of the Allen, Toronto, is illustrated here.

One noteworthy thing about the entire exploitation is that not a single theatre has been tempted to use and "cheap" methods in putting "Sahara" before the public and that the entire exploitation has set a new record in dignity — or rather in a perfect absorption of the spirit of the creation.

Mr. Pritchard designed every line of the advertising used in the general campaign and it was sent from the Toronto headquarters to be used in all other of the Allen theatres showing the picture and those under other ownerships who wished to rent it. For the first time in the history of Canada there was available to every exhibitor whether in the largest city or where there was only a weekly to depend upon for advertising, the fullest possible campaign ranging from full page "combination" cuts down to single column electrotypes. Here are the conclusions that led to the advertising policy adopted; as Mr. Pritchard tells it:

The Wednesday and Thursday displays used prior to the first showing. These we consider Mr. Pritchard's masterpieces

"It seems to me that the first impression that any real showman would get of 'Sahara' is the distinct 'class' of the production. That with the elements of the story itself and the magnificence of the production were the things that we tried to put over in all of our advertising, and at the same time to avoid the use of superlative.

"Here we have a story centering around a beautiful and vain woman, but one who does nothing really bad. It is essential to avoid the usual sex element here. In the first place to make this the usual picture of that sort would be to lose a great share of the appeal that is individual here. We felt sure that the way to exploit 'Sahara' was to make it appear a most unusual production without saying so. And another thing was that we were to play this offering in houses that appeal to the highest class of patronage. It was important to keep dignity in the advertising.

"Yet there is the atmoshpere of Paris and Cairo in the picture, that might be called the perfume of the exploitation— just a slight suggestion of the gayer life without ever making an appeal directly to the sensual. That was done with references to Cairo as "the city that care forgot" and similar lines that gave the spice without a hint of offense. And let me say right here that every one connected with the Allen theatre in Toronto was strikingly impressed with the number of the clergy that were attracted to this picture— more than had ever been seen at the theatre in a single week. I believe that shows that our advertising succeeded in giving just the tone to the offering that we desired.

"Another point was the lavishness of the offering. I am distinctly opposed to the superlative and it was carefully avoided. Instead of that I believe we were able to get a more convincing argument by using a single adjective in describing the production. We referred to 'Sahara' as 'the magnificent,' 'amazing,' 'astounding' and 'bewildering'— just one of these words in each display.

"Again another point worth bringing out here are the wonderful gowns worn by Miss Glaum. We wanted to get enough of this to appeal to the women and often a hint of that, or even a direct statement, was found in the advertising, but when that appeared there was generally another line that would get the male interest at the same time.

"Another point was the star. We had not played the Triangle productions in which Miss Glaum appeared, and in fact they had not been shown to any great extent in many Canadian cities, but at the same time we played the name of the star strong, and at the same time brought into every one of the displays a pose of her that would attract attention. Instead of attempting to 'introduce' her or to refer to the work that she had done in other offerings we gave her the same sort of 'class' that we gave the production and I believe that the average patron was soon persuaded by the advertising that she was an old friend.

"Two weeks before the showing we ran small advertisements in the newspapers along this line: 'Coming: Louise Glaum in "Sahara, the Magnificent."' That word we carried in most of our advertising until a great many people believed that it was part of the title.

"Our main campaign started just one week before the opening. With this five-inch, double column display we tried to focus the attention of both men and women on the campaign. the women with the top line reading 'Gowns to whet the dreams of any woman on earth' and the men with 'Set amid the gorgeous beauties of Paris in its gayest moods, and incense-laden, pleasure-loving Cairo, land of Cleopatra.'

"Tuesday we increased the space to six inches double, carried somewhat the same line for man appeal, a woman appeal with 'A dream of wonderful gowns in the glories of the Palace of the Dawn' and then a general suggestion of the story with 'She listened for a moment to the devil named Vanity; then Love shut her ears.'

"Wednesday the idea was expanded a little with the line 'Then she heard the call of Cairo; Vanity beckoned, Folly made music— dreams of raiment royal were to be real.' It was in this advertisement that we used the most telling line of the entire campaign 'A picture for beautiful wives— and the husbands of them.' This appeared in the Wednesday ad and in the Sunday displays.

"Now in this display we used the figure of Miss Glaum as she appears in the scene in the tent in the desert when the Russian makes his appearance and her old desire to captivate men comes over her, We followed this same line in the Thursday displays with the line featured 'All men swore she was amazing— and their flattery was her life.' Here there was a picture of Miss Glaum in a striking evening gown that she wears in the picture.

"But in the Friday issues we figured on reversing the appeal and here we used the line 'Till then she had worshipped Vanity's idol' and employed a picture of her with her little boy in her arms. To bring home the closer that she was a vain creature, but not essentially bad, we included the phrase: 'All women will loathe her until they begin to love her. And men? They will never forget.'

"The so-called Toronto Sunday papers in Toronto are published and distributed Saturday afternoon and so we did not use a different display in the regular Saturday afternoon issues, repeating one of the other ads. but we centered the smash in the Saturday afternoon's that had no 'Sunday' and in the 'Sundays.' Here we used space up to a full page.

"Here we used a striking figure of Miss Glaum and then across the page the line 'A picture for beautiful wives — and the husbands of them.' The sales argument that was employed here might be called sketchy, or impressionistic. Here it was: 'In the desert she heard the call of Cairo — Cairo the exotic — the city that Care forgot. Vanity beckoned her on with promises of gowns of a queen, riches of an empire. She left husband behind, her babe, vows. And the promises were kept — kept until Love called in unmistaken voice. Then fled the vanities and the sun of Great Understanding illumined Her Earth.'

"In this display we referred to 'Sahara' as the 'Unforgettable' and then clinched this argument with the sentence 'Just as words fail in its description, so is Time powerless to blot out its memory.' Word of mouth advertising is particularly important in Toronto. I have never seen a city where the individual opinion of the patrons spreads so rapidly as it does here, and for that reason we tried a little psychology, impressing on those that were to see the picture that they would be unable to describe it to their friends and depending on them to scatter the adjectives for us. I believe the results showed we figured correctly.

"It will be noted that we stayed away from the desert idea to a great extent — used it as the merest background. You will not find in a single one of our advertisements any claims that this a vast production, that it costs thousands to produce it, and the like. We could have truthfully said all of these things, but we preferred as I have said to give the 'class' in the advertising and allow these other elements to swell the word of mouth advertising.

"We kept the atmoshpere in all of the design. The doorway effect minarets and even pyramids were in evidence.

"On Monday, the day of the opening, we impressed upon the people that here was a picture they could not miss. It is strange but never-the-less true that Monday is the poorest business day of the week in Toronto. In most cities there are enough people who want to see the picture first, for the pleasure of telling others about it, if nothing more, to fill the theatre. In Toronto there seems to be a general tendency to hold back and see what the other fellow thinks. Yet we had the biggest Monday house of the year for the 'Sahara' opening.

"So on Monday we retained the teaser idea, using the line 'Then back to Pleaure's den fled Vanity, Love pursuing,' the line 'Beauty clothed in regal gowns, Paris her gayest and Cairo where none know care' and then the line, 'The picture you can never forget.' Similar advertising was used during the run, a different design each day.

"Personally I am satisfied that this picture would have done even greater business on the second week, if we did not adhere to the policy of changing each week. This is shown by the fact that the picture did big business at our other theatres later with practically no advertising. It persuades me that the sort of a campaign we used left a distinct impression."

Newspaper advertising was not the only means of exploitation used. The week before the showing of the picture "Sahara sachets" were distributed in the theatre. These were contained in small, artistically printed envelopes. An attractive lobby called attention to the offering.

Wonderful gowns worn by Miss Glaum afforded an opportunity for another piece of excellent advertising which was gained in an unusual way. The leading stores were holding style shows and the Allen arranged with the Robert Simpson company to take several hundred feet of the latest fashions on living models. This was presented as a style show and advertised by the store. This was done the week preceding the showing of the picture. The theatre was content to show this film apparently merely as a fashion exposition, but at the end of the film was a trailer reading: "The most amazing gowns ever seen in a motion picture are worn by Miss Louise Glaum in 'Sahara' at the Allen theatre next week." One can imagine that every woman who saw the style show pictures were keen to see "Sahara" on the following week.

Probably few theatres would risk such a policy. In the advertising of the Robert Simpson company there was no reference to "Sahara" and the theatre depended on the trailer alone, but results proved that sometimes just a deft touch is the most convincing.

The "Sahara" idea was further carried out in the candy and ice cream stores. Window strips, such as are usually seen around soda fountains, were provided by

Two of Harold B. Franklin's hand drawn displays which have made Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, famous

The Development of Film Advertising

By Harold B. Franklin

Managing Director Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, N. Y.

"AN observer in the field of motion picture advertising during the past few seasons, cannot but help be impressed by the splendid development of advertising in general, during the past six months," said Harold B Franklin, managing director of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, in the course of an interview with the Motion Picture News representative.

"This applies not only to exhibitors' publicity, but to the advertising originated by the producers and distributors as well," continued Mr. Franklin. "It is gratifying to note that there is not as much disregard for the use of adjectives as there has been in seasons past, although there is still a tendency to exaggerate the value of many productions.

"Great strides have been made, not only in the illustrations of the trade ads, but in the copy as well. It is a significant fact that much of the motion picture advertising is prepared for the greater part by skilled men who know the business of publicity. It is here that we find evidence of the work of highly specialized advertising experts. Not only are the ads much more attractive, but they possess copy with an advertising sense.

"Whereas trade paper ads in the past have been of practically no value to the exhibitor for either reproduction or inspiration, we now find many examples where both the illustrations and the copy can be used by the exhibitor with good results. In no small measure the columns conducted by Motion Picture News have helped to bring about this improved condition. This paper has always held that 'trade paper' advertising should be of such a character that it could be passed to the public by the exhibitor.

"The greatest development in motion picture advertising is apparent, however, in exhibitors' advertising. It is here that real progress can be really seen. Several of the prominent theatres of the country have set standards in advertising that can be held up as shining examples in the entire field of advertising.

"The modern exhibitor realizes that not only must an ad attract, but that the illustration and copy must help to sell the attraction. The ad must make patrons want to see the feature and make its appeal instantly. The copy must have style and not merely be a jumble of words. Modern day copy in most instances is a frank expression written in a forceful way.

"Advertising of the higher grade theatre always suggests unity. Although each ad may have a different appeal, the treatment suggests a definite something that instantly distinguishes the advertising of that theatre. This distinguishing feature may be a trade mark heading or a silhouette orchestra such as we use in Shea Hippodrome advertising. It may be a certain style of lettering or treatment in design. An ad should really be characteristic not only of the attraction, but of the theatre itself. The attraction is with you for a few days only—but your theatre is with you permanently.

"At Shea's Hippodrome we strive to make our ads dignified and striking. We have had greatest success with our art work when using black and white drawings. This, of course, entails additional expense but we believe that results warrant it. Every drawing in some way conveys the character of the presentation. Hand lettering and well studied margins combine to make our displays stand out among other theatre advertising.

Bringing the Trench Atmosphere to the Lobby

ANOTHER lobby display which doesn't cost a barrel of money and is within the reach of every exhibitor even in the smaller towns is herewith recorded. The display emanated from a city from which we have been able to secure many stories of unusual exploitation which have been helpful to our readers.

This unique lobby display and other attendant advertising stunts ever put over in St. Paul has been done by Manager Arthur E. Abelson. Starting Sept. 21 "Fires of Faith" was shown at the New Liberty for four days. The Salvation Army drive happened to be in progress on those particular days so Mr. Abelson converted his whole lobby into a dug-out with all the French scenery. The stunt was such a success that all the papers gave it space on their first pages. In addition Mr. Abelson collaborated with Kresge's 5 and 10 cent store in an advertising scheme which resulted in all the street car and trolley wires of the city bearing a sign advertising both the store and the picture.

Blazing the Trail

the theatre and these appeared at all the principal places.

Decorations for the Allen, Toronto, were unusually striking. J. B. Cronk, the manager of the Allen is an artist of unusual ability and the results that he achieved will long be the talk of the city. Passing through the lobby of the theatre one enters a semi-circular foyer and this was decorated with Oriental effects, rugs, hanging copper and bronze lams and censers of incense. The setting of the stage itself is shown in the photograph. Subdued colors were used with varying light effects, and the result was not only attractive, but decidedly restful to the eye.

So splendidly did Mr. Cronk carry out the atmosphere that managers were attracted from various Canadian and American cities to see his display and the comments were exceedingly flattering.

A special musical score was played by the big Allen orchestra under the direction of Luigi Romanelli, who prepares all of his own scores. The remainder of the program was kept on a very high plane with such elements as slap-stick comedy carefully avoided.

"Sahara" certainly set a new mark for Toronto, not only in the box office receipts, but in the impress that the exploitation and presentation left on the public.

A flattering tribute was paid this exploitation plan by the unethical action of another theatre that a week later played another production with the scenes laid in the Arabian desert. In the lobby the theatre referred to the production itself only in the smaller line, describing it as "a drama of the Sahara," the latter word fully two feet high.

We're Hard Boiled But We Would Like to Have Seen This

SID GRAUMAN celebrated his return to the Coast from New York by presenting a program to Los Angeles folks which broke all records for Grauman's and undoubtedly considering the theatre's seating capacity and the fact that six performances a day are given for Los Angeles.

Real stunts are the rule rather than the exception at Grauman's, but when Sid Grauman invited Mack Sennett to send his leads and comics to the theatre and to make personal appearances in connection with the showing of "Salome versus Shenandoah" the week of October 20th, he brought about the greatest hit in the history of the house. Grauman was not content to have the players go on a cold stage, make a little talk, or say "Howdy" and get away, but he framed a program feature of Ziegfeld magnitude. When the heavy drapes parted, a stage setting representing an Egyptian scene brilliantly lighted amazed the audience and built suspense. Then in threes the comics made their appearance, all costumed as wood nymphs or oriental belles. Every circle around the stage added three more to the group of "classics," until a total of fifteen were dancing to the orchestra number which had "Cleopatra" for a theme. The Mack Sennett ballet, which contained all the well-known characters of the Sennett Paramount Comedies, in make-up, warned the audience what might be expected from the Sennett stars, and on came Charles Murray, Ben Turpin and Charles Conklin in the make-up and costumes they wore in "Salome."

Just how much the act was burlesqued may be decided from the fact that not one of the trio makes any claim of being singers, but nevertheless they sang a parody on "Cleopatra," written about recent local events; another ballet dance by the fifteen warriors against gloom, and the number closed. The personal appearance number was given immediately following the showing of the Sennett-Paramount comedy.

Here they are in all their "glory," Sennett's company of comedians as they appeared at Grauman's Los Angeles

On Wednesday evening, three days after this bill had been inaugurated, there was every indication that the attendance of the house during this program would make new records. At 7:15 on Monday evening, the time of beginning the first evening show, the number of people holding tickets and waiting for admission, was greater than the seating capacity. The large lobby, having a standing room capacity of 1,500, was full and over-flowing, and before the first evenings program was completed, a line of people, two abreast, extended six hundred feet down the sidewalk from the theatre.

Here are some of the reasons given by Sid Grauman for the phenomenal attenddance. "This week is one of special added features of unusual excellence and I have been extremely fortunate in being able to present four distinct novelties that are exciting the public's admiration. To begin with, the Paramount-Post scenic, 'A Voice of Gladness,' is the most beautiful depiction of nature in her most majestic aspect that I have ever seen. The subtitles are taken from William Cullen Bryant's 'Thanatopsis' and enhance the sublimity of the pictured scenes. The big, fine spirit of this added feature begot an idea from somewhere in the remote corners of my consciousness, which finally found expression in my securing Gounod Romandy, the famed local violinist, to stand in the orchestral pit and render during the screening of this scenic Gounod's 'Meditation' from the opera 'Thais.' The effect upon audiences has been most inspiring and the applause at the finale tremendous.

"The singing of Fred de Bruin and Jack Van is far above the efforts of most motion picture theatre carolers, and constitutes a second feature immensely pleasing to audiences.

"The third special feature, in this analysis of the reasons for so successful a week, is in the Sennett Sarcastic Ballet, fourteen men of all ridiculous shapes and sizes, who burlesque such dances as the aesthetic 'Pipes of Pan,' 'Bachanalle' and others. They were carefully trained by Charlie Murray and elicit explosive outbursts of merriment. They appear in an epilogue to 'Salome versus Shenandoah' and their appearance is preceded by three screen slide announcements to the effect that the public may expect exquisite dancers, each the physical embodiment of a poem, whose movements are like the subtle shadowings of a Rembrandt painting!

"Of course the 'coup de grace' on the 'piece de resistance' is in the fourth and most important special feature, the personal appearances of Ben Turpin, Charlie Murray and Charlie Conklin following the antics of the Sarcastic Ballet.

Nineteen Weeks For "Daddy Long Legs" at Boston Theatre

THE run of "Daddy Long Legs" in Boston which has been the subject of much talk in film circles these many weeks has closed after having been the attraction at the Tremont theatre for six weeks, and later at the Tremont Temple for thirteen weeks, making a nineteen weeks' run all together at prices selling at a dollar and half top.

Showing twice a day the film played to a million and a half admissions and is now being superseded by the later Mary Pickford feature "The Hoodlum."

The run of this film should be an object lesson to the first run houses which are convinced that a weekly change is the only way to make money, since it is safe to assume that what has been accomplished in Boston may be duplicated in any of the big cities of the United States.

"Daddy Long Legs" went into the Tremont in the early summer just when hot weather was coming on. It opened big, continued to draw even in the warmest weather of the season and during the last three weeks many have been turned away because of the S. R. O. sign.

The original engagement at the Tremont was expected to be about what the feature would stand in Boston, and in consequence contracts for musical comedies were made at the expiration of the first six weeks. Then the show moved to the Temple a few blocks down the street and the crowds moved with it.

However, this phenomenal run has not been just the natural business that is bound to accrue on a good picture with a popular star, but is the combined result of the two coupled with an advertising campaign which has never faltered from the time it was first inaugurated some weeks prior to the showing, up to the last day of the engagement.

Numerous advertising stunts were pulled in connection with the run of the film, one of which has been featured in the News, that of the Champion Stilt Walker of the United States, representing the benefactor in the play. In the lobby of the Tremont Theatre, a miniature studio was built and children were photographed every afternoon and evening in a contest for the nearest likeness of "Little Mary" in Greater Boston. A prize was given to the little lass adjudged Mary's "double" by the judges.

Following the moving of the film to the Tremont Temple, ice cream parlors and the drug stores of the Louis K. Liggett Co., in Boston took up the campaign by presenting a "Daddy Long Legs Frappe" to their soda fountain patrons. A very dainty dish and a success from its start. Music publishers at the same time came through with a song entitled, "My Daddy Long Legs," a very popular number, all which went to put over the production in the "Athens of America."

The enormous amount of publicity given the picture by the various stunts mentioned, enabled the managers to continue its success with little effort when it moved to Trement Temple. Business in all moving picture houses in Boston was just booming until the coming of the strike of the Boston policemen, when, on account of the disorder that prevailed for one or two nights at its start and the continuation off and on of the trouble, people remained at home, not daring to venture on the streets. The Police Commissioner of the city at this time, is said to have, issued a decree to the effect of warning people not to congregate in crowds about the city.

Extensive lobby decorations were not used at the Temple, owing partly to a poor lobby and perhaps more so to the fact that the building is used as a house of worship on Sunday, when a clear lobby is necessary.

This run on "Daddy Long Legs" is without doubt a record for the film both as to length of engagement and as to prices. It has, however, been beaten, the instance being "My Four Years in Germany," which played twenty-three weeks at the Tremont Temple.

Advertises Feature Picture Over Vaudeville Bill

THE lobby display arranged for the showing of Madge Kennedy in "Strictly Confidential" at Gordon's Olympia, in Boston, reveals sound showmanship. The Olympia is located in a busy part of the city and thousands of people pass the theatre daily. Of course, the first essential of any display is to attract attention and after that to arouse interest in the picture being presented. The "Strictly Confidential" exploitation comes up to requirements in both of these respects.

The large head of Madge Kennedy, placed in the center of the lobby, is well calculated to catch the eye of the passer-by. Where a star has a dependable following, such as that which exists in this case, there is no danger of an exhibitor overemphasizing the personal end in his advertising. The main point brought out at Gordon's Olympia was that a Madge Kennedy picture was being offered.

It is apparent that although a number of vaudeville acts are staged at the Olympia, the management was content to concentrate on the feature picture as the big drawing card. In so far as the suggestion of the lobby is concerned, the casual observer is likely to overlook the vaudeville numbers and be impressed only by the fact that Madge Kennedy is appearing in "Strictly Confidential." This centering of interest on the main attraction at the theatre may be expected to bring better results than a more varied display in which no one point is definitely emphasized.

DURING the showing of "The Gamblers" at the Colonial theatre, Toledo, Ohio, a tie-up with the famous Toledo Blade was effected by the management which resulted in mutual benefits.

A small card printed to represent an ordinary playing card with the additional matter contained which said that by taking the card to the office of the Toledo Blade that two tickets for the show could be obtained, was used.

Newport Exhibitor Uses "Checkers" Billboard With Telling Effect

ONE of the oldest picture theatres in the country, the Bijou at Newport, R. I., under the management of Theodore Vietri, with a four-day run on the William Fox production of "Checkers" made such a record as to call special attention to the treatment of the theatre front as a means of exploitation.

Simplicity is the slogan of Mr. Vietri in managing the Bijou, and this he applies to all his lobby displays and advertising matter.

Vietri heralded "Checkers" along the popular lines established by years of experience in the exhibition game, but the front of his house was rigged up with a frame-work attached to the front arch, to support a full-size twenty-four-sheet poster.

The big railroad wreck scene is shown on this paper, and nothing could have been stronger, if one may judge by the box-office receipts which "Checkers" brought into the Bijou. Manager Vietri, during the four-day run of the feature packed the theatre with a host of new patrons attracted by the record of the picture on Broadway, New York — another fact which Mr. Vietri did not overlook in heralding his showing.

"I played 'Checkers' four days at the Bijou to packed houses," he says. "Newport is not the metropolis of this country, but after the first day it was apparent that taking 'Checkers' for four weeks would have been a better guess. I shall play the picture again in the near future."

On the right is Richard Stanton who directed "Checkers," the next is Mr. Vietri, with Marshall Hall, a Newport newspaper man at his left, and the end is Police Captain Leary of the Newport force. For a quarter can you beat this combination?

Phillips Film Breaking All Picture Records at Minneapolis

EASILY surpassing all achievements in showmanship as yet attained, James V. Bryson, who took over the New Unique theatre in Minneapolis for the production of "The Right to Happiness," has just concluded three weeks of record breaking business.

It was Mr. Bryson's original intention to run the pictures but one week, but when hundreds and hundreds were turned away from the box office during the first week he carried it over with just as much success and no reduction in receipts.

Mr. Bryson left nothing undone to put the picture over in big league style. He stopped at no expense and exerted every effort. He engaged a twenty-piece orchestra which furnished the special musical theme for the film, and also engaged Melville Burke, the talented director of the Shubert Stock Company, to handle the staging, scenic and lightening effects. A stage drama, written by Mr. Burke, was played by a cast of 100 during the presentation of the photoplay.

Besides advertising liberally in the newspapers, paper of all kinds was plastered over the city, and leading downtown stores devoted large display window space to the exposition of Dorothy Phillip's picture. The Woolworth store offered a big display of the song, "The Right to Happiness." The Corona typewriter company and the A. D. Thompson Drug Stores were among those who devoted their show windows to advertising the film.

Because Mr. Bryson was far-sighted enough to give two private showings of the film before persons from all walks of life as well as representative men and women, the picture received unparallelled mouth to mouth advertsing. When he showed "The Heart of Humanity" at the Shubert theatre for eight successive weeks Mr. Bryson achieved a new record. But now he comes out with the flat declaration that his new showing will bring even greater crowds and stand up for a much longed run.

"People are in sympathy with the theme of the play, which is the great understanding of love," said Mr. Bryson after the picture experienced its initial successes.

"The Right to Happiness" has that mysterious quality that gets under the spectator's hide and leaves him with an impression that he carries with him. There is something about it that makes people talk about it. And when you get the people talking about your film your success is assured."

There are few kings left — aside from those in the deck.

Feld Uses the "Fashion Show" With Gratifying Success

MILTON H. FELD manager of the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, Mo., is a good friend of the News who has written us a lot of exploitation stories about his stunts at the Newman. Recently we learned that he had "pulled" a fashion show so we asked for an article and here it is, another recital of a most successful week's business.

"Inaugurating a Semi-Annual Fashion Review, 'Lombardi, Ltd.,' was selected as especially well adapted for the carrying out of the 'style setting' idea.

"The very finest and most exclusive ladies' ready-to-wear store was enlisted in the project. So impressed were they with the benefits they would derive from a properly staged fashion show, that two months ago their buyer sailed for Paris, and from the work rooms of the world's foremost creators of women's clothes, was selected a vast variety of lovely womens' things, especially for the Newman Fashion Review. Gowns, wraps and frocks costing thousands of dollars were sent from Paris to Kansas City to be displayed on beautiful live manequins at the Newman Theatre.

"Special stage settings, representing the entrance to an immense ballroom, was built. A runway extending from the stage, over the orchestra pit and covering a width of two seats, down the centre of the main floor, was built and fifteen young ladies, selected for their beauty and shapliness were engaged to display these Paris creations for the first time.

"Rehearsals were held each day for two weeks in advance of the showing. Special lighting effects were used and were presented a Fashion Show that would make Mr. Ziegfield jealous, according to the comments of the Newman patrons.

"To mention the fact that the Newman Fashion Review attracted the women of Kansas City, is unnecessary. Every shopping center, every home and every merchant was talking about the wonderful Newman Fashion Review, how elaborately it was staged, the beautiful gowns and the way they were displayed. They were also impressed with the manner in which the Fashion Show synchronized with the feature picture, "LOMBARDI, LTD."

"Bert Lytell in the stellar role, made a host of new friends and the Newman Theatre attracted thousands of women and men who had never passed through its entrance since its opening.

"As a special feature for ladies only, on Friday morning of the week, a Lingerie Show presented the very latest in silk undergarments, corsets, negligees, etc. Despite the inclement weather, the theater was filled almost to capacity at eleven o'clock in the morning.

"For two weeks prior to our opening performance, the Ready-To-Wear Store advertised the event, using considerable space in their daily ads. Each salesperson in a store occupying exclusively sixteen floors on the most important corner of the city, mentioned the Fashion Review to each person they waited on. In fact, it was made the topic of discussion in every corner of the store.

"The first Newman Fashion Review was so well received that it is our intention to make this a semi-annual proposition each Spring and Fall."

A Golden Gate Crowd

HERE is another instance where a wide awake manager has hitched up to local color for extra business which with a good lobby display served to boost the engagement of a picture.

The attached photographs show the attractive lobby display put out by the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, during a recent showing of "Paid in Advance" and the rather unusual method employed by Manager Guy Smith to attract the attention of all passers-by. During the week he had as an added attraction the Columbia Park Boys' band, an organization of fifty pieces, and, as in the old minstrel days, this band gathered twice nightly in front of the theatre and gave a concert.

Anderson Broke it to Them Gently

FROM Arthur Anderson manager of the Mattapan theatre located at Mattapan a suberb of Boston, comes a little story of how he raised his prices of admission without incurring the wrath of his patrons.

Anderson gave the problem of breaking it to them gently considerable thought and finally decided that he would print a nicely worded sign for his lobby which would explain tactfully why it was necessary to ask an advance at the Mattapan. According to Mr. Anderson's letter he sat up late writing copy for this announcement only to tear it up until he finally framed one which was a model of brevity and courteous explanation. The result was that not a patron complained. Mr. Anderson ends his letter, he began it with some kind words for the News, with this sage advice: "Take your patrons into your confidence and they'll stick with you on anything at all reasonable if you put it up to them in a nice way."

Policy of Transatlantic Company; Big Announcements Coming

The Sales Department of the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., is making rapid strides in disposing of territory on their newest feature, "The Marriage Blunder," a mystery drama in five parts, featuring Vera Sissons and Sydney Mason.

Many members of the trade have apparently been misinformed as to the policy of this company. Lewis Roach, president of this organization, emphatically denies that the Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., is handling foreign pictures only. In the future the Transatlantic will handle American pictures for the American market, foreign pictures on the foreign market and American pictures for export.

The Transatlantic Film Company of America, Inc., which has heretofore operated in Europe under a different name, has made such remarkable progress that the directors have decided to extend their activities to this side of the water.

Mr. Roach, who is handling the foreign and export end of the business, has made arrangements with many prominent American producers to handle their output exclusively on the European market. Next week's announcement may furnish the names of these prominent producers.

Charles Yale Harrison, who is looking after the American sales end of the company, is at present engaged on the somewhat difficult task of lining up his distributing organization. Several representatives in the field are busily engaged upon securing direct up-to-the-minute data. It is rumored on the Rialto that the Transatlantic has devised a new scheme of states right distribution.

At an exclusive showing of "The Marriage Blunder" recently several prominent film and literary men were present and expressed their approval of the picture, which is very novel in many ways.

Short Robertson-Cole Offerings

Supreme Comedies, Martin Johnson's Cannibal Films and Adventure Scenics Offer Variety

IN keeping with the demand of the film trade for short snappy subjects for program runs, Robertson-Cole announce that they are well fortified in this branch of the service in addition to their mammoth super productions. The current of the trade has shifted almost over night and so great have been the demands that the Robertson-Cole Company proceeded to meet the demand with the classiest of all short subjects.

Supreme Comedies featuring Harry Depp, Katherine Lewis, James Liddy and Teddy Sampson are said by exhibitors to be the liveliest up-to-the-minute stuff bound to produce mirth.

In addition to these comedies, Robertson-Cole have arranged for the release of thirty one-reel pictures to be known as the Adventure Scenics. The reviewing committee state that for thrill, education and transcendent beauty, it would be hard to surpass them.

To change the subject but at the same time stick to short program releases, Robertson-Cole have purchased Martin Johnson's new camera tale of the South Seas. These releases which will be offered to the public twice a month will be known as "On The Borderland of Civilization."

Robertson-Cole in addition to giving the exhibitor just what patrons demand, back up their productions with a real advertising and publicity campaign which materially assists in "putting them over."

In offering the Supreme Comedies they claim it is safe to say that there is a laugh and a thrill in every foot of film. The subjects although short are chosen after a staff of experts agree on the theme and then comes the task of casting the right people for the plot. One of the unusual features of the Supreme Comedies is that there is a real climax which means that there is both drama and worlds of fun embodied in these short reels.

"Adventure Scenics" are something new that have attracted the attention of leading exhibitors throughout the country. Jesse G. Sill and H. H. Brownell are two important figures that have supplied the dynamics to the unique out door pictures. The personnel of the "Adventure Scenics" corporation also includes John Rantz, one of the most progressive exhibitors of the Pacific Northwest and owner of the picture palace at Brementon, Wash.

Although there have been many educational and interesting features on the great South Seas as outlined by Martin Johnson, yet, "On The Borderland of Civilization" brings a startling series of newness, adventure, education, thrill and interest that is said to bind and grip the theatregoer.

As a proof of the above statement, Robertson-Cole offer the fact that two hundred and eighteen of the leading dailies of the country have contracted to run the story of the great South Seas in serial form about the same time the pictures are released. Every editor offered the series grabbed the idea and the Robertson-Cole publicity bureau is maintaining a regular press department to handle this phase of the work for the big series.

Beauty Bevy for Hallroom Films

Jack and Harry Cohn Recruiting a Number of Girls For Permanent Company; Series a Hit

AS the result of an idea conceived by Jack Cohn several years ago, one of the most successful series of comedies on the market at the present time is the Hall Room Boys films, produced by the National Film Corporation. Cohn planned the picturization of the famous newspaper cartoons drawn by H. A. MacGill, with the idea that light, wholesome comedies produced in an atmosphere of beauty and refinement would find a welcome among the better exhibitors of the country. That he was right in this surmise has been proved by the reception accorded these comedies since the first release of the initial offering. Among the big theatres which have contracted for the series may be mentioned all of the houses of the Loew circuit, the New York Strand, the California, and many other first run theatres.

The latest theatre to contract for the entire series of Hall Room Boy pictures is the Strand, of San Francisco, Cal. Cohn announced this week that the following releases have been completed: "A Howling Success," "Nothing But Nerve" and "Pretty Soft," all of which are in two reels each.

A special Beauty Brigade, consisting of the prettiest girls obtainable in California and New York is now being recruited by Jack and Harry Cohn, and they will form a permanent part of the company engaged in producing the Hall Room series. These girls will all be expert in the arts of swimming, dancing and athletics and will appear regularly in each production.

A broadcast advertising campaign will be inaugurated next week in the interests of the new comedies, and a complete line of exploitation supplies, including several novelties have been prepared to assist the state right buyer and exhibitor in giving these pictures the proper publicity.

Just a few of the famed Fox Sunshine Comedy beauty bridgade, whose talent and pulchritude may be enjoyed on the Screen in December on release of "Back to Nature Girls."

Sun Never Sets on Fox Service

Distribution of Pictures Globe-Girdling in Scope and Demand has Increased Largely

NO trail divides, no sea separates, no conditions bar the East from the West or the North from the South in the organization of Fox Film Corporation's globe encircling service to exhibitors. Mountains are crossed, oceans traversed, trails made, for the creation of a service of distribution of Fox Films that is among the most far-reaching and the largest in the world.

At a time when the ordinary life of a photoplay has been run, and it is assigned to the "morgue," William Fox's agencies and branch houses in the far corners of the earth are putting new life into Fox Films. The Malays, the residents of the Dutch East Indies, of Indo-China, of Siam, of the Strait Settlements are getting a glimpse of how their brothers of the Occident whom they never expect to visit, live. They are forming their ideas of the Western civilization of today by means of the motion picture distributee through Fox Film Corporation's service stations.

In less than one year the business has increased almost 400 per cent. Whereas in 1918 there was a Fox office in Singapore which served the Strait Settlements, India and the Dutch East Indies and parts of China, there are today branches at Bombay, Batavia, Hong Kong, Shanghai, Manila and other cities in those little understood countries of the Far East.

In January, 1918, two prints of each Fox production went to these countries. Today seven copies of each feature are sent to the Far Eastern offices. This statement does not include Australasia, which is a service separate and apart.

Joseph R. Darling, the representative at large of Fox Film Corporation, believes that next year will see another large increase in the Fox business. The first year of peace, with conditions still far from settled, has witnessed the most remarkable growth in the motion picture industry in the Far East, and William Fox is carrying the fame of the United States as a leader of the industry into nooks and corners that are hardly known to a majority of Americans.

The creation and upbuilding of this gigantic system of distribution is unrivaled. Not even the Standard Oil Company and its allied interests cover the globe more thoroughly than does the William Fox organization.

With the increased demand for Fox Films in the Far East, with the South American market growing steadily in scope and in demand, with Europe hungering for Fox features, Fox Film Corporation through its strong chain of branches and agencies appears to be facing the greatest business of its meteoric career in 1920. Increased production facilities to meet this great stride are under way, and throughout the world the message of the advance of civilization will be carried with Fox super-productions special Fox Features, Fox News, Fox Sunshine Comedies and the famous Mutt and Jeff Animated Cartoons.

Pioneer's New Producing Unit

Art-O-Graf Film Company Signs Up as a Producing Organization for the Pioneer

THE latest addition to the list of co-operative producers who are making pictures for the Pioneer is the Art-O-Graf Film Company. Contracts have been sealed and signed, and already two new productions are on their way from the Art-O-Graf studios in Denver. As yet these two pictures have not been named, but as soon as they have gone through the hands of the Pioneer editorial staff, they will be complete in detail.

Otis B. Thayer, president and director-general of the Art-O-Graf, is a well-known figure in film circles, and before entering the game several years ago, he had an unbroken record on the legitimate stage as star and manager. Heading his own companies he toured the United States in such successes as "Sweet Clover" and "A Square Deal." Mr. Thayer directed for Selig and other producers, and such stars as Ralph Herz, Tom Mix, Peggy O'Neill, Katherine Williams and Tom Carrigan received their first screen schooling under his hands.

Among the other producing units affiliated with the Pioneer are The Grace Davison Productions and The Physical Culture Photoplays. Under the Pioneer banner the Art-O-Graf will begin work on an extensive production program, which will embrace several of the best selling novels, for which rights are now being negotiated for by the Pioneer Headquarters.

Trade Showing of "Eyes of Youth" Holds Audience

One of the most extraordinary trade showings ever given in New York was that of the invitation performance of "Eyes of Youth," with Clara Kimball Young, which was held at the Hotel Astor last Thursday by the Equity Pictures Corporation. For the occasion the Grand Ball Room was decorated with seats for 900, which took up the entire lower floor, and 400 additional box seats in the balcony. Despite the very inclement weather and opposition of all theatres, the place was packed and several hundred standees accommodated.

Carle Edourde of the Strand arranged the musical score and the twenty-five piece orchestra played the accompaniment. Jack Eaton, manager of the Strand staged the entire production under the supervision of Harry Reichenbach. The picture ran about one hour and forty-five minutes, and it was remarkable that not a person in the entire audience left the room until the final fade out. The performance opened with a rendition of Irving Berlin's new waltz number "Eyes of Youth" which was rendered by Miss Sharpe.

Many prominent film personalities were present.

Mollie King Finishes Picture

Director John M. Stall has just completed "Women Men Forget" for the American Cinema Corporation with Mollie King in the stella role. He is now cutting and assembling same.

Miss King is now taking a vacation for ten days on her husband's estate in Kentucky. Her next picture will be "The Serpent" from the book. Miss King will begin work on this production in two weeks.

Manager Koch "Guarantees" An American Film Production

THE Aster Theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., one of the Ruben & Finkelstein houses broke all previous box-office records with a week's run of "SIX FOOT FOUR," the first of the New American Film Company super-features in which William Russell appears. Manager Koch of the New Aster went after his audiences in hammer and tongs fashion — exploited the attraction like a circus and is more than satisfied with the results obtained.

His newspaper advertisements were of good size and well illustrated. The bigger ones carried the offer to admit free of charge all comers over six feet four inches in height — a perfectly safe offer to make and yet one which attracted not a little attention.

However, Manager "Billy" Koch gives credit to his personal guarantee which was prominently displayed and which rang so true that hundreds who paused to read were moved to enter the theatre to witness the advertised attraction. The guarantee which was written in long hand in huge letters and then neatly mounted in attractive frames read as follows:

Arrow Film Acquires New Serial Picture, "The Lurking Peril"

The Arrow Film Corporation, through its president, W. E. Shallenberger, announces the acquisition of a new serial, "The Lurking Peril," starring Ann Luther and George Larkin. This is a fifteen episode serial of a sensational nature, twelve episodes of which are now completed. Although this serial was acquired by Arrow only this week, it is said that forty-three per cent. of this country has already been sold with a good portion of the foreign territory.

KLEINE ACQUIRES "DELIVERANCE"

Has World Rights to Film Which Depicts Life of Helen Keller; Wide Exploitations

A transaction of outstanding importance in the film world is revealed by the announcement by George Kleine, that he has acquired the world rights to the Helen Keller film of "Deliverance," which was produced in New York at the Lyric Theatre on August 18th, and pronounced by the New York critics, without exception, as one of the most remarkable picture achievements of the age.

"Deliverance" is the story of Helen Keller's life and her message to the world. Though born deaf, dumb, and blind, Helen Keller has conquered all obstacles in the world of education and letters, and astounded humanity by passing through leading colleges and universities of America with highest honors. She has recovered her speech and though deaf and blind, has written many interesting books.

That George Kleine, a man of the highest ideals, and whose name has been identified with many of the most dignified and pretentious productions of the cinema art, should acquire the rights to the Helen Keller picture, seems most fitting. Mr. Kleine will exploit "Deliverance" throughout the United States and Canada and will dispose of the foreign rights to interested parties.

American Cinema Not On Curb

Head of the American Cinema Says the Corporation has not Offered Stock to General Public

WALTER F. NIEBUHR, president of the American Cinema Corporation, seeks to correct any false impressions that may have been acquired with regards to a reported issue of stock belonging to that company. Mr. Niebuhr's statement follows:

"Some few weeks ago the trade journals received an announcement from the firm of Johnson & Hopkins Co., alleged specialists in motion picture securities, stating that they had been made the fiscal agent for 50,000 shares of American Cinema stock and would offer it to the public at $10 per share. Subsequently this firm put advertisements in a number of the daily newspapers, announcing that they had purchased 30,000 shares of American Cinema stock.

"A portion of the company's stock, not nearly so large as advertised, was purchased at the time of our recapitalization by a local broker. The company did not then or any time since contemplate entering the curb market nor was it ever contemplated that the stock in the corporation should be offered to the general public.

"Nevertheless the owner of the stock in question entered into a contract with the firm of Johnson & Hopkins Co. by which the latter firm began a stock selling campaign announced in the press, in spite of the expressed and formal protest of the officers of this corporation against the form and character of the proposed advertisements."

The attorneys of the corporation, according to Mr. Niebuhr, have succeeded in recovering a considerable portion of the stock in question, and there will be no further public offering.

"Anne of Green Gables" Ready

Exteriors Were Delayed Owing to Inclement Weather in East; New Film to be Shot in West

REALART Pictures Corporation announces for prospective release Mary Miles Minter in "Anne of Green Gables," founded on the four "Anne" books by L. M. Montgomery. The scenario is by Frances Marion and the direction by William Desmond Taylor. No date has been set, but the picture is completed and now in the laboratory being printed.

President Arthur S. Kane has received word from Miss Minter in California that she is overjoyed at finding sunny weather once more. Miss Minter was delayed in the East for many weeks by rainy weather, being held in Massachusetts on exteriors over a month. As a result of this inconvenience, the forthcoming productions will be shot in California, it is said.

Advance showings of "Anne of Green Gables" for Realart officials have caused them to wax enthusiastic over the production. It is reported that instructions have been sent to branch managers to notify exhibitors that this picture is positively the best picture produced by the star up to date.

The story of the books of "Anne" as worked into the film play show, is full of interest, and Realart officials say the scenario provides much suitable material for Miss Minter. The "Anne" books have been circulated by hundreds of thousands, it is claimed, and Realart believes there are few girls who have not read these stories of American girlhood. The appeal of the new film is declared by Realart to be universal, and the production will mark a long step forward for the star.

Fred Quimby On National Tour

Pathe's Exchange Director Will Inspect Exchanges to Provide for Business Extensions

FRED C. QUIMBY, Director of Exchanges of Pathe Exchange, Inc., is off on his second transcontinental trip within four months. He left last week on the tour which will have an important bearing on the future policy and business of the Pathe organization. He will visit sixteen of the thirty-two Pathe Exchanges which reach every section of the United States, and will be away five weeks.

Mr. Quimby's itinerary calls for stops at Newark, Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Milwaukee, Des Moines, Omaha, Denver, Salt Lake City, Spokane, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco and Los Angeles.

The exchange at Portland was only recently opened. On his last trip Mr. Quimby organized the force that is now handling the tremendous Pathe business in Portland, and on this visit he will make his initial inspection of the organization "under fire." The growth of the Pathe business within the last six months has been so rapid that the thirty-second Pathe Exhange was recently opened in Little Rock, Ark. Within a few weeks a subexchange will be installed in either Butte or Helena, Mont.

The Director of Exchanges will make provisions, while on his tour, for handling the business extension that Pathe reports every week. In four months, during a period when business conditions in the motion picture industry are not at their best, Pathe's feature bookings and collections are said to have increased more than 400 per cent.

F. P.-Lasky's Foreign Contract

By Agreement with Danish-American Firm Paramount-Artcraft Films Will Go to Central Europe

EMIL E. SHAUER, assistant treasurer and in charge of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announced Friday the completion of a contract with the Danish-American Film Company, Ltd., of Copenhagen, Denmark, for the distribution of Paramount-Artcraft pictures throughout Central Europe. According to reports, the contract becomes effective March 1, 1920, and calls for a minimum return to the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of $2,000,000. The contract runs for one year and contains provisions for its renewal.

The Danish-American Film Company, Ltd., will distribute Paramount-Artcraft pictures in Germany, Austria, Poland, Czecho-Slovakia, Serbia, Croatia, Rumania and Bulgaria, a territory containing in excess of 200,000,000. The larger part of this territory has been unable to see an American motion picture for the last five years, except in such districts where American pictures were carried to the battle areas of the Allied armies for the entertainment of the soldiers.

That this huge territory is ripe for the presentation of high grade American motion picture films is indicated by the fact that the various governments of the Central European countries, especially Germany, it is said, carried on an active film propaganda campaign throughout the war. In Germany, in particular, it is reported that the motion picture industry made great strides and that the exhibition of motion pictures had become one of the great forces in the economic life of the nation.

The distributing organization which will handle Paramount-Artcraft pictures has just been founded by prominent American and Danish capitalists, who have foreseen for some months the great market for high grade pictures in this territory.

Glen Kunkel who began his picture career as a "stunt" man in D. W. Griffith's "Intolerance," playing a "bit" in that production has been engaged by Leon Britton, productions' manager, Hallmark Pictures Corporation, to play the role of a thug in a production now under way, under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald.

Harry Ward, English Film Man, Here to Buy Big Productions

Harry Ward, Managing Director of Ward's Films, Ltd., London, England, arrives in this country this week to look over the market with the intention of purchasing big pictures. He sailed from England on October 22d on the Lapland, and will make his local headquarters at the Hotel Astor, New York.

Mr. Ward possesses much experience in Drama and Vaudeville. He has been in this country before, playing the Keith and other vaudeville circuits. In 1913 he started a film renting concern in London in a small way, and after five years purchased a huge building and transferred his business to a Limited Company with a nominal capital of $250,000.

James Sheehan Studio Manager for American Cinema

The American Cinema Corporation announces that it has signed James R. Sheehan as studio manager of their studio in Glendale, Long Island. Mr. Sheehan has been engaged in theatrical work for many years, being well known in the stage world as well as in film circles. He has been general manager for Vincent Pictures for the last year, from which concern he comes to the American Cinema Corporation.

Prior to his association with Vincent Pictures Mr. Sheehan was associated with the P. F. Shea theatres, which run both vaudeville and motion picture bills, being general manager of that organization. He has also acted as local manager for their New England houses.

"Topics of Day" Going Well in Big and Small Cities

While the largest vaudeville theatres in the big cities of the country are showing "Topics of the Day" with great success, the smaller picture houses in suburban communities have also been quick to realize that they too can play this screen subject with excellent results. The big city theatres, of course, have the earlier run but as the "Topics" programs present full-measure entertainment of wide appeal they are enjoyable whenever and wherever shown. Pathe releases this reel in the United States and Canada.

Picture Field Offers Success to Competent

R. H. Cochran of Universal Traces the Rise of Film Officials Proving that Industry Offers Chances of Great Advancement

THAT the motion picture art or industry holds forth to the man of brains unlimited opportunity for the betterment of himself is the opinion of R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal. Mr. Cochrane was recently queried on the possibilities of business success for men in the film industry.

He pointed out the many men who were now film officials but took occasion to emphasize the importance of the fact that a man's success in the film art depends entirely upon himself whether he be an employee of a producing company or an exhibitor. Mr. Cochrane cited the rise of several Universal men who within a comparatively short time have established themselves with the Universal company. "The picture art," Mr. Cochrane said, "is so new yet so firmly founded that the chances for growth are unlimited."

Speedy rise to prosperity is not all in the business "success" of the weekly magazines. For instance the case of Tarkington Baker, well known film official, may be cited. Mr. Baker a little more than a year ago was dramatic critic and editorial writer for a middle-western newspaper. He had had previously several years of press-agent experience. He attracted the attention of Carl Laemmle, Universal's president, and was made director of publicity for Universal. His ideas and work were so commendable and his vision so keen that within six months after he associated himself with the company he was made general-manager. Today he is one of the best known film officials.

Dan Lederman, known as a capable film executive, was at one time manager of the Des Moines Universal exchange. He was brought to New York and not only was made assistant to Carl Laemmle but was made assistant treasurer of the company.

H. M. Berman, now general manager of Universal's exchanges entered the picture industry only four years ago and two years ago was put in charge of the Jewel productions at the Universal home office.

Paul Gulick, former dramatic critic, exhibitor, and publicity manager is now editor-in-chief of Universal's Moving Picture Weekly and is especially well-known as the president of the A. M. P. A.

George E. Kann, who started on his business career as a stenographer, was promoted to private secretaryship and now holds the position of export-manager of Universal.

Harry Levey entered the film industry as a film salesman. He became a sales "ace" and now is general-manager of Universal's Industrial department, the largest department of its kind in existence.

Herman Stern started as a film salesman with practically no experience, four years ago, and one year ago, he was made manager of the Pittsburgh Exchange. Last June he celebrated his success by winning first prize in the Universal Anniversary competition.

Scene from "Under Suspicion," starring Ora Carew, a Universal production.

A film salesman who persisted in doing things differently and better is I. L. Lesserman, now manager of the Chicago Exchange.

Many know the success of W. R. Wilkerson, who started as a Jewel salesman in the New York office. A short time later he was made manager for Jewel sales, and is now manager of the Exchange of Kansas City, Mo.

One of the most astounding careers is Geo. Levine, who started as a theatre peanut boy. He became so proficient in selling peanuts he decided that he could sell something else, and after a year and one-half experience as a film salesman, was promoted to the managership of the Milwaukee Exchange.

W. C. Herman was at one time in a department store. He had served faithfully and well and a year ago he was selected as service manager for the New York Exchange.

From errand boy to short subject manager is the record of Maurice Helman, of the Chicago Exchange. Helman, knows every Chicago exhibitor and is a man who places Universal's serials in many of the larger theatres.

Carroll Nathan, known among all the film salesmen in New York City, started two years ago selling Jewel pictures. Nathan had ability, and by applying himself, so impressed the sales manager that he was recently sent to San Francisco as Assistant Manager.

M. A. Chase, was a worker who didn't look for the big salary to start with, but who had initiative and new ideas. Chase is now representing Universal in Russia, and reports show that he is making good.

One year ago Charles King was office manager of the New York Exchange. King interested himself in every department of Universal, and today he represents the company in Cuba. He makes several trips to the home office each season and is one of the most successful foreign representatives of any film company.

A. E. Rosenberg outgrew the city of Chicago. He had made good there and was looking for new worlds to conquer. He now represents Universal in the largest city in the world, London, England.

One of the latest promotions was that of Monroe Isen. Isen started in the reel room went to the booking office, was made a salesman and last Spring was sent to Canal Zone to represent Universal. Some idea of Isen's success may be had in the fact that he returned recently to make arrangements to secure many more films than had been the usual number to send to this territory.

The names and records of these men have been cited to bear out Mr. Cochrane's statement that the film industry has much room for men with ability and iniative. This record was recently sent out in a Bulletin to all of Universal's Exchanges, with the idea of showing every employee the possibilities for his success.

Former U. S. officers "fall in" to await selection by Von Stroheim for parts in "The Woman In The Plot," Universal feature.

A Flood of Realart Contracts

Recent Reports Show Steady Rise in the Number of Signatories for Realart Productions

ACCORDING to reports received, the pre-release showings of Realart Pictures in New York City and Washington, D. C., with a promise of releases at an early date, has resulted in a great number of exhibitor tieups. Lewis W. Kniskern, supervisor of contracts, has reports from branch managers in all parts of the country which show that many new houses have signed up for Realart star pictures and features.

Among the new affiliations reported are the Iowa theatres, owned by Joseph Hostettler, which include the "Isis" at Cedar Rapids, the "Casino" at Marshalltown, "Crystal" of Waterloo and a house at Charles City. Manager Bert R. Latz of the Denver branch, reports that he has landed a big Salt Lake City connection with George Mayne, managing director of the American Theatre, one of the foremost exhibitors of the intermountain country. He will show all the Realart star pictures in the Mormon Capital.

Manager Cornelius G. Kingsley of the Detroit branch of Realart reports that in his territory the following have contracts for Realart productions: Charles Seaman, Majestic Gardens at Grand Rapids; Manager Claude Cady of the Gladmer at Lansing; the Majestic at Jackson where W. McLaren shows the pictures; Lipp & Cross with their Regent at Battle Creek, and manager S. Moran of the Arcade at Ann Arbor.

In the East, Realart reports that the "Crescent" at Ithaca, N. Y., managed by Fred Howe, will get the initial releases; at Hartford, Conn., the Strand has signed, W. A. True being managing director of this fine house; the Regent at Newcastle, Pa., with Manager Charles Freeman at the helm has made a deal with Pittsburg exchange, and, finally, the Academy, at Newburgh, N. Y., through Manager Fred Taylor, has contracted for Realarts.

In the Middle West, one of the new contracts calls for Realart Pictures at the New Dearborn, of which H. McDorman is manager. The Empire Theatre Company, of Detroit, Mich., through A. J. Gilligham, president, has contracted for Realart Pictures in their house. George Schade, proprietor of the Schade Theatre at Sandusky, O., is a new Realart acquisition and the Farot Opera House at Lima, O., is also said to be a new arrival in the ranks.

Capital Gets "Screen Follies"

Territorial Rights on Dahme and Seel's Animated Production now in Heavy Demand

S. L. BARNHARD and C. E. Eckels, president and general manager respectively of the Capital Film Co., have just closed with F. A. A. Dahme and Louis Seel for the entire world's rights to "SCREEN FOLLIES" is the contents of a report recently received. Messrs. Dahme and Seel are said to have been besieged for the last four weeks with offers from distributing organizations throughout the country.

The elaborate animation of this new film is the work of the combined efforts of F. A. A. Dahme and Louis Seel. After an investigation of all the processes known in the world of animation and trick photography they are said to have evolved a new process which will permit of a distinctly different type of novelty picture. The process of animation perfected by Messrs. Dahme and Seel is reported to be technically the finest work of its kind today

Shortly after the consummation granting the Capital Film Co. world's rights for "Screen Follies," this organization notified a number of leading distributors and exchange men throughout the United States, and, according to reports, the wires were soon hot with messages to the Capital Film asking for exclusive territorial rights. Capital officials feel that this marked evidence of the popularity of the new film feature assures its success in the film world.

Dolores Cassinelli Will Appear in "The Right to Lie"

Dolores Cassinelli, whose production, "The Virtuous Model," is now experiencing such popularity makes her next appearance for Pathe in "The Right to Lie," a special in seven reels, which will head the Pathe releases for November 16. Edwin Carewe made "The Right to Lie" for the Albert Capellani Productions, Inc. The story is by Jane Murfin, who collaborated with Jane Cowl in writing two of the biggest stage successes of recent years, "Lilac Time" and "Daybreak."

Miss Cassinelli's supporting cast includes Frank Mills, Joseph King, Warren Cook, Grace Reals, George Deneubourg, Claire Grenville and Violet Reed.

J. Robert Pauline, star of Supreme Pictures, Inc., in a production now being made.

Schomer Busy Writing Another Feature; Cast Being Selected

Immediately after the recent press showing of his newly completed feature, "The Sacred Flame," starring Emily Stevens, Abraham S. Schomer, of the Schomer-Ross Productions, Inc., author and director, left for the Berkshires where he is busily completing a new feature on which he has been working during the past few months. Though he has had so little time for authorship while directing Miss Stevens in "The Sacred Flame," which will soon have its Broadway production, Mr. Schomer has his new story in such shape that he will be ready to begin filming it within two or three weeks.

While giving most of his attention to authorship just now, the versatile author-director is in daily communication with the other officers of the Schomer-Ross Company who are selecting the cast for the new production, and it is their announcement that they intend to bring together one of the most notable casts ever seen in a single feature.

Many Deals Closed by Small

Edward Small, Inc., has signed Edward Jose, recently director for Norma Talmadge and John Stahl, formerly director for Florence Reed, with the Anita Stewart Productions, Inc. They left for the Coast this week to assume their new duties in directorial capacities. Mr. Small also announces the signing of Aneers Randolph and Creighton Hale to appear in a forthcoming D. W. Griffith production to be made in the East. The Play and Scenario Department conducted by Mr. Small announces the disposal of the screen rights to Charlotte Thompson's famous play. "In Search of a Sinner" to Joseph M. Schenck, to serve as a starring vehicle for Constance Talmadge.

Other important transactions closed by Small, Inc., during the week were the placing of Edmund Breese, Marie Shotwell, Wallace Ray, Joseph Granby and George Cooper with Hallmark Picture Corporation for Dallas M. Fitzgerald's production; Charles Towbridge, Lucy Fox, Jack McLean and Frank Evans with Vitagraph and Ivo Dawson for a forthcoming Olive Thomas production.

Edgar Brooks Made Serial Sales Manager of Pathe Exchange

Edgar O. Brooks, for more than a year Manager of the Exploitation Department of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has been promoted to Serial Sales Manager, and in his new position he will have complete charge of marketing the continued form of the motion picture.

Mr. Brooks, it is said, has had a wide experience in all branches of theatrical and film enterprises. From 1900 to 1932 he served as manager of several London theatres, and for the next ten years was engaged in theatrical management in Great Britain, Canada and the United States. From 1915 to 1917 he was successively Serial Representative, Serial Sales Manager and General Sales Manager of the Mutual Film Corporation. In this connection, it is reported, he had sole charge of the huge publicity campaign that was inaugurated to "put over" the Mutual Chaplin Comedies. He has been associated with Pathe since early in 1918.

Pioneer's Facts and Follies Are Nearly Ready for Release

For the last six weeks the combined staffs of the Pioneer and Physical Culture Photoplays, headed by Wray Physioc have been engaged in putting the finishing touches to the first sixteen releases of the FACTS and FOLLIES series. These pictures, presented in chapters of one reel lengths, are a combination of short comedy and an afterpiece in which are demonstrated the methods of physical development as advocated by Bernarr Macfadden.

The productions are played by a company of comedians, headed by Helen Hart and Frank Bates, who are said to be supported by an ensemble of physical culture beauties.

Directors' Casting-Room Opened

According to word received here, Arthur H. Jacobs has established in his office at 145 West 45th Street, a "casting room" for the use of his directors. This department equipped with desks, telephones, stenographer, etc., is to be placed at the disposal of the directors while they are engaged in assembling the material for their casts.

Exhibitors Pick Release Method

Robertson-Cole Takes Census of Three Thousand Theatre Men; Cannibal Films Out as One Reelers

WHAT is regarded by officials of Robertson-Cole as the nearest thing to perfection in the way of co-operation with exhibitors is disclosed in the announcement by that company that more than twenty three hundred exhibitors have actually assisted by advice and suggestions in the preparation of the campaign on the new Martin Johnson pictures "On the Borderland of Civilization." Three thousand exhibitors were asked for their opinions and advice and about seventy-five per cent of them replied to the letters and the follow-ups sent to them.

As a direct result of this co-operation it has been decided to release the new pictures as one reel features, one reel to be released each week. This was the suggestion of the great majority of the exhibitors, and was acted upon immediately, for it is the belief of Robertson-Cole that the surest guide to success is the advice of the men who know, the man who is nearest the public.

The last series of the Martin Johnson Cannibal stories were a revelation to the motion picture world, and as a result Mr. Johnson arranged to have 30,000 feet of real dramatic thrill of the South Sea Islands made up for Robertson-Cole. As soon as the officials of the distributing company saw the new prints, it was decided to allow the exhibitors to decide for themselves the best plan of placing the educational and interesting series before the motion picture public.

Before the questionnaires were sent to the leading exhibitors of the country, Robertson-Cole sent an individual letter explaining the new Cannibal series and outlining to the exhibitors the new home office exhibitor's plan of better co-operation.

As a further consideration for the betterment of the exhibitor, Robertson-Cole decided to allow those who take this new series the benefit of the ideas of more than two thousand five hundred brother showmen as to the best methods of handling the new Martin Johnson feature. These ideas have been printed in pamphlet form and will be distributed as soon as contracts are signed.

"On the Borderland of Civilization" will be without doubt one of the best advertised pictures in the world to-day. This boast is no idle dream but a selling plan as adopted by Roberston-Cole. In addition to the various means of exploitation and the comment of the leading exchanges of the country to-day, a national publicity campaign has been put over which insures the immediate money getting powers of Johnson's masterpiece.

As a start to the publicity campaign, Robertson-Cole announces that two hundred and eighteen leading newspapers in the United States will run the Johnson stories in serial form. These stories will appear in the press about the same time that the motion pictures are released.

A press book dealing with the Johnson features has been prepared by the publicity department of the Robertson-Cole Company, and this is now ready for the distribution. Suggestions as to the proper forms of advertising are given in addition to numerous cuts and mats which will be given the press of the country.

More mats and cuts have been made for this series of pictures than any other release this year. The large number was made necessary owing to the demand. The photography is claimed as remarkable and many of the scenes as almost unbelievable.

A campaign of education in the public schools of the country is another part of the exploitation scheme of this masterpiece. The school children will be acquainted with the features of the picture, and in this method the "by word of month" advertising will be carried direct to the homes and will make fathers and mothers yearn to see what is described by their children in school. A church campaign will also be opened.

W. A. Brady's Return Rumored

Announcement of Plays Available For Screen Supports Story of His Return As Producer

WILLIAM A. Brady, through his announcement of a rather important list of stage plays which are now available for motion pictures, lends zest to the rumor current of late, that he will shortly again become active in motion picture production. Among the plays announced by Mr. Brady as available for the screen are: "Way Down East"; "The Man Who Came Back," "Life," "The Shepherd King," "Bunty Pulls the Strings," "Foxy Grandpa," the cartoon comedy success, and "Forever After," in which Alice Brady has appeared over 400 times in New York City and is now breaking records on tour. "Too Many Cooks," "At 9:45," "The Things That Count," and other successful plays with which Mr. Brady's name is associated as producer, are also included.

It is believed that a definite announcement will shortly be made concerning Mr. Brady's return as an active motion picture producer. At the time of his resignation as director-general of the World Film, Mr. Brady made the statement that he believed the programme system a dead issue, and that the making of 52 pictures a year was an absolute impossibility. It, therefore, may safely be predicted that when Mr. Brady returns to motion picture production, he will not attempt to make more than four or six pictures yearly. Several, it is said, will be made in France and England under agreements made by Mr. Brady during his recent visit to Europe.

Wide Educational Film Growth

E. W. Hammons Declares the Demand For Educational–Film Products Increases Daily on Market

THE conclusion of the war resulted in a decided change in the market for motion picture film for purely educational purposes," states Vice-President E. W. Hammons of the Educational Films Corporation of America. "Since the signing of the armistice we have conducted an elaborate investigation of the new conditions, and some of the phases of the situation as it has developed have proved to be very interesting."

"Of course, the extensive use of films in war times accomplished a great deal towards increasing the scope of the market. For instance, one of the executive heads of a large business house, in a conversation the other day, said: "I was a four minute man during the Bond campaigns, and in that experience, I discovered the wonderful power which films have for visual instruction, something which I had always underestimated!" His example is but one in thousands, of skeptical business men who required but one practical demonstration to convince them that satisfactory results are sure to follow the proper application of motion pictures to church and school activities."

"The condition that exists to-day," continues Mr. Hammons, "is unparalleled in the history of education. The certain demand for films for non-theatrical purposes is growing larger every day, and the market is almost barren of material to meet that demand. It comes from churches, schools, associations, institutions and industrial organizations all over the world, and in the past few months has been increasing at an unusual rate. The demand is scattered far and wide, and it is this lack of a concentration which has made it impracticable for the average motion picture producer to look away from the quicker and larger profits of the theatrical field."

"We started out five years ago to make educational pictures, and quickly discovered that we were ahead of the times. However, we were the pioneers, and from that day to this we have laid out plans to provide the real "educational film" when the time became ripe to market such a product. Months and years have been spent in investigating and organizing on an international basis, and now we have a lead of several years in advance of all motion picture producers who aim to provide for this market, which is an asset that we know money cannot buy."

"We believe 'that the shoemaker should stick to his last.' The production of films for serious purposes cannot be mixed carelessly with miscellaneous motion picture manufacture. We have concentrated on short subjects of an educational nature, and have been successful in marketing such motion pictures in the theatrical field. When the moment arrives, we will be ready to step forward with extensive non-theatrical production, made solely and exclusively for educational purposes, and laid along lines which we have found most satisfactory after thorough tests."

Arrow Invades Foreign Fields

Opens Offices in Paris and Milan. British Firm to Handle Arrow's Short Reelers and Features

THE Arrow Film Corporation has just closed final arrangements whereby they will open a series of offices abroad. An office has been opened in Paris, France, at 6 Rue Chappal; another branch will be opened in Milan, Italy, at 4 Via Dante. Both of these offices are in the center of the cities where the various film offices are located. At each office there is said to be a fine organization with an ample staff of men to handle the Arrow product. As soon as arrangements can be perfected, branches will be put in Brussels, Belgium, and Geneva, Switzerland, according to reports.

From these branch offices the salesmen will cover the following territory: Italy, Spain, Portugal, Holland and Belgium in addition to France and Switzerland. These offices will all be in the hands of experienced film men who recently visited the New York office of the Arrow Film Corporation where they spent considerable time in looking over the various Arrow pictures. All of the short reel subjects, as well as the big features handled by the Arrow for the United States, will be shipped abroad and the whole world's rights sold on them.

An arrangement has just been closed by W. E. Shallenberger, President of the Arrow with Mr. Montague Cohen, whereby Mr. Cohen will take back to England with him all of the short subjects as well as the features now being handled by Arrow. Mr. Cohen, who is reported to be a prominent film man in England, recently organized his own company. The name of the new firm is Film Rights, Ltd. They will have offices in the West End of London either at Water street or Soho square, which is in the heart of the film business.

The Arrow Film announces that the affiliation of Montague Cohen and the Arrow Film Corporation will give the latter concern offices or direct representation in six of the prominent foreign countries. Mr. Cohen sailed for England this week and took back with him a sample print of all of the film subjects as well as the big features, that Arrow had open for the United Kingdom.

Good Cast Being Assembled for "The Butterfly Man"

Chicago Gets Showing of Capital Film Pleading Irish Cause

The Capital-Film Company has announced that a private showing in Chicago of its newly acquired photoplay "For the Freedom of Ireland" has been set for the evening of November 10th at Orchestra Hall.

The audience will be made up of many distinguished persons, all of whom are vitally interested in this production. Ex-Governor Dunne of Illinois will be present at the initial exhibition, as well as leaders prominently identified with Irish circles in Chicago. Members of the Irish Fellowship Club and Catholic organizations and churches, also managing editors of the daily papers, have been invited.

The showing is the first of its kind ever given in a large downtown house. S. L. Barnard, president of the Capital Film Company, has promised special additional features, the nature of which he refuses to disclose. A special orchestra has been engaged to render music identified with Erin, in harmony with the picture, and singers will give the simple folk songs of Ireland to complete an impressive program.

"For the Freedom of Ireland" is claimed as probably the greatest photoplay championing the cause of Ireland ever attempted. It is the pictured oppression of a nation striving to gain release from the yoke which clamps it to earth. It is the plea of a smaller nation for an equal freedom, an equal right to national growth. The picture deals with the questions of to-day, the democracy we fought for, and the motives actuating the league of nations. The fact that the events portrayed spring spontaneously from the hearts of a people is enough to insure its enthusiastic reception.

The Capital Film Company has made no selling plans for the picture as yet.

Bennett Musson has assumed the duties of scenario editor for William S. Hart. Mr. Musson is an old theatrical man and is well known as a playwright, author and scenario writer.

Conference of Pioneer Exchange Heads for Eastern Territory

A conference of the heads of the Pioneer exchanges controlling the East was held last week at the Pioneer headquarters in New York. M. H. Hoffman, general manager of the Pioneer, presided. Among those who attended the conference were Ben Amsterdam of the Masterpiece Film Attractions of Phila., N. A. Lightman of the Criterion of Boston, I. Cobe, manager of the Pioneer Buffalo Exchange, J. J. Bellman, of the Pioneer New York Office, J. J. Mooney, manager of the new Pioneer Exchange of Cleveland, and W. A. Blankmeyer of the office which has just been opened in Cleveland.

Among the decisions reached was the continuance of the policy to handle only the biggest and most pretentious of independent productions. The conference also put its approval upon several scripts which are slated for early production by the different units of the Pioneer cooperative producing organizations.

Pathe Opens Portland Exchange With B. J. Sperry as Manager

B. J. Sperry has been appointed manager of the Portland Exchange of Pathe Exchange, Inc., recently opened. This makes the thirty-second link in the system of Pathe offices which cover the entire country. The Portland branch will distribute through the entire State of Oregon and a small portion of the southern part of the State of Washington.

Hallmark Engages Marie Shotwell

Marie Shotwell has been engaged by Leon Britton, productions' manager for Hallmark Pictures Corporation, to play one of the leading roles in a Hallmark picture, production of which was commenced, this week, under the direction of Dallas M. Fitzgerald at the Fifty-fourth Street Studio.

The title of this picture has not been chosen. It is said to be a screen version from an original story by Leon Britton. In Hallmark's production, Miss Shotwell will play opposite Edmund Breese. Anna Lehr has the starring role.

ZaSu Pitts Elevated to Stardom

Young Player Has Had Quick Rise After Attracting Attention in "Better Half" And Others

ZA SU PITTS, the comedienne who has appeared in Brentwood productions and released by Robertson-Cole, has stolen her way to stardom. This became known with the announcement by Robertson-Cole that the actress who has come up almost over night will soon appear as the star of "Where There's a Will," a super attraction being filmed by Brentwood for Robertson-Cole.

When Za Su Pitts made her debut to the screen, she was just one of the many in the cast. In spite of her small part, critics from all sections of the country espied her and made separate mention of her natural motion picture experience. With time her popularity increased and she was given better parts.

Officials in charge of the Brentwood Studios on the Coast were besieged with requests to give her chance. Then came her appearance in the Brentwood productions, "Better Times" and "The Other Half." In using the film expression, she just captured the picture in spite of the fact that her role was one of the lesser parts.

In her first starring vehicle, "Where There's a Will" Brentwood has given her a role that will give her a real chance to display her natural theatrical wares. It is a part just suited to her, for there are many high spots of dramatic tension and at the same time so intermingled with comedy that she is bound to make good.

Claude Mitchell, a director of note, has been assigned to Za Su for her coming-out picture. He has surrounded her with a cast that will make the picture all that is expected of it. Jualanne Johnston, Fannie Midgley, Anna Hernendes, Edwin Stevens, Henry Woodward, Frank Hayes, Hughie Mack and W. H. Bainbridge, all capable film players, will suport Za Su in her first starring production.

"Za Su Pitts has natural talent and is a rapid fire worker," said her director after the last scene had been shot for the big production. Although a baby in years and of short experience in big parts she is not a bit over anxious but takes direction like an old war horse. This combination will make her a real star and the production in which she stars will be a sure winner with the rank and file of motion picture fans. The exchanges have a real treat in "Where There's a Will."

The Robertson-Cole pictures will be sure money makers, for this concern will not sell pictures which have no money return value. In doing this, it is announced that the public will be the judge and that the cast of the big productions will be named by the popularity of the players in Robertson-Cole successes.

"I admit that I have worked hard to attain the part of a star," said Za Su Pitts, "but I have had an excellent opportunity by being cast in parts which just suited my dramatic ability and which I liked to play."

New Allgood Serial is Titled

"The Whirlwind" With Charles Hutchinson Said to Abound With Big Thrills

WITH the completion of the first, and part of the second and third episodes of their new serial in which Charles Hutchison, the screen's dare-devil, is the star, the officers of the Allgood Pictures Corporation this week announced that the thriller will be known as "The Whirlwind."

The foreign rights of this big fifteen episode serial are being sold by E. S. Manheimer, of 126 West 46th Street, who has added it to the many serials which he is handling, and he is confident that it will score as great a hit as "The Great Gamble" in which Hutchison recently acquired his latest film fame.

Much thought was given to choosing the right name for the new serial which Director Joseph A. Golden declares will outdo in thrills and real danger anything even he has done in this line before (and it will be remembered, too, that he was responsible for "The Great Gamble"), and the choice of "The Whirlwind" is an apt one. There are a great many Bronxites and motorcycle enthusiasts of New York, though, who are uncertain in their minds whether the "whirlwind" applies to the serial itself or to Hutchison. Since watching him perform one of his stunts this past week, the consensus of opinion is given the star.

Hutchison is one man who can make his motorcycle behave. He can speak to it and it does as he wishes. Those who watched him make it obey one day last week now know this. Hutchison had decided to leap the Bronx River on his motorcycle where it is twenty-eight feet wide. The actual distance to be covered, though, from one bank to the other, was thirty-five feet and six inches. What made the feat most difficult of all was that the motorcyclist did not have a long, clear approach and was compelled to speed at a fifty-mile pace from a distance of only two hundred and fifty feet. The word had gone out and a big crowd was on hand, including the many scoffing motorcycle experts who insisted that "The Whirlwind's" star was in for a good ducking, if not for worse.

But just as successfully as he had previously cleared the Ausable Chasm in the Adirondacks, Hutchison shot over the Bronx River and landed safely on the opposite bank. Before he could stop his flying car, however, it had hit a mudhole and motorcycle and rider were thrown about ten feet. With his proverbial luck, Hutchison landed, unhurt, in a clump of bushes, though from the opposite bank it looked like the end of the serial had arrived.

Great Campaign on Mrs. Chaplin

Louis Mayer Plans far Reaching Publicity Drive on Star to Bring her Before all the Public

IF the name of Mildred Harris Chaplin does not become one of the best known household words in the realm of movie folk it will not be the fault of her producer, Louis B. Mayer, who has outlined in her behalf a world-wide publicity and exploitation campaign reaching from Scandinavia to the Antipodes on one side and from Alaska to Cape Horn on our own continent.

Mrs. Chaplin has already won her laurels as a star in a number of productions which have proved money-makers for exhibitors. "The Price of a Good Time," "For Husbands Only" and "Borrowed Clothes." These and other successes have established her position in the movie world, but Mayer is not to rely on past performances. With her as with Miss Anita Stewart, he will follow out his well-known policy of great star, great play, great director and great cast, and back of all this he will use oceans of printers ink to instill into the public mind the confidence which he already has in the wife of the comedy king.

Supplementing a big paid trade paper and magazine advertising campaign throughout America and Europe, many unusual features of a personal nature are included in the Mayer plan. Already the country is being flooded with new photographs of Mildred, which is insuring representation in both movie fan magazines and those of general circulation.

Newspaper syndicate features based on the home life of "Mildred and Charlie" will reach every nook and corner of the country, while special exclusive stories on many subjects have been eagerly accepted by the motion picture editors of leading dailies throughout the land.

An illustrated series of articles to appear over her own signature. These articles will be of especial interest to women. A book by her on an unusual subject will shortly be published by the Britton Publishing Company of New York, which published "Laugh and Live" for Douglas Fairbanks and "The Cowboy Poems" by William S. Hart. The Britton Company have arranged to give wide publicity to the book which, because of its subject matter, should reach an enormous circulation.

A beautiful colored portrait of the star will adorn the top of millions of calendars, which will eventually find their way into the majority of American homes. Arrangements have been made for the use of her photo on countless numbers of high-priced candy boxes.

But it is generally known that no amount of publicity will put over a star unless she has the goods to back it up. Evidently Mayer has no fear of the outcome, for he is already spending all kinds of money on her first production.

Hodkinson Feature Given Praise

"The Westerners" is Reported By Exhibitors to be Breaking Marks On Box Office Receipts

EXHIBITORS the country over show no hesitancy in proclaiming Benjamin B. Hampton's "The Westerners" one of the great successes of the year. Ever since the release date of the picturization of Stewart Edward White's story of the Black Hills there has been a constant flow of testimonials into the Hodkinson offices from exhibitors, who profited beyond their expectations on their presentations of "The Westerners."

A week following its record-breaking pre-release engagement at The Mark Strand New York, "The Westerners," made its stand at the American Theatre, Denver, and, sweeping all opposition aside, created a new mark for a week's run in the Colorado metropolis.

The same week the Benjamin B. Hampton production demonstrated its remarkable audience-power at William Fox's Audubon Theatre on Upper Broadway, playing to the biggest four days' business the house has ever known and prompting Manager Ben Jackson's classification of it as "the best Western picture that has come across in months."

Then came the epoch-making engagement of "The Westerners" at Charles H. Miles' Grand Theatre, Cleveland, where the fifth day of the presentation accounted for an even greater attendance than on Sunday, the opening day. Mr. Miles' Forest city manager writing Hodkinson that there has never been a production at the Grand that maintained its popularity to the end as did "The Westerners."

G. H. Selig, manager of the Gem, Chicago, enjoyed a profitable five-day run on "The Westerners." Though booked originally for three days, Manager Selig obtained an extension to permit of a Saturday and Sunday showing that crowded the spacious State Street house at every performance. "An excellent production for picture lovers and, what is more, a genuine box-office treat for exhibitors," was Mr. Selig's message to the Chicago Hodkinson branch.

San Francisco also took kindly to the Hodkinson release. In a week's run at Turner and Dahnken's Tivoli Theatre "The Westerners" played to capacity crowds for the engagement after an opening day of turn-away business. E. B. Johnson, house manager wired: "A real feature. Give us more from Stewart Edward White."

Dell Henderson has Signed Up As Director For Fox Film

Dell Henderson has been signed as a director of William Fox features. His first production will have George Walsh as the star. Work will be begun at once. In his first picture for Fox, Mr. Henderson will have as his assistant director John J. Foley, who acted in a similar capacity with Emmett J. Flynn, who directed William Russell in "Eastward Ho!" recently completed.

Wide Exhibitor Interest Shown on Tarkington's Boy Films

The popularity of Booth Tarkington's boy characters, Penrod and Bill Baxter, linked with the recent announcement of Goldwyn's acquisition of the Indiana author to do a series of twelve-reel pictures under the title of "Edgar Comedies," has brought about a marked reaction on the part of exhibitors, according to report received from Goldwyn offices.

The most surprising feature of the inquiries being received daily is the curiosity revealed about the type of boy Tarkington has created for the photoplays. "How Old is Edgar?" is the substance of the questionnaire sent by many exhibitors. To give an instance, a Goldwyn exhibitor in Boston writes: "Where is Tarkington going to find another type of boy after he has so completely covered youth in his Penrod stories and adolescence in the Baxter 'Seventeen' series? What is Edgar's age? I like the name Edgar Comedies, but I am curious to know what sort of a feller this Edgar is going to be."

Frank Keenan Stars In "Brothers Divided," A Timely Theme

There is said to be a big human and timely note in "Brothers Divided," Frank Keenan's production following "The World Aflame," which, at this time of widespread industrial unrest, will have a popular appeal.

In "Brothers Divided" Frank Keenan portrays a dual role, that of two totally different characters, and, by his skill and artistry, shows subtle and amazing contrasts. The story carries with it a message embodying the idea of co-operative service, which always results in human happiness.

The grim tragedy of prison figures in the picture. The script calls for scenes laid in a State's prison and Governor Campbell of Arizona gave permission to use one of the largest institutions in the West for the filming.

The convicts, who had already learned a lesson when the showing of "The World Aflame" was made there, entered into the spirit of the occasion with great eagerness. Pathe announces that the picture will be set for release soon.

Special Service Section on Sansonia in "The Superman"

A "DIFFERENT" ONE

HERE is one which is different anyway and offers opportunities for exploitation.

There is one thing which we want to tell you about "The Superman" and that is that it is not to be taken seriously. The fundamental plot is melodrama, with a cast of Italian actors who perform their roles in a way which to American standards is funny. To add to the comedy turn as viewed in this country, are "kidding" subtitles written in the George Ade "Fables of Slang" style, which for the most part are rather good. These titles take it for granted that the spectator knows what is coming next in the unfolding of the ancient vintage plot and makes fun of it. To begin with the early scenes are interspersed with verses of a doggerel poem which end with an author's note that he couldn't think of any more rhymes so had to quit.

Then comes such classics as "—And the villain still pursued her" although most of these are rather original.

Now for all that this plot is so ancient, the action so melodramatic enacted in a foreign atmosphere and according to foreign technique, the darned thing still carries a lot of suspense in its individual scenes because it is full of thrill stuff of the very kind which has made Doug Fairbanks films so popular.

What this Sansonia, the film's athletic, strong man hero does in the way of providing action will make the inimitable Doug green with envy. This is an Italian "Modern Musketeer," and "His Majesty, The American" rolled into one, with a touch of "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin" thrown in. We aren't going to spend much time on the plot of this as it doesn't figure in the film's good qualities. Suffice to say that a certain royal prince of some mythical European country aspiring to the throne, conspires to remove a princess and her little daughter who stands between him and his ambitions. Sansonia, who is an athletic workingman who lives somewhere around the neck of the woods where all this conspiring is taking place is the instrument that fate has decreed shall frustrate the bad Prince's evil designs. After being pursued and pursuing, both in the air and on the ground, in buildings and on the top of them, Sansonia brings the two heirs back to the royal court, the Prince is punished for his misdeeds and Sansonia is on the way to the priest to get hitched up to a good looking girl, who seemed to have been brought into the story, so he would have somebody to marry, seeing that according to European standards the director couldn't have the Princess, who must have been a widow since we didn't see anything of her man, fall for him.

Now don't infer from this plot recital that this picture is a lemon. It isn't. It's a first-class comedy and many of the titles are good. Here is the last one used after the "clutch." It reads: "That's all there is. There isn't any more."

BILLED CORRECTLY THIS IS A WINNER

Unusual is Mild for this One.—We believe that this film can be put over and made to pass as a real hit. It contains a bunch of good thrills, and a lot of first class comedy if the spectator gets the idea at the beginning. Be sure that you let them know what to expect. Make a joke of the whole thing, except when speaking of the Fairbanks stuff when you want to promise them real stunts.

We can't give you the cast and wouldn't mean a thing to any one as they are all Italian players. The hero is a good looking chap and is certainly some athlete. There can be no question but that this is an Italian imitation of Fairbanks pictures.

If you played the "Maciste" pictures you will know that they did a whale of a business. We would consider this the same sort of an attraction which should be handled the same way.

SOME STUNTS OF "THE SUPERMAN"

SAMSON has climbed up the inside of a tall chimney said to be a hundred and fifty feet high (it looks it), to escape his enemies. A cat brings up a string to him, then he pulls up a rope, and swings out and down it's side. Once he is down and his pursuers still inside, he uses a big sledge to batter in the bricks of the chimney on one side and then pushes it over. Speaking photoplayically four or five of the villains of the picture are sent to their merited death. While pursuing the bad men of the story he climbs up the side of a tall building by means of a conductor pipe and down again after rescuing some one.

The little princess goes to the theater (a good view of the Italian style of theater is shown with foreign circus acts being staged) and the villains kidnap her again. Samson comes to her rescue and swings down on a sort of fire escape where he fights a battle with the kidnapper.

In another rescue scene (the big princess this time), he goes out on a roof. The princess slips and comes near going over the eaves. Samson saves her in a scene which will make 'em grab their seats. Another scene in the same sequence shows Samson and the princess sliding down a rope from the roof of the building. The rope is too short, so Samson swings back and forth on it until he is able to dump the princess into an open window of a building nearby. Then he uses the same tactics to get himself into the window.

While rescuing the little princess he is unable to reach the ground the way he had started, fire-escape too short, if we remember correctly, and the child climbs out over a window ledge and balances herself until the hero can complete the rescuing act. It wouldn't be much of a feat for a grown-up, but for a girl not over ten it registers as good stuff.

Samson is being attacked by a half dozen of the prince's hirelings. A fight takes place in a darkened room where about all you see is flying legs and arms. Then next scene shows Samson carrying five of the number out of the door and dumping them in the street. They are real men too, no dummies. You can see them kick as they are being carted along by the strong man.

In one of the sequences where Samson is running instead of fighting, he is chased up a steel girder tower and proceeds to do a tight wire stunt on one of eye beams.

There are a lot of stunts like these, so many that we can't remember them all. They came to fast to keep them in mind.

ADVERTISING POSSIBILITIES

We can't see only one way to exploit this feature unless an exhibitor is catering to a patronage composed of foreigners, especially Italians, which would change the aspect of the whole case, and that is to bill the picture as a novelty, explaining that you are going to show them the funniest picture they have ever seen and introduce to them the Italian Douglas Fairbanks, who does all the stunts which this star can do and then some. Then we would state that the film contains more thrills than the best serial picture they have ever seen and some subtitles which rival the famous "Fables in Slang."

We would remind them that they are always asking for something "different" and that you are giving it to them.

When it came to paper for the attraction we would take the circus, sensational stuff prepared for it (we are assuming this is what has been made) and make fun of that too, just as the cutter has in the American version of the film. Use the same methods which you would or did in advertising "Uncle Tom Without the Cabin" or "Shenandoah vs. Salone."

When you prepare your newspaper copy adopt the same policy. Write your stuff in the slang vein.

In using the stills which you can obtain select only those with which you can do the same thing. For instance — mount them on a white card board with space enough so you can write in descriptive paragraphs which will get a grin from those who stop to look at them.

We are reproducing some of these stills so you can get an idea of what the picture is like. In scene one on the first page we would say some thing like this: "Samson isn't going to lasso the whole city. He's just rescuing the princess — again." In scene two we would write: "With one fell blow he busted the chimney in to bits and killed off a half dozen of his many enemies." For scene three of the same layout we would pencil something like this: "John Drew has nothing on this guy when it comes to displaying histrionic ability." Get the idea?

FOR YOUR NEWSPAPER DISPLAY

We would use one of the most melodramatic scene cuts for the basis of our newspaper display, with another of the star which shows his athletic physique around which to base our claim that he is the Italian Fairbanks placed up in a top corner.

Then we would frame head line something like these:

"Fairbanks Will Be Green With Envy — when he sees the stunts in this one."

"An Italian Melodramatic Plot, a sprinkling of George Ade titles, more thrills than characterized 'A Modern Musketeer' and an Italian rival of the inimitable Doug, make"—(give title).

"About a dozen 'he' villains pursued them but one real life sized hero, a la Doug Fairbanks foiled them all."

"A step from the sublime to the ridiculous."

Then we would put the title of the film up in good big bold type with the Italian title added same was "The Acrobat of Death" as a second choice. Following this we would add some selling talk something like these:

"Here is a film with a thousand real thrills, as many more good laughs and originally it was a serious melodrama. How can that be? It was made in Italy with the Italian Fairbanks doing the lead, hence the stunts. It was titled in America by a chap who is as clever at slang phrases as George Ade. It is so badly overplayed according to our standards that the scenes are first-class comedy. You have asked why we didn't give you something 'different' and here it is. The story? It's about a hero who wouldn't let a gang of princely roughnecks kidnap a princess. However, the story doesn't have anything to do with the entertainment you will find in this one."

"The funniest thing in the world is melodrama out of tune, and that's what this one is. Then there is a hero who gives Fairbanks cards and spades in athletic stunts and some subtitles which are worthy of George Ade. If you want to see a film which is different, get around while we are playing 'The Superman — nee (Italian title) 'The Acrobat of Death.'

"'My kingdom for a horse' stuff hasn't anything on the action and titles in this one. It's an Italian-made melodrama with the action explained by some great 'kidding' subtitles written in the 'Fables of Slang' style, with an athletic hero who rivals our own Doug. The combination makes an offering which has loads of comedy, a hundred real thrills and a great advantage of being a novelty. As a steady diet this probably would get tiresome, but for something 'different' it's there a hundred ways."

Exhibitors Approve Roberston-Cole Plans, Joe Merrick Finds

Joe L. Merrick, field manager for Robertson-Cole, has returned to his desk after a trip which extended to the Pacific Northwest and Los Angeles and the cities of the Southern tiers of States. Mr. Merrick's activities included chats with exhibitors and the trade generally.

"There are abundant signs of prosperity in every section of the country," declares Mr Merrick, "and our managers of the twenty-six exchanges which Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation have established are equally enthusiastic for the outlook for business.

"I found a warm welcome from exhibitors in their unqualified approval of the direct contact to be afforded by the Robert-Cole exchanges and not a dissenting note of disapproval as to the merit and wide variety of the material marketed by the company. In fact the support and service of Robertson-Cole in the way of superior and prompt advertising mediums, in printing, lithographs and newsy press matter was one of the principal subjects of comment.

"The progress made by Robertson-Cole, and the constant efforts of the organization to request constructive criticism and to formulate a policy to please exhibitors, was reiterated time and time again in different zones of the country."

"Realart Week" Opens with Bang on Sunday, in Washington

According to a telegram received at the offices of the Realart Pictures Corporation from Tom Moore of Washington, D. C., the Realart Week opened with a bang at the Capital on last Sunday. According to Moore, the "Soldiers of Fortune," which was shown in the Garden Theatre, broke all records for that house up-to-date, while the "Erstwhile Susan," showing at the Rialto, succeeded in packing the theatre. The showing of "The Soldiers of Fortune" was in the nature of a pre-release, and much of the success of the initial showing is credited by the Realart officials to the exploitation campaign started by Mr. Moore.

Up to the present, it is said only one print of the "Soldiers of Fortune" has been available, and this one Tom Moore secured for the performance at the Capital. It is expected, however, that other prints will be ready within a week or ten days for shipment to the branch offices.

Tyrad President Goes to Chicago to Close Release Contracts

Matthias Radin, president of Tyrad Pictures, Inc., in No. 729 Seventh avenue, was called to Chicago this week to close contracts on various features now released by this company. The Sarah Bernhardt feature, "It Happened In Paris," in which Mme. Bernhardt starred Madame Yorska and W. Lawson Butt, is obtainable through Tyrad. Mme. Bernhardt wrote the story, Jack Cunningham furnished the scenario and David Hartford directed. "Human Passions," starring Lottie Tilford, and "Broken Hearts," starring Betty Mason, both Tyrad features supervised by Jacques Tyrol, are selling rapidly.

"Eminent Authors" Under Way

Five Goldwyn Productions of Works By Well-Known Writers Are Now Reported in Full Swing

WITH five productions under way east and west at the Goldwyn studios, the Eminent Authors now have five directors completing photo-plays by Rupert Hughes, Basil King, Gertrude Atherton, Leroy Scott and Mary Roberts Rinehart.

The "Cup of Fury" by Rupert Hughes will be the first release and is the first completed production by Eminent Authors. Mr. Hughes expects to view the film in New York next week and put his O.K. on the titling and editing. The director was T. Hayes Hunter, and the heading players are Helene Chadwick and Rockliffe Fellowes.

The first production in the east by Goldwyn at the Biograph studios is an Eminent Authors picture by Leroy Scott, entitled "Partners of the Night." Paul Scardon will direct. At Culver City most of "Tower of Ivory" by Gertrude Atherton has been taken under the direction of William Parke. It is his first picture at the Goldwyn studios. In the cast are Barbara Castleton, Lawson Butt, John Bowers, Sydney Ainsworth, Doris Pawn and Edythe Chapman. A spectacular shipwreck is now being shot off the Pacific coast.

Basil King is still at Culver City for the production of his novel "The Street Called Straight" for Eminent Authors. Wallace Worsley is directing the company which includes Milton Sills, Namoi Childers, Charles Clary, Irene Rich, Jane Sterling, Lawson Butt, Alec Francis and Lydia Yeamans Titus.

For munition plant scenes in "Dangerous Days" by Mary Roberts Rinehart, Reginald Barker will take his company to San Francisco. The first scenes were shot the end of last week with a cast including Lawson Butt, Clarissia Selwynne and Rowland Lee.

"Empty Arms" Initial Release

Park-Whiteside Combine Announces Its First Production, Starring Thurston Hall; Good Cast

"EMPTY ARMS," it was announced recently at their offices in the Fitzgerald Building, is the title of the first photoplay to be produced by Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, reported to be a four million dollar combination. Mr. Park is well known in the industry by virtue of his past producing activities, while Mr. Whiteside is said to be a Wall Street man of considerable standing and backing.

Gail Kane, who is now appearing with much success in the Broadway hit, "The Woman in Room 13." by Max Marcin, will be starred, while Thurston Hall, who is at present appearing in the leading role of "Civilian Clothes" at the Morosco Theatre, will be featured. In the supporting cast will be seen J. Herbert Frank, Irene Blackwell, Warren Chandler, Howard Truesdale, Beverly Bruce and Mme. Kelvah.

The author is Willard King Bradley. Frank Reicher will direct the production. No announcement as to how the picture will be handled has yet been made by either Mr. Park or Mr. Whiteside, but in all probability the picture will be exploited as a States Right proposition of 42-centimetre dimensions.

Robert McLaughlin Due in New York with New Argus Film

Robert McLaughlin, author of "The House Without Children," which is being sold on the State rights market by Robert W. Priest of the Times Building, in company with his director, Mr. Sam Brodsky, is due in New York with the second Argus-McLaughlin production, "Those Endearing Young Charms."

Argus Enterprises is said to be making a series of special motion-picture productions for the open market. Announcements will be made at a future date regarding these pictures.

F. P.-Lasky November Schedule

Twelve Features Due for Release on Paramount-Artcraft List for Month of November

TWELVE features are included in the list of Paramount-Artcraft releases scheduled by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for November, as announced by Walter E. Greene, vice-president in charge of distribution. Among these are the Cecil B. DeMille Special, "Male and Female;" the first production presenting Thomas H. Ince's new co-stars, Douglas MacLean and Doris May; a D. W. Griffith production; three other Thomas H. Ince productions in which Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett and Charles Ray are the respective stars; a Cosmopolitan production and pictures starring Dorothy Gish, Marguerite Clark, Irene Castle, Bryant Washburn and Elsie Ferguson.

Scheduled for November 2 are Dorothy Gish in "Turning the Tables" and Dorothy Dalton in "L'Apache." The first named is from an original story and scenario by Lois Zellner, whose success as an author of screen comedy has attracted wide attention of late. The picture was directed by Elmer Clifton, who has had charge of all of Miss Gish's productions since she became a Paramount star. "L'Apache" was adapted by R. Cecil Smith from a story by Adele Buffington, the scenes being laid in the underworld of Paris. Joseph De Grasse directed this picture which is Miss Dalton's first Ince production to be made in the East.

Three releases are scheduled for November 9. They are "Luck in Pawn," with Marguerite Clark as star, and two Thomas H. Ince productions, Charles Ray in "Crooked Straight" and Enid Bennett in "What Every Woman Learns." The scenario of the Clark picture was written by Alice Eyton from Marvin Taylor's story. Walter Edwards directed. "Crooked Straight" is another of Julien Josephson's stories which have proved such satisfying vehicles for Charles Ray, with Jerome Storm again at the helm as director. Eugene B. Lewis's story, "The Gay Miss Fortesque," provided the foundation for "What Every Woman Learns," in which Enid Bennett is starred. The Ince-supervised production was directed by Fred Niblo.

Release of "The Black Secret"

Pearl White-Pathe Serial, Released Nov. 9, Incorporates New Mode of Treating a Serial Theme

PATHE asserts that an event in the history of motion picture serials and a long step forward in their production will be disclosed for public opinion on November 9th with the release by Pathe Exchange, Inc., of Pearl White's latest serial "The Black Secret," based on Robert W. Chambers' thrilling novel of adventure and mystery, "In Secret."

Mr. Chambers' popularity as a writer of "best sellers" has given the Pathe serial, "The Black Secret," a great exploitation impetus, particularly in connection with the publicity and advertising campaign which has been launched by Pathe. The serial has been tied up through the Doran Company with bookstore window displays throughout the country, it is said; and, moreover, the campaign book, prepared by the Pathe Exploitation and Serial Publicity Departments, is reported to be the most comprehensive yet issued in connection with a serial.

George B. Seitz, Producer and Director of the Pathe serial, "The Black Secret."

Aside from its author and its plot, "The Black Secret," as produced by Mr. Seitz, is said to differ radically from the serial of the past. The permanent cast contains only three persons — Miss White, the star, Walter McGrail and Wallace McCutcheon. In other words, only these three characters go all the way through the story, the others being limited in appearance to the episode in which they are introduced. One entire episode was filmed with only three people appearing before the camera, and every scene was an exterior. This is said to be the first time such an experiment was ever tried in a serial, and reviewers are reported to have stated that Director Seitz obtained the maximum of dramatic intensity by this means. In still another way "The Black Secret" departs from the ordinary serial treatment. It contains not one villain, but fifteen,— a different heavy character being employed in each episode. As the story advances, each villain is disposed of in some manner that is quite in keeping with the atmosphere of the situation in which the action occurs.

New Fox Production Begun With Madlaine Traverse Starred

Madlaine Traverse, statuesque Fox star, has completed work on "The Hell Ship" and is ready to begin work on another production for William Fox. "What Would You Do?" is the title of this latest feature. It is from the pen of Denison Clift, who also adapted it for the screen. Edmund Lawrence is the director.

Marion Fairfax Engaged to White Features for Marshall Neilan

Miss Marion Fairfax, author, playwright and for the past four years writer of some of the best photoplays produced by the Famous Players-Lasky Company, has been engaged by Marshall Neilan to write the scripts for all the forthcoming Neilan productions.

It was during the filming of a scene from "The Sowers" starring Blanche Sweet that Miss Fairfax first met Marshall Neilan. A little later Neilan had the leading male role in "Freckles" one of Miss Fairfax's stories, and then and there was sown a seed of friendship and respect, it is said, which four years later resulted in her affixing her signature to a contract to write the scenarios for all the Neilan productions.

During her service with Famous Players Miss Fairfax has written the scripts of many photoplays, amongst which some of the best known are: "The Clown," "The Honor of his House," "The Secret of His Game," "The Blacklist," "The Valley of the Giants," "The Westerner," "Vicky Van," "Love Insurance," "Hashimura Togo," and "The Immigrant."

"No Time Out" for Geo. B. Seitz

George B. Seitz, three weeks ago, finished "Bound and Gagged," of which he is the producer, the director and at the present time the star. Though a very brief space of time has elapsed, the present already finds the producer actively engaged on his next product for Pathe, according to the reports received here. The new Pathe serial has been temporarily entitled "Pirate Gold." Frank Leon Smith, author of the story and scenario of "Bound and Gagged," is also author of "Pirate Gold." The scenario is being prepared by Bertram Millhauser who has been associated with Mr. Seitz in many successful Pathe serials.

Again Mr. Seitz appears in the triple role of producer, director and star. His leading woman in "Pirate Gold" is Marguerite Courtot who played the feminine lead in "Bound and Gagged" and who recently signed a year's contract to appear in Pathe serials. The remainder of the cast is the same as that for "Bound and Gagged," including Harry Semels, Frank Redman, Thomas Goodwin, Joseph Cuney and Willian P. Burt.

Larry Semon Signs For Three More Years with Vitagraph

Larry Semon, whose popularity as a screen comedian has been advancing in leaps and bounds until he is now recognized as one of the foremost funmakers before the camera, has renewed his contract with Vitagraph. Under the terms of the arrangement made between the author-director-actor and Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, Mr. Semon will continue under the Vitagraph banner until 1922.

Larry Semon writes his own plays, directs them and stars in them. It has been stated by critics that no two of his comedies are alike; hat his own methods as a comedian are inimitable and he makes no effort to imitate others.

ROTHACKER WORK

Appreciation from Equity on Laboratory Results

IMMEDIATELY after the showing of our first print of Clara Kimball Young's picture "Eyes of Youth" at the Hotel Astor, Thursday, October 30th, Mr. Herbert K. Somborn, President of the Equity Pictures Corporaton, wired the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. as follows:

I take this means of extending to you and your associates heartiest congratulations and thanks for the beautiful work given us on the print "Eyes of Youth"—It is without a question of a doubt as fine an example of laboratory work that I have ever had the pleasure of seeing—Sincere good wishes for your continued success—Kindest regards".

Kremer on Trip in Interests of Five Chaplin Comedies

Victor Kremer left New York this week for an extensive sales trip in the interests of his various productions, among which are prominently included Essanay's "A Burlesque On Carmen," starring Charlie Chaplin, together with four other Chaplin comedies, namely: "The Champion," "A Jitney Elopement," "Work" and "By the Sea." Kremer's itinerary will include Washington, Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Detroit, Chicago, Indianapolis, Cincinnati, Louisville, Omaha, Salt Lake City, Denver and Los Angeles. He is carrying with him a new edition of Chaplin's "A Burlesque On Carmen," containing new comedy sub-titles, all of which have been pictorially designed by William I. Sackheim and a staff of experts.

Before leaving New York Mr. Kremer made the following statement: "Due to the increased scope of our business since the acquisition of the Chaplin pictures, we have been forced to enlarge our quarters and from now on will occupy offices at three different points. Executive quarters have been established in the Longacre Building under the direction of Bert Ennis, while a new exchange, with complete facilities, will be located in the Levitt Building. In addition to these offices we will also maintain quarters at 105 West 40th street, for the convenience of visiting buyers and exhibitors. Within the next month Charlie Chaplin's "A Burlesque On Carmen" will be presented under my direction as a road show offering, including Carmen dancing girls, Spanish jazz band and a well-known stage dancer. Territory will be sold for this production with and without the stage attraction. I have already closed for the following territories: Illinois and Indiana, Mickey Film Co., Chicago, Ill.; West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania, Quality Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa.; District of Columbia, North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, Delaware, Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern Jersey, 20th Century Film Co., Philadelphia, Pa."

Universal Plans Holiday Drive

Business and Good Cheer to Share Parts in Exploitation Campaign Says Universal's Chief

THE Universal Film Company, according to Carl Laemmle, its president, will begin on November 15th what they believe will be the biggest advertising and exploitation campaign ever attempted by a motion picture company. The campaign is to be carried on under the title of "Universal Holiday Season."

Universal's staff of exchange publicity managers and their assistants are to take charge of the holiday drive. Every exchange will be decorated with material suggesting the holiday spirit as a part of the plan to spread the Universal's campaign of cheerfulness broadcast. It is said that every exhibitor in the United States will be asked, whether he books a Universal production or not, to lend his assistance to making the coming holiday season a Universal one.

An order for two hundred and forty thousand one-sheet posters, bearing the wording "Universal Holiday Season," has about been completed. As soon as they arrive from the lithographers they will be distributed to the Universal exchanges where the publicity managers and their assistants will place them in every available space. Some of the slogans which will be used in executing this campaign are: Universal Cheer, Universal Happiness, Universal Thanksgiving, Universal Holiday Spirit, America's Holidays are Universal Holidays, America's Thanksgiving is a Universal Thanksgiving, It's Time to be Happy, Universal Holiday Season is Here, You're a Great Big Kid and You Know It, Get the Universal Holiday Spirit, Be a Cheer Leader for Universal Happiness, Universal Holiday Happiness Campaign—Lend Your Laugh.

Window displays of an animated kind have been devised, and several publicity managers have planned to promote in connection with the drive the idea of "shopping early." One of the publicity events planned is the "Universal Holiday Season Tag-day."

Those desiring to contribute when tagged will be asked to give their money to the Salvation Army or some other worthy charity.

The Universal announcement declares that to carry out such a campaign will cost the Universal Film Company thousands of dollars. However, the reward of increasing the sales of the company and the exhibitor as well as spreading good cheer throughout the land, "will more than pay for any cost," says the Universal report.

Activities of United Artists

New Fairbanks Picture "When the Clouds Roll By" Is Under Way; Abrams Cites Banner Week

UNITED Artists' Corporation will release its second Douglas Fairbanks' production—and the third release of the company—on December 29th, according to an announcement made this week by Hiram Abrams. "When the Clouds Roll By," is the title of the new Fairbanks' picture which is now well along in the making.

The cast supporting Mr. Fairbanks includes Frank Campeau, Ralph Lewis, Herbert Grimwood, Albert McQuarrie, Kathleen Clifford and Daisy Robinson. Victor Fleming is directing the production with the assistance of J. Theodore Reed.

Bookings are now being received at all United Artists' Corporation Distributing depots, and the claim is advanced that indications already point to the same hearty reception for "When the Clouds Roll By" as was accorded to "His Majesty, the American."

In the same announcement Mr. Abrams calls attention to the two notable achievements credited to the "Big Four" on this past week's program of current events in the motion-picture field. Up to the present time the United Artists' Corporation has released two productions, and during the past week both these productions have been given an unusually prominent place in the limelight of Broadway's theatrical district.

D. W. Griffith's "Broken Blossoms" ran at the Strand Theatre, New York, the week of October 19th and broke every existing record for business at the theatre, according to the reports received. Beginning Friday night, October 24th, with the opening of the world's largest theatre, the Capitol, Douglas Fairbanks' first "Big Four" release, "His Majesty, the American," had its initial Broadway showing. Thus, with both of its releases playing simultaneously on Broadway—the Fairbanks' picture—opening the world's largest theatre and Griffith's "Broken Blossoms," breaking every record at the Strand Theatre—United Artists' Corporation feels that it should indeed be credited with a 100 per cent. demonstration of its place in filmdom.

Stella Mayhew, Comedienne, to Form Own Producing Company

Stella Mayhew, who has appeared successfully as a comedienne on the vaudeville stage, announces the formation of her own company to produce two-reel comedies. Although Miss Mayhew will be associated with A. E. & R. R. Riskin in her new producing venture, the papers of incorporation which are now being prepared, make her the controlling and predominating factor in the organization, it is said. Whether or not the company will be named the Stella Mayhew Productions, Inc., is not decided, although it is more than probable that such will be the case.

William B. Davidson and Elsie Ferguson will also be associated with the venture, principally as co-directors with a prominent director of successful short reel comedies, with whom negotiations are now under way, according to reports.

Officials Visit New Fox Plant

Representatives of Eastern Cities Attending Board of Review Conference Inspect Workings

REPRESENTATIVES of more than twenty Mayors, and other officials of Eastern cities, who were attending the conference in New York with the National Board of Review, visited the big new plant of Fox Film Corporation at Tenth avenue and 55th and 56th streets, and also went to the Fox studio at No. 3 West 61st street, where they were the guests of William Farnum, Fox star.

Among the visitors were several friends of Mr. Farnum. Although the star was engaged in going through an important scene of a new play temporarily titled "Pierre LeGrand," he ordered that all work be stopped and turned the setting into the scene of an impromptu reception.

The star not only proved himself an admirable host, but he showed that as a lecturer on the technique of motion pictures he is entertaining and intensely interesting. In the visiting party were two women — Miss Justice T. Ellers, of the Department of Public Safety, Newark, N. J., and Mrs. Dr. McManus, of Hartford, Conn., one of them expressed a wish to see Mr. Farnum acting.

The star, learning of this wish, called his director, J. Gordon Edwards, and suggested that they rehearse a part for the following day. This was done and the cameramen obtained a very fine picture, showing Mr. Farnum conversing earnestly with Bettie Hilbrun, who has the role of Pierre LeGrand's crippled sister. Mr. Edwards stood near them, and in the background were the city officials.

The visitors remained in the studio more than an hour, and then visited the editorial rooms of Fox News, where they were shown how the animated screen newspaper and magazine is prepared and distributed. The editorial rooms of Fox News resemble the editorial room of a big newspaper. Installed there is the United Press service, which is in operation night and day. By means of this Service Managing Director Hancock keeps in constant touch with big events in all parts of the world.

Among those in the party were Dr. McManus, representing Mayor Kinsella of Hartford; Sergeant Gamble, representing the Mayor of Providence; Henry Jenkins, District Superintendent of New York Public Schools; P. F. Jerome, an expert on censorship; Edward Hoffman, Secretary of the Mechanics' Institute; Guy R. Radley, representing the Mayor of Milwaukee; Dean P. Otis, Commissioner of Recreation of Elizabeth, N. J.; Walter J. Nicholson, Commissioner of Public Safety, Syracuse; William P. Capes of Albany; Raymond W. Pullman, Superintendent of the Metropolitan Police Department, Washington, D. C.; John M. Casey, Chief of the License Division of Boston; William J. Brennan, Director of Public Safety, Newark; Joseph C. McShane, of the New York City License Commissioner's office; Lester F. Scott, Executive Secretary of the Camp-Fire Girls of America; the Rev. Wm. B. Tower; Everett Dean Martin, Director of Cooper Union Forum and Chairman of the National Board of Review; Dr. Orlando F. Lewis, General Secretary of the Prison Association of New York; Louis F. Rouillion, Director of Mechanics' Institute; and William D. McGuire, Warren M. Covill, Wilton A. Barrett and Orrin G. Cocke, of the National Board of Review.

E. Storey Stars In "The Golden Hope" After Long Absence

"The Golden Hope," Edith Storey's first starring vehicle for Robertson-Cole, is being completed by the Haworth Company and will be ready for release early in December. "The Golden Hope" marks the return of the star to filmdom after an absence of two years, during which time Miss Storey devoted her time to active war work.

A cast of merit supports Miss Storey in her first Robertson-Cole production, headed by Howard Gaye who plays the role of Eric West. Others in the cast are Marin Sais, Carl Stockdale, Dudley Hendricks and Frank Daniels.

In addition to her dramatic qualifications, Miss Storey possesses the athletic ability of portraying characters which call upon her to show her dexterity and skill as a horsewoman and all-around athlete.

Hallmark's "Famous Directors"

First of This Series Now Under Production By D. H. Fitzgerald Will Star Anna Lehr

DALLAS M. Fitzgerald engaged, recently, by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, to direct a series of pictures for Hallmark's "Famous Directors" series, is on the second week of production with the first of these, a screen version of an original story by Leon D. Britton. J. Clarkson Miller, of Hallmark's scenario staff, wrote the continuity. Director Fitzgerald is working at the Fifty-fourth Street studio, assisted by Hal Hall, as assistant director, Henry Vallett, cameraman and Carl Schultz, technical director.

Anna Lehr leads with a fine supporting cast, which includes Edmund Breese, Marie Shotwell, George Cooper, Wallace Ray, Joseph Granby, Edward Elkas, Peggy Worth, James F. Cullen and Glenn Kunkel, is starred. The story deals with th unhappy marriage of a court justice with a designing widow; the strange murder of the judge; the disappearance of a valuable consignment of radium and the part played by the widow's son, whom she thought dead.

Director Fitzgerald expects to have the production work completed within the next two weeks and subsequent to the cutting and editing of his picture, it will be ready for release on Hallmark's Famous Directors' series the first part of December, following the Keanan Buel production, recently completed, starring Miss Lehr and Ralph Kellard.

Hayakawa Departs From Usual Role in "Illustrious Prince"

When Robertson-Cole's Superior Picture, "The Illustrious Prince," starring Sessue Hayakawa, is offered for release motion picture lovers will see the Japanese star in a role that it is said will bring added glory to his long list of successes. Hayakawa as soon as he read the book from the pen of E. Phillips Oppenheim decided that the role of the Prince was just to his liking and would further develop his screen character in portraying heavy dramatic parts and at the same time play a part that was bound to win the enthusiasm of the on-lookers.

Harry Lendale, Robert Lawler, Mable Ballin and Edward Piel are others prominent in the cast.

Daring Stunts Required of Leah Baird in "The Capitol"

Leah Baird literally goes through fire and water in some of the big scenes of her newest Augustus Thomas drama, "The Capitol," set for early release by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation. Though the artist has demonstrated her daring in ten or more of her successful starring vehicles, it remained for "The Capitol" to supply her greatest thrill.

As in her previous Augustus Thomas productions, "As a Man Thinks" and "The Volcano," Miss Baird is accorded excellent support by a cast of notable players. Besides Alexander Gaden, who was chief in support of Doris Kenyon in "The Bandbox," her first W. W. Hodkinson release, "The Capitol" has such screen favorites as Robert T. Haines, William B. Davidson, Ben Hendricks, Downing Clark and Donald Hugh McBride.

"Bride in Bond" Progressing

Corinne Griffith is making rapid progress on her next Vitagraph feature, "The Bride in Bond," working under the direction of her new director, Lawrence C. Windon. As many of the scenes are interiors, and massive ones at that, Miss Griffith is again spending a few weeks at the Brooklyn studio.

Dr. Josephine Baker to Edit Baby Series for Fox News

The latest acquisition of Fox Film Corporation on the editorial staff of the unique Fox News is announced in the completion of arrangements between William Fox and Dr. Josephine Baker, head of the Bureau of Child Hygiene in the Department of Health, New York City. Dr. Baker has accepted the position of editor of the "Better Babies" series just started in Fox News, the semi-weekly news reel just introduced to the theatre-goers of the country.

Dr. Baker, who is probably the best-known woman physician in the United States, was strongly impressed by the positive educational value of "Better Babies" in Fox News, and when approached on the subject she gladly consented to appear personally in motion pictures along the lines described.

In accepting the position as editor of "Better Babies" Dr. Baker said:

"I think this department of Fox News can accomplish the greatest good. At this time of year, when we are between seasons, the utmost care should be taken of children, as they are especially susceptible to coughs, colds and the dreaded influenza. I am proud to have been asked to head this great work, which can be put before the public in no better way than through the medium of motion pictures — which not only tell a great story, but illustrate it as well."

Several of the episodes of "Better Babies" have already been completed and the first will appear in an early issue of Fox News.

Carl Carson Compiles Catalogue of Educational Films

For what is said to be the first time in the history of motion pictures, a complete catalogue of educational films produced since 1910 is placed before educators and others interested in the non-theatrical exhibition of motion pictures. The index is the culmination of a nine-year task undertaken by Carl Carson, managing editor of the pedagogical section of the Non-Theatrical Distribution Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The task was assumed by Mr. Carson to supplement the textbook and oral teaching on the screen and the motion picture courses which have been standardized on the basis of syllabi, textbooks and college entrance requirements.

Lubliner-Trinz And Ascher Bros. Book Lloyd's Two-Reel Comics

Among the reported two thousand theatres which are said to have already contracted to run the new series of $100,000 two-reel Lloyd comedies, distributed by Pathe, are the entire circuits of Lubliner and Trinz, and the Ascher Brothers, in Chicago, comprising twenty-nine theatres in all.

Fifteen houses on the Ascher Brothers' circuit will play the Lloyd series, which will be inaugurated on November 2, with "Bumping Into Broadway," and includes "Captain Kidd's Kids," "From Hand to Mouth" and "His Royal Slyness."

Suspense In the Screen Serial

L. Burston Says Plot Development And Not "Stunt-Cutting" Should Produce Suspense in Serial

LOUIS BURSTON, president of Burston Films, Inc., has very definite ideas as to the value of the serial on the motion-picture program, and also regarding the methods that are to be followed in developing the theme of a chapter-picture production. These ideas Mr. Burston has given expression to in a recent report received, the main point of which is that real plot action and development should stimulate the suspense attraction of a serial and not the old-fashioned device of cutting a "stunt" in two at the end of an episode, although Mr. Burston concedes that the "stunt" has its logical but subordinate place in the serial too.

In speaking of the "Hawk's Trail," a serial which is said to embody the plan of development approved by The Burston Films head Mr. Burston said:

"The exhibitors will be glad to feature a serial when it is a real serial, rather than the falsely founded, poorly constructed, installment-plan kind of offering such as photoplay theatre managers have heretofore been forced to accept. We are doing away with the familiar type in which the blood thirsty villain opposes the sickly looking hero at every step, and in which the so-called suspense is obtained by throwing the hero over the edge of the cliff, and ending the episode with the hero in mid-air, while the audience, presumably, is left to thrill over the problem of whether or not the hero breaks his neck when he reaches bottom.

"Instead of that," continued Mr. Burston, "both The Mystery of '13,' the Francis Ford serial of fifteen episodes recently completed, and 'The Hawk's Trail,' the King Baggot serial we are now working on, tells a logical, closely woven story; and while it is true that it is essential to this type of feature to have each episode contain a certain angle that leads to interest in the development of succeeding episodes, these 'suspense' situations do not come as the result of dragging in 'stunts.' In other words the dramatic quality rather than any mechanical or forced element, supplies this necessary — vitally necessary — suspense."

Mr. Burston also expressed his conviction that the motion picture serial will one day become the chief feature of an exhibitor's entertainment, and as such will have the same drawing power that the novel-length installment fiction does in magazines.

Goldwyn Soon Producing In East

First Production Starts Soon At Biograph Studio in the Bronx While Awaiting Own Site

THE Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is apparently planning to act quickly on its recent decision to make pictures in the East as well as at Culver City. The officials of the company have appointed Robert B. McIntyre production manager in the East, and he is now engaged in arranging details for the first Eastern Goldwyn production. The picture which has been selected is "Partners of the Night," by Leroy Scott.

Mr. McIntyre returned last week from a three months' trip to the coast where he has been studying Goldwyn production methods with a view to applying them to his work here. Previous to Mr. McIntyre's association with Goldwyn, he was with World Films for more than six years.

At present, plans for the production of "Partners of the Night" are going ahead, and Mr. McIntyre has almost completed assembling his working staff and cameramen. Besides the details involved in building up an extensive department, Mr. McIntyre has held several conferences with Eugene Mullin, head of the Goldwyn Eastern Scenario department, Leroy Scott, Rex Beach and Paul Scardon, who will direct the production.

As the Goldwyn company has come to no definite arrangement as to the location of its eastern plant, the picture that is about to go into production will be "shot" at the Biograph studios in the Bronx. A staff of carpenters has been at work for the past week and a half erecting elaborate interiors. "Partners of the Night" is reported to offer nine principal parts, all but two of which have been cast, according to reports. Arrangements are now being made to taken several scenes in a New York Roof Garden, and also in a hotel palm room.

Victor Schertzinger, Goldwyn director, and his wife at their Hollywood home.

Following immediately upon announcement of the addition of the charming Shirley Mason to the ranks of Fox stars comes news of the purchase by Fox Film Corporation of her first vehicle. This picture is based on "Her Elephant Man," a widely read book from the pen of Pearl Doles Bell, author of several successful novels and short stories.

"Desert Gold" a Drawing Power

Strikes and Other Troubles Have No Effect on Business of Hodkinson Exhibitors

ZANE GREY'S "Desert Gold," the first of his novels to be presented by Benj. B. Hampton and Eltinge F. Warner, is pronounced by exihibtors to be "the kind of a picture that will whip any kind of condition that might exist in a town." That it is a picture of audience-power has never been doubted by its distributors, the W. W. Hodkinson organization, but direct exhibitor confirmation of this is the final proof.

An unusual feature of the initial distribution of "Desert Gold" has been the fact that although issued for six weeks and playing actively in the big theatres of the nation, it has never until the past week been submitted for review to the trade press critics. In other words, everything that "Desert Gold" has done to date in bookings and in proving its power has been on its own intrinsic values, not bolstered up by praise or criticism of the trade press reviewers.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation today proclaims "Desert Gold" to be one of the two really great pictures in the fall picture market. It is gratuitous for any distributor to say I have the one and only big picture in the market this season, although many flamboyant advertisers say just that. The fact remains that "Desert Gold" has in a score of cities gone up against pictures so advertised and exploited by their owners and, playing day and date and often in theatres directly adjoining their competitors, has whipped the picture so exploited for patronage and popularity.

Among the critical comments made on "Desert Gold" by the critics during the past week are these:

Chicago Daily News: "Zane Grey's 'Desert Gold' makes a startling thriller and it will gratify your every wish. One of the purposes of its producers was to get as much excitement and suspense in the story as he could. In this it is 100 per cent perfect."

Chicago American: "'Desert Gold' is plentiful of plot and lavish of local color. Through wonderful sandstorms, poison cacti, Yaqui Indians, lost mines, disputed water rights, secret canyons, this great story unreels coherently with the power that comes from the supervision of the author."

New Vita Serial Gets a Title

New Chapter Picture in Fifteen Episodes Is Given Name of "The Invisible Hand"

"The Invisible Hand" is the title selected by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, for the new Antonio Moreno serial which is now well under way in and about Vitagraph's studio at Hollywood, California. This new serial concerns a struggle between law and order, as represented by our Government, against the underworld in its most subtle form. It portrays a battle of wits, each fighter as sharp as the other, but with right as well as might on the one side.

Both Mr. Smith and Dr. Brady, authors of "The Invisible Hand," have written other serials, including "The fighting Trail," "Vengeance—and the Woman," "A Fight for Millions," "The Man of Might," "The Iron Test" and "Smashing Barriers."

In the matter of exploitation Vitagraph will issue two 24-sheets stands, one of the close-up variety showing a number of the thrilling situations, and one of the "he who runs may read" class. There will also be a complete plan book covering all fifteen episodes.

Antonio Moreno, who plays the part of the hero, is well-known for his serial work, although formerly he was leading man in many Vitagraph features. Pauline Curley will play opposite Mr. Moreno. The other principals of the cast include Jay Morley, Brinsley Shaw, George Mellcrest and Sam Polo.

The picture is being made under the direction of William J. Bowman and his assistant, Jack Pierce. It is expected that the first episode will be released the week following the release of the final episode of "Smashing Barriers," the current William Duncan serial.

Plans For Triangle Releases

Selected Features and Comedies Supervised by Griffith, Ince, and Sennett on Schedule

ANNOUNCEMENT of new plans was made this week from the Triangle office. Beginning about the middle of November, there will be a regular release programme, consisting of features and one- and two-reel Mack Sennett-Keystone comedies. By way of preparation for the new sales campaign, a number of changes have been made in the Triangle exchanges during the past month. The sales force has been augmented, and several new managers have been installed. The country has been divided into three divisions, and two division managers are now in the field supervising the branches in their territory. An important part of the campaign will be a series of advertisements, printed in color, to be published in the recognized trade magazines beginning next week.

The Triangle announcement reads in part: "The new Triangle policy can be summed up in one word—quality. If a picture is not good, we will not release it. A board of motion picture critics will pass on every picture released under our new plans, and they must agree, unanimously, that the picture is good or it will not be issued. These pictures are being re-created with new art titles, new prints, tinted and toned in the most modern way, and a complete line of new advertising matter." The new programme will start with "The Flame of the Yukon," a romantic story of the days of the gold fever in the Yukon, in which Dorothy Dalton is starred. The second Triangle play will be "Betty of Greystone," supervised by D. W. Griffith, with Dorothy Gish and Owen Moore.

Comedy and Drama on Paramount-Artcraft List for Nov. 2nd

Comedy shares equally with straight drama the Paramount-Artcraft honors for November 2, for on this date are set for release "Turning the Tables," in which Dorothy Gish is the star, and "L'Apache," a Thomas H. Ince drama of the underworld with Dorothy Dalton in the stellar role.

"Turning the Tables," the lastest production from the studio of the New Art Film Company, Miss Gish's producing organization, is said to be a picture farce that has a vein of melodramatic action running through it which will satisfy the audience's desire for thrills.

Elmer Clifton directed the picture, and the supporting cast includes Raymond Cannon, George Fawcett, Eugenie Besserer, Kate Toncray and others.

"L'Apache" is the first of Miss Dalton's series of Thomas H. Ince productions now being made in the Eastern studios of Famous Players-Lasky. It was directed by Joseph DeGrasse, who produced "The Market of Souls" under Mr. Ince's supervision.

The supporting cast is said to be unusually strong. Robert Elliott appears in the leading male role, while the Apache is played by Macy Harlam, who is described as one of the screen's most capable villains. Others are Austin Webber, George Furry, Frank Cluxun, Alice Gale and Louis Darclay.

"Thunderbolt" Breaks Records at Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee

Following the appearance of Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt" at the Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee, Thomas Saxe who holds the First National franchise for the Milwaukee territory has addressed the following telegram to the New York office of the First National:

"Katherine MacDonald in "The Thunderbolt" broke all previous house records at the Alhambra despite the strongest opposition in history of Milwaukee. Never have we received such favorable comment on a star or production."

Three More O. Henry Stories are Filmed by Vitagraph

Vitagraph has just completed three more of its two-reel subjects made from the O. Henry stories. They are "The Friendly Call," "The Roads We Take," and "The Day Resurgent." Although widely different in theme each is said to be a gem, and each again demonstrates the adaptability of the works of this master of short stories to the screen.

Gypsy O'Brien makes her first screen appearance in "The Day Resurgent."

Sheehan Sees Mix and Co. Off to Arizona to Stage New Film

During his recent trip to the Hollywood studios, Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film, conferred in detail with Mr. Wurtzel, the studio manager, director Cliff Smith, and Tom Mix on the production of the forthcoming Mix feature. Many suggestions embodied in the action of the piece are said to have come from Mr. Sheehan, who feels certain that in this new picture will be found an unusual product of the western type of film.

Mr. Sheehan was on hand to bid the company good-bye and good luck when Mix, Cliff Smith, and their forty genuine cowpunchers started from the California headquarters for Prescott, Arizona, where all the exteriors and many of the interiors are to be taken.

J. D. Hampton's Fall Purchases Include Well-Known Novels

Added to "Cressy," Bret Harte's famous romance, the film version of which is Jesse D. Hampton's second Blanche Sweet production for Pathe, are the following fall purchases of famous fiction: "The Sky Pilot," by Ralph Connor; "Simple Souls," by John Hastings Turner; "Cinderella Jane" and "Shock," by Marjorie Benton Cooke; "The White Dove," by William J. Locke; "The House of A Thousand Candles," by Meredith Nicholson; "The Parish Priest," by Dan Hart; "The Man From Make-Believe" and "Phantom Smith," by Byron Morgan; "The Deadlier Sex," by Bayard Veiller; "The Prince and Betty," by P. G. Wodehouse; "Uncharted Channels," by Kenneth Clarke; "For The Love Of William," by Walde Reed Houstis; and "The Pink Dove," by Eugene B. Lewis.

W. Hurst, F. P.-Lasky, Promoted

Announcement was made last week of the promotion of W. O. Hurst, of the Educational Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to the position of supervisor of production of all non-fiction subjects, a newly created position. In his new duties Mr. Hurst will work directly under Whitman Bennett, director of production of Famous Players-Lasky and will have charge of the production of educational films, travelogues, the Paramount magazine, the "So-This-Is-America" series, the Paramount Post Nature pictures, and similar subjects.

Metro's "The Brat" Second Play Booked into Capitol

"The Brat" Nazimova's newest production, was the second feature production at the new Capitol Theatre, on Broadway at Fifty-first Street, New York. Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol, booked the Nazimova production several weeks in advance of the premiere performance at the world's largest temple of entertainment, when the management was uncertain as to the exact date when the Capitol would throw open its bronze doors to the New York picture-going public.

Rowland Inspects Metro Studios

President of Concern on Visit to Hollywood Pleased at the Many Enlargements

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, now on a visit of inspection to the Metro studios in Hollywood, has found that the physical aspect of the million-dollar plant has been much enlarged and improved since his last visit to the Coast about five months ago. Within that time Mr. Rowland has traveled thousands of miles and completed an itinerary from Los Angeles to New York to London to Rome and back again by the same route.

With the Metro president and Mrs. Rowland on their present trip is J. Frank Brockliss, an influential British film exporter who returned with Mr. Rowland from England. Mr. Brockliss expressed his astonishment at the vastness of the Metro institution and the efficiency and smoothness with which the numerous productions under way were carried along. He watched the progress of the work with manifest interest and confessed that nothing of its kind, in size or completeness, was to be found in the motion picture industry in England.

Mr. Rowland expressed himself as impressed and delighted with the manner in which the studios have been transformed. He inspected the two new stages, the still laboratory, the casting and costuming building, the Japanese garden and the new five acre studio lot which had been added in his absence.

Mr. Rowland and his party are registered at the Hollywood Hotel. They expect to remain in the West from two to three weeks. Metro's president will familiarize himself with the present organization of the studios and discuss future plans with Maxwell Karger.

After his first inspection Mr. Rowland felt sufficiently familiar with the big studios to act as guide for Mayor M. P. Snyder of Los Angeles, who visited the plant accompanied by his secretary, Ivan St. John, and by Alfred Cohn of Photoplay Magazine.

Metro Plumbs Australian Field

Harry Cohen of Export Department is to Start on Trip of Inspection; New Exchanges to Follow

HARRY J. COHEN, manager of Metro's foreign department, has applied for passports and is making all arrangements to leave New York in about three weeks for a business trip to Australia. Mr. Cohen has been home only a fortnight from a tour of England, France and the Scandinavian countries, in the course of which he investigated conditions affecting the motion picture industry abroad and the possibilities for American enterprise.

Mr. Cohen's forthcoming trip to the Antipodes, which will take in Sydney, Melbourne and other of the large cities in Australia, is for the purpose of getting an accurate first-hand knowledge of motion picture conditions there. Metro has long recognized Australasia as a splendid field for American-made productions, but hitherto has not had its own exchange system on the islands nor any satisfactory method of direct selling to exhibitors there.

One of the results of Mr. Cohen's trip to Australia may be a further expansion of the Metro exchange system, which now covers the United States from end to end and is taken care of in Great Britain by Jury's Imperial Pictures, Ltd., of which Sir William Jury is Managing Director, exclusive distributors of Metro pictures throughout the United Kingdom.

Primarily the Metro foreign manager's trip will be in the nature of a survey of the territory. What other steps he will take in Australia as to the expansion of Metro's distribution policy there will depend upon the outcome of a conference he expects to have with Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation and Screen Classics, Inc., upon the latter's return from the Pacific Coast.

Mr. Rowland at present is in Los Angeles, watching production activities on six new pictures in the making for early release by Metro. Mr. Rowland's return to the east is expected to be a week or so in advance of the date on which Mr. Cohen will start his long journey to Australia, which involves a transcontinental railway jaunt before the lengthy voyage across the Pacific.

British-American Buying Films

British-American Pictures Finance Corporation, Nancibelle W. Grant, president, has recently purchased "Love, Honor and ?," "Wit Wins," "The Heart of a Gypsy," "Carmen of the North" and "The Phantom Honeymoon." The pictures of this corporation are being released through Hallmark. The British-American is always in the market to purchase first-class pictures.

Tucker Predicts Success for Dwan Picture; Pays to Act as Critic

Realart Pictures Corporation has received word from officials of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, that George Loane Tucker, director of the screen production "The Miracle Man," has predicted that "Soldiers of Fortune," an Allan Dwan Production, will rank as one of the successes of the season. Both productions were made in California, and Mr. Tucker was with Allan Dwan when the latter saw the finished print of his picture before he sent it East to Realart.

Mr. Dwan impressed upon his fellow producer the fact that he wanted an honest criticism of the production. With a smile Tucker handed Dwan a dime, stating that the audience which paid was always the audience that criticised most relentlessly, because it was under no obligations. This took place before the exhibition.

"Then you realy think it's worth anybody's dime?" remarked Dwan, after the screening. "Give me back that dime," replied Tucker, "Here're two dollars."

Sunshine Comedy a Hit, Los Angeles House Books a Second Week

So successful was the showing of the William Fox Sunshine Company's "The Yellow Dog Catcher," at T. L. Tally's Broadway Theatre in Los Angeles, that Mr. Tally booked the picture for a second week's continuous showing, and has also contracted with the Los Angeles Fox Exchange for six additional Sunshine comedies to be shown in as many consecutive weeks.

Paul Scardon Becomes a Goldwyn Director; Has Much Experience

Paul Scardon has been added to Goldwyn Pictures Corporation's directorial forces. His first photoplay for Goldwyn will be Leroy Scott's "Partners of The Night," placed in production at the Biograph Studio in New York last Monday.

According to reports, Mr. Scardon comes to Goldwyn with many years' experience as a director and as an actor on the stage and before the camera. In the selection of the cast Leroy Scott, the author, has conferred with the director, Robert B. McIntyre, the new Goldwyn Eastern production manager, and Rex Beach, president of Eminent Authors.

Jose Released By Film Specials To Direct Anita Stewart

It is reported that by arrangement with Jos. M. Schenck, Edward Jose, who recently formed his own company, to produce the Jose Productions for Film Specials, Inc., has been, for the present, released from this agreement, in order to direct Anita Stewart for Louis Mayer, in her next First National picture.

World's Nov. 24 Release Changed

World Pictures announces that the release scheduled for November 24th of "Dad's Girl" has been changed, and that "The Steel King," an Apfel production with Montagu Love and June Elvidge as the stars, will take its place. This production is said to be far more pretentious than the original picture scheduled for this date.

"The Broken Butterfly" In Heavy Demand by Leading Exhibitors

Leading exhibitors throughout the country are reported to be applying for Robertson-Cole's latest Maurice Tourneur's masterpiece, "The Broken Butterfly," from the pen of Penelope Knapp. Many large contracts have already been made for the feature, and officials of the Robertson-Cole Company declare that from present indications "The Broken Butterfly" will break all records for the big pictures. Lew Cody, Pauline Starke and Mary Alden, the three principal characters in the Tourneur production, help the director, it is said, to bring out the effects that insure the success of the Tourneur box-office attraction.

In addition to the love story, intermingled with gripping incidents, the picture is filmed in the beautiful Canadian woods, and the lighting effects and the grandeur of the locale are said to make "The Broken Butterfly" a winner. Switching from the Canadian woods, the plot of the story is taken along the Riviera. There are many large scenes, but the carnival reproduction is said to be one of the most elaborate attractions ever reproduced.

Second Drury Lane Play by Screen Classics is "The Hope"

"The Hope" will be the second of the Drury Lane melodramas to be picturized by Screen Classics, Inc., according to an announcement by Maxwell Karger, Director-General at the Metro Studios in Hollywood. Albert Shelby Le Vino, who scenarioized "The Best of Luck," Metro's first Drury Lane screen adaptation, is working on the continuity for "The Hope."

"The Hope" is a collaboration by the late Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, and it was produced in London.

Tacoma Has New Realart Theatre

Manager Albert W. Eden of the Seattle, Wash., branch of Realart Pictures Corporation, has been notified by R. R. Pratsch, owner of the Idle Hour Theatre in South Tacoma, that his new theatre now being built at 5415 South Union Avenue, Tacoma, is to be named Realart. This is the second theatre to be named for the new firm. The new theatre will be opened at an early date.

Betty Blythe Now with Brentwood

Betty Blythe, who recently completed work in Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde," has been engaged to star in a Brentwood production under the direction of Henry Kolker. The story treats of a phase of society life, it is said, and requires unusually rich settings. The picture will be released by Robertson-Cole.

Pathe's New Year Force Is Strong

Paul Brunet Says Organization is well Entrenched on all Fronts for the Coming Struggle

PAUL BRUNET, Vice-President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., in a statement issued this week, directs attention to the strong array of stars, producers and directors with which Pathe will enter the motion picture arena in the coming year. Mr. Brunet feels that 1920 will develop the biggest struggle for supremacy since the inception of the cinema industry in the United States, and, it is said, that in lining up the Pathe forces, he has left no field without its bulwark whether that field involves producers, directors, or stars.

Mr. Brunet's statement asserts that since the beginning of the fall season, the producers' staff has been augmented by the admission of several prominent producers. Upon the recent list appear the names of Hobart Henley, Edgar Lewis, J. Stuart Blackton, Edwin Carewe, Jesse D. Hampton and Mrs. Sidney Drew. In addition to these, Mr. Brunet points out the stand-bys of months gone by: Albert Cappellani, Leonce Perret, Louis J. Gasnier, George B. Seitz, Hal E. Roach of the Rolin Company, Frank Keenan Ruth Roland, and the inventor of the Novagraph slow moving pictures, Charles Watson.

Backing up the staff of producers and directors are to be found a large number of popular screen artists, among whom are: John Cumberland, Blanche Sweet, Dolores Cassinelli, Mae Murray, Fannie Ward, Sylvia Breamer, Ruth Roland, Pearl White, Baby Marie Osborne, Eileen Percy, Virginia Pearson, Harold Lloyd, William Desmond, Harry Pollard, Robert Gordon, June Caprice, Creighton Hale, Warner Oland and Marguerite Courtot.

Mr. Brunet also says: "The Pathe Review has been revised and enlivened, and should develop, by far, into the finest magazine on the screen. The Pathe News has ever been supreme in its field, and will continue so, no matter what effort is required to maintain its reputation for covering the news, and covering it first.

Art Director Hopkins With Mayer

George Hopkins, who has designed settings for some of the best-known productions, has been secured as art director by Louis B. SHERRY

By George Barr McCutcheon

Character of story: Love story; adventure.

Theme: Regeneration.

Chacacters: Sheridan Redpath, known as "Sherry"; Patsy, a bartender; Barney, a cop; Morna O'Brien, the girl; Mrs. Compton, her grandmother; Jimmy Burton a neighbor; Andy Gilman, eccentric millionaire; Mrs. Gilman, his wife; Mrs. Corse, Mrs. Gilman's nurse; William Gilman, a bad penny; Briscoe, a burglar; sheriff, villagers, etc.

The Plot: Sheridan Redpath, born of supposedly wealthy parents has spent a great deal of money while in college but carefully refrained from drinking because of a promise given his mother. His mother and father dying, he is left with a fortune of some fifty or sixty thousand dollars only instead of the millions he expected. He proceeds to drink this away. With the last of his money he pays his debts and buys a drink with his last ten cent piece, informing Patsy, the bartender, that he is quitting liquor for good. He goes out to Compton's Wood, where he remains for three days recovering from the effect of his debauch, having to eat only some food brought him by his friend Barney, the policeman. A tramp endeavors to steal this and is soundly thrashed for his pains. Sherry starts for town looking for a job and encounters Morna O'Brien who because of some fancied slight is about to run away from her grandmother. Sherry offers to carry her bags for fifty cents and does so until storm drives them to cover under a bridge. Mrs. Compton drives hurriedly down the road and Morna, stricken with remorse, rushes to her and forgets to pay Sherry. Sherry continues to town and gets a job laying a wall for Andrew Gilman, a rich landlord with a reputation as a hard man in money matters. When the woll is completed Gilman makes Sherry a proposition to become his private secretary at $2,500 a year and board and lodging for a term of two years with the understanding that he must go to bed at a certain hour and always sleep outside of Gilman's door. The Comptons being at the theatre early in the evening Sherry surprises burglars in their house and captures both of these men. One of them is William Gilman, son of Andy Gilman and nephew of Mrs. Compton, but they alone know this. They arrange for his escape while Sherry joins a posse to help hunt down the miscreant. Sherry finds that Gilman and his wife have not spoken for twenty years until the burglar escapes when Gilman enters her apartments. Sherry has meanwhile been gaining back the reputation which he lost while an idler and drinker and has been pressing his suit with Morna who is apparently must taken with Jimmy Burton. Sherry is nearly convinced that his love for Morna is useless. Mrs. Gilman is murdered. Mrs. Corse, who knows the truth about the burglar tells Sherry and they both suspect that William Gilman was guilty. Andrew Gilman confesses that he did it in his sleep. He tells Sherry that he had hated his wife for years and dreamed many time of choking her. He hired Sherry to make it impossible for this to occur. He is stricken with paralysis. Sherry weds Morna.

Locale: A small town in the Middle West.

Picture High Lights: Sherry's reform; the capture of the burglars; The story of Andrew Gilman.

"ELBOW LANE"

By the Author of "Altogether Jane"

Character of Story: Love story.

Theme: The struggle for ideals.

Characters: Drusilla, born with genius for sculpture; Aunt Rhoda Meers, her foster mother; Adam Sterritt, school teacher; Brother Meers, the prophet of Elbow Lane; Alan Malco, sculptor; Jerry Trap, a son of the village; Prof. John Vorshage; Madame Vorshage, his mother; Lucy Grange, a farmer's daughter.

The Plot: Drusilla, whose mother had married a sculptor, is left a penniless orphan in the care of her grandfather and her aunt. The grandfather is a self-appointed prophet of a self-founded church and rules with a rod of iron the neighbors who constitute his following. He does not believe in any sort of vanity such as painting or modeling and any attempts of Drusilla to engage in making images are instanlty discouraged. Drusilla makes her first doll out of dough which she is kneading for her aunt and on her promise to take two whippings is allowed by the aunt to keep the doll. Day by day it grows thinner and flatter till she decides she must bury it. As she is carrying out this intension she encounters Adam Sterritt who has been brought to the village by her grandfather to teach the school. Adam has some artistic ability himself and is thoroughly in sympathy with all of Drusilla's ambitions. He secretly instructs her in her modeling and tells her that some day she must seek her work in the outside world. Jerry Trap, meanwhile, has made up his mind to marry Drusilla though his father had planned to marry him to Lucy Grange, a neighbor's girl. Drusilla is not actually in love with Adam but she contrasts him with Jerry and is sure htat she could never marry the latter. Adam, realizing that he is falling in love with her and knowing that he has only a short time to live, leaves for Italy where he soon dies, but before that he sends word to her to call at the large house across the lake where the sculptor, Alan Malco, lives. Drusilla goes to Malco to show him the statue of a hawk which she has modeled and is astonished to find that he looks very much like Adam except that he has lost one arm. Malco, who has almost despaired of his art since the loss of his arm is awakened to a new interest in instructing Drusilla. Finally he insists that she go to Europe at his expense and study. Her grandfather dies and she goes to Florence, Italy, where she lives with Madame Vorshage. Professor John, Madame's son and Drussilla's instructor, falls in love with her but Drussilla has kept always before her the picture of Alan Malco who fears that the loss of his arm has made him unfit to press his suit for her hand. In spite of her success Drusilla is not happy and finding that it is the desire for Alan which makes her restless, she steals home where he finds her in the workroom before his masterpiece, "God Hath Sent His Angel."

Locale: New England village and Florence, Italy. Chiefly interiors except New England scenes.

Picture High Lights: Very good opportunity for character acting on the part of Drusilla; splendid touch of pathos in the making of the dough doll and Drusilla's anxiety to preserve it; fine chance for Alan to show the unselfish love of the artist.

"THE GREAT DESIRE"

By Alexander Black—Harper & Bros.

Character of Story: Fictional Story of Economic Problems.

Theme: That the Great Desire of humanity is to find God, and that they will find him most easily through Love.

Characters: Anson Grayl, a hunchback, a dreamer and a student, with a generous, unselfish character; Sarah, his sister, a vivacious, attractive girl interested in life; Pauline Rowning, their aunt. Robert Hale Rudley, who married Sarah; Laura Sherrick, his sister, who marries Anson.

The Plot: Anson and Sarah Grayl come to New York from a small, New England town, so that Anson may try to find the answer to his question as to what is the Great Desire, and write a book based on the answer. They meet people who are keenly interested in the movements of the day, and Anson has long talks with Socialists, I. W. W.s, Anarchists, etc. When the U. S. enters the war he goes to work in a button fatcory and sends the wages thus earned to the wife of the man whose place he takes, in order that that man join the army. Rudley, who had left the Grayls' home town many years before, under a heavy cloud, proves that he was greatly misjudged, joins the French Flying Corps, and after being badly wounded returns home and marries Sarah. Laura an independent, ambitious girl, realizes that Anson will never ask any woman to marry him, because of his affliction, and, to his great joy proposes to him herself. They decide that the Great Desire is to find God and the best way to find Him is through Love.

Locale: New York City, all interiors.

THE LAW OF THE GUN

By Ridgwell Cullum

Character of story: Western melodrama.

Theme: Revenge and love.

Characters: Jim Connolly, a good man gone bad; Jack Ryder, a rancher and miner; Mike Livesay, his partner; "Pat" Wilmington, daughter of Caleb P. Wilmington, copper magnate; Caleb Wilmington, formerly Ironsides, cattle thief; Lu Gaudir, half-breed; "Tough" Narra; Highball Joyce; "Father" Shamus.

The Plot: Jim Connolly, who has been a medical student but is now a cowboy is on his way from the bar U Ranch to Fort Rodney and stops at the home of the half-breed, Gaudir. Here Ironsides persuades him to drive fifty head of cattle to the Fort for him. On the way he is held up and arrested as a cattle thief by the Northwest Mounted Police. He is sentenced to prison. Eight years later in Alberta, Jack Ryder is fishing when a man in a long coat and mask holds him up and forces him to exchange clothing. This man is Jim Connolly, escaped from prison, who declares that since he cannot invoke the law against Ironsides, he will take vengeance by his own law—the law of the gun. Caleb Wilmington, formerly Ironsides, is supposed to possess the secret and maps of a very rich copper mine. Wilmington is held up in the hills by a man who says that he is Connolly and who tells Wilmington that he intends to kill him and steal his maps so that his daughter cannot get them. Wilmington confesses his past life to his daughter and tells her of Connolly's threat. Wilmington prepares to go to Ullworth intending that his daughter shall follow. He stops in the village and attempts to pick a fight with Tough Narra whom he suspects of being Connolly. Narra leaves the saloon with a threatening air. On his way to the railroad Wilmington is held up and killed, but before his death he manages to throw his maps over the edge of a cliff. Highball Joyce discovers the murder and notifies the daughter, Pat, who goes to the supposed priest "Father" Shamus and announces her intention of going on to Ullworth. Cholera breaks out in the village. Jack, while fishing, finds the maps of the mine. He turns them over to Pat, but afterward locates a claim and hides the plans in the cabin. Shamus tells them that Narra has left an envelope containing one thousand dollars on Pat's dresser. Jack goes with Shamus to return this money. Jack has a fight with Narra, beating him. When Jack returns home the plans are gone. Jack returns to the village to force Narra to return the plans. He finds him stricken with cholera and Narra denies that he stole the plans or that he murdered Wilmington. Father Shamus comes to care for Narra. Later Jack and Mike find both men dead and in the clothes of Father Shamus they find the plans. A mark on his arm identifies this supposed priest as Jim Connolly. Jack now asks Pat to marry him. She at first refuses because of the life her father led, but at last consents.

Locale: Northwestern Canada.

Picture High Lights: Usual Western thrills throughout. Good scenic effects.

"AFTER THIRTY"

By Julian Street — Century Co.

Character of Story: Humorous.

Theme: Love affairs of a happily married man after reaching the age of thirty.

Characters: Shelley Wickett, the man; Molley Wickett, his wife; numerous other ladies, their husbands, etc.

The Plot: The book is made up of a series of adventures into the realms of romance, each a distinct episode, all of which end in Wickett's rediscovering that after all, Molly is the best woman in the world. These episodes might form the basis of a number of two reel comedies, which should be very good indeed, using such subtitles as: "he had discovered, by experiments in that direction, that when a husband tells his wife absolutely everything she immediately guesses all the rest."

Locale: New York City and occasionally a Long Island estate.

Picture High Lights: Good, high class comedy.

Good Fiction Suitable For Film Production

"OSCAR MONTAGUE — PARANOIAC"

By Geo. Lincoln Walton

Character of story: Melodrama.

Theme: Hereditary neuresthenia.

Characters: Oscar Montague, a rich man's son; Ruth Montague, his mother, a worrier; Gerrold Montague, his father, a degenerate scion; Helen, his sister, a normal girl; Fred, Helen's admirer. Aunt Ellen; Aunt Sally; Frederick Newcomb Senior, Fred's father; Nickey Bennet, conspirator; the Count.

The Plot: Oscar Montague has always had his own way from early boyhood and he has developed an egomania in consequence of this. He expects his mother and sister to wait upon him and suspects that there is a general conspiracy to keep him from getting what he wants. As time goes on he centers his suspicion on Nickey Bennet and believes that Nickey conspires with the helpers in the garage to put water in his engine instead of gasoline. Gerrold Montague, who is desirous of securing his wife's money, attempts to railroad her to the insane asylum, claiming that her constant worrying is a sign of insanity. The doctors, however, refuse to agree to this and he is compelled to drop this project. While the family are in the country Gerrold Montague is run down by a yellow roadster and killed. His body is dragged into the woods and hidden, where it is afterward discovered by a farmer. A search is begun for the yellow car and it is found that Fred had been out during the night in a yellow car answering the description of the one driven by the homicide. Helen later discovers that her brother's car, which also answers the description and fits it more neatly than Fred's was out on the night in question. Her brother, however, is able to prove that he was elsewhere. Helen makes up her mind to clear Fred. A match-safe found near the scene of the accident puts her on the trail and she finally learns that her brother had loaned his car to a dissolute companion called "The Count." Fred's father becomes convinced that the son was guilty of his father's death and thinking that the whole Montague breed is tainted, he conceals from his son the fact that Helen is trying to clear him. Sufficient evidence is collected to exonerate Fred and he is set at liberty. Oscar Montague in a fit of anger shoots and kills Nickey Bennet, who he regards as the leader of the conspirators who torment him. Oscar pleads insanity and is sent to an asylum. Helen's part in the first affair is finally explained to Fred's father, who is ashamed of his efforts to keep the young people apart and who now tells Fred all. The couple are united, the opinion of their medical advisors being that there can be one sane member in a family even though three of the other members be queer.

Locale: An American city and suburbs.

Picture High Lights: Two trial scenes.

"THE END OF DREAMS"

By Wood Levette Wilson

Character of story: Mystery.

Theme: Dual personality.

Characters: Demas Dayre, in one personality a young clubman, in another a gambler and a thief; Beatrice Collamer, loved by Dayre in both personalities; Adam Holtsclaw, a detective; Nace Forbush and Boyd Lenroot, friends of Dayre the clubman; Vashti Garwood and Tom Gadgey, gamblers and partners of Dayre the thief.

The Plot: Beatrice Collamer awakens to find a burglar in her apartment. She confronts him and, as his mask falls, cries "Demas!" He escapes by the fire escape. Beatrice tells her mother and Holtsclaw that she recognized the burglar as Demas Dayre, with whom she went to college.

Holtsclaw arrests Dayre the clubman, but Dayre proves that at the time of the burglary he was at the Sycamore Club with Forbush and Lenroot. At the station house, Vashti is brought in on a charge of shoplifting, but is dismissed. She makes an appointment with Dayre, surprising him by acting as though she knew him well. He agrees to meet her at a place known as Cook's.

Since his college days, when he was struck in the head by a baseball, Dayre the clubman has been tormented with sinister dreams of crime. It is this that has kept him from Beatrice. He offers Holtsclaw a reward to capture the burglar, his double, and let him meet him face to face. Dayre the thief is also troubled with haunting dreams. He is surprised when Vashti speaks of their engagement at Cook's, but goes there with her. He leaves her for a moment and Dayre the clubman enters. A shot is fired at him by Dayre the thief.

Dayre the clubman visits Beatrice and convinces her he did not commit the burglary. Dayre the thief also visits her and pleads his love, but she can sense the difference in personality. Dayre the clubman seeks to meet the thief face to face, and the thief constantly seeks to kill the clubman. The thief abducts Beatrice and takes her into the country. She is rescued by Dayre the clubman, and in the melee Beatrice fells the thief with an ebony cane as he shoots at the clubman.

Dayre the thief tells Vashti that Dayre the clubman is coming to confront him and that it means his end. The clubman likewise tells her that a meeting face to face will settle all the mystery. Accompanied by Beatrice and Holtsclaw, Dayre the clubman seeks Dayre the thief and, with a storm raging, meets the thief face to face, alone. Dayre the thief slowly fades and finally disappears in a lightning flash. Dayre then explains that the thief was a double personality evoked into being by the blow on the head. He claims Beatrice's love.

Locale: New York City. Mostly interiors.

Picture High Lights: The meeting between Dayre the thief and Beatrice in her apartment. The scene where Dayre the clubman rescues Beatrice from Dayre the thief and Beatrice fells the thief with the cane. The final meeting where the thief disappears forever.

"GABRIELLE OF THE LAGOON"

By A. Safroni-Middleton

Character of story: Romance.

Theme: Love in the South Seas.

Characters: Hillary, runaway ship's apprentice; Gabrielle, a daughter of the Island; Old Captain Everard, her father; Rajah Koo Macka, a Christian tribal ruler; Mango Pango, a native girl; Samuel Bilbao, a sea-faring man; half-castes, tribal priests, etc.

The Plot: Hillary has run away from his steamer and is loafing about one of the Solomon Islands waiting for another ship to come along when he encounters a beautiful young white girl in a canoe on a sheltered lagoon. This is Gabrielle, daughter of old Captain Everard who has lived in drunken retirement on the island since leaving the "blackbirding" or slave trade profession. Gabrielle is very beautiful and just budding into womanhood. She is nine-tenths white and has just a drop of Polynesian blood which causes her an immense amount of trouble since she frequently finds herself tempted to lapse into the savage customs of the natives. She is fascinated with their heathenism and their dances and sometimes joins the symbolic dances, drawn to them instinctively. Hillary and Gabrielle fall in love and Gabrielle has promised to elope with him and go away to England when there appears at her father's house the Rajah Koo Macha, a converted heathen who has been to the mission school at Honolulu and who now poses as a missionary to the natives, though, as a matter of fact, he is a slave trader and a heathen at heart. He comes from one of the most savage islands in the South seas where he is tribal lord, and is well supplied with money, ships and men. The Rajah fascinates Gabrielle with his romantic appearance and manners and buys the consent of her father to his marriage with the girl. He abducts her on his ship and only when she has gone does the father realize that the Rajah intends selling her into slavery. Hillary institutes a search for the girl and finally discovers that she has been taken away on the Rajah's boat. Old Everard offers to pay the expenses of a rescue excursion and Hillary enlists the aid of Samuel Bilbao, a sailor of fortune, a man of huge strength and adventurous disposition. The Rajah is hunted down, but just as Bilbao is about to take vengeance upon him a cast-off wife dashes between them and throws acid in the Rajah's face, incapacitating him. Hillary and Bilbao take Gabrielle away with them and Gabrielle agrees to go with Hillary "to the ends of the earth." And so they are married.

Locale: Solomon Islands in the Pacific.

Picture High Lights: Tropical scenery; native festivals; the abduction; the rescue.

"BANKED FIRES"

By E. W. Savi

Character of Story: Story of married life.

Theme: Repressed Passion.

Characters: Raymond Meredith, collector and magistrate; Joyce, his wife; Captain Brian Dalton, post surgeon; Mrs. Dalton, his wife; Honor Bright, Tommy Deare and Jack Darling, chums in the government service; Mrs. Barrington Fox, in love with Jack Darling; Kitty, Mrs. Meredith's sister, whom Jack loves.

The Plot: Joyce Meredith, putting her baby before her husband, is constantly fretting to return to England from India. She leaves her husband at his camp in the district and returns to Muktiarbad where Dr. Dalton treats her and the child. A friendship develops between them, and she and the doctor go about together a great deal. At length, in a ruined temple, the doctor tries to make love to her and she repulses him. In self-extenuation he tells her that his life has been spoiled by a faithless woman. The doctor is stricken with pneumonia and Honor Bright nurses him. They confess their love for one another, but at the doctor's request keep their engagement a secret. Meanwhile Jack Darling is lured into a love affair with Mrs. Fox, who wins his sympathy by complaints against her husband. Fox sues for a divorce and Jack is invalided to England. He is to marry Mrs. Fox upon his return. In England he meets and falls in love with Kitty and becomes engaged to her. Joyce, meanwhile, has drifted farther away from her husband and has gone to England. Meredith gets a sunstroke and a nurse comes who reveals herself, in Honor's presence, as Dalton's wife. Mrs. Dalton becomes intimate with Meredith. Honor writes to Joyce to come and persuades Dalton, for Joyce's sake, to take back his wife, Joyce, with a better idea of a wife's duty, returns. Jack and Kitty come back on the same ship with her and are married. Dalton takes his wife back to live with him and Joyce and her husband begin over again, each with a better understanding. Dalton is attacked by natives and his wife, attempting to defend him, is mortally wounded. She tells him to be happy with Honor. He and Honor return to England as husband and wife.

Locale: Bengal, India.

Picture High Lights: Strong scene in the death of Mrs. Dalton and in scene where Mrs. Dalton reveals herself, before Honor, as the wife of the doctor.

Charles Ray, whose portrayals of rustic types have made him one of the screen's most popular stars, has just finished his work in "Paris Green," and begins immediately on his next Thomas H. Ince production for Paramount-Artcraft, entitled, "Watch Out, William."

Lawrence C. Windom has joined the Vitagraph forces and is directing Corinne Griffith in her next picture, "The Bride in Bond."

Latest Serial Most Strenuous George Larkin Has Faced

George Larkin's other name is "The Gentleman Unafraid," but even he admits that the past week's work on "The Lurking Peril," Wistaria's 15-episode serial under the direction of Burton King, was a strenuous one and contained quite enough thrills for the thriller. After numerous fights with the crew on board a yacht, Mr. Larkin dove into Long Island Sound and continued the fight in the water. This might have been all very well last August, but Mr. Larkin found the temperature a matter to be considered in October. The following day he jumped off the bridge at Hackensack, and spent most of the day in the river struggling desperately with the crooks who seemed determined to make his life a hardship during the entire serial. And he decided that the river was no warmer than the Sound. Then came many more hard fights on the old gabled roof of the Spencer estate on Long Island, ending with a slide down the drainpipe, and a chase around the narrow coping of the third story, after which the "Unafraid" grabbed a rope and swung 15 feet across to a balcony, then slid to the ground, knocked out several guards who attacked him and made a flying leap into a passing auto for an escape. The "Gentleman" says the only reason he didn't do more was because the week didn't last any longer.

Gladys Valerie was somewhat surprised recently by the noticeable enthusiasm and pleasure evinced by a certain young lieutenant who had just returned from overseas, upon being presented to Miss Valerie. She ventured to ask the reason for his somewhat unusually cordial acknowledgment of the introduction, and was very much astonished to learn that she was considered the "Best Girl" of Company D—105 Artillery A. E. F. It seems that when a picture show was given in camp, each company adopted some screen luminary who appealed to the voters as their "Best Girl," and Miss Valerie had been chosen by this lieutenant's company for that distinction.

George Larkin, who is again busy on "Thriller."

Bits of Information

Jack Crane, who left to join the ranks of Uncle Sam some time ago, is back in our midst, this time at the Selznick studio in Fort Lee. Jack is not a newcomer, having played with Ruth Roland in several pictures before playing the biggest game of all, Over There. Those who remember his work in "The Fringe of Society" will welcome his reappearance on the screen with Elsie Janis in her forthcoming production.

Roger Lytton is now playing the principal part in a Charles Miller production.

E. K. Lincoln is busy with his first production for the American Cinema Corporation, "The Inner Shrine," which will be directed by R. William Neill.

George Baker is directing William Faversham in H. de Vere Stacpoole's "The Man Who Lost Himself," and the following production will be George Agnew Chamberlain's "White Man." Mr. Baker is also responsible for the scenarios.

Close-ups of Players

Ernest Truex, who is starring in Paramount-Truex comedy films produced by the AyVeeBee Corporation, is five feet, two inches tall. He has two small sons, who are regular American boys, and whose chief aspiration is to "grow big and tall like pop-pa!"

Gladys Valerie sang at a concert on Tuesday last given for the benefit of blind soldiers, and judging by the warm reception which the audience accorded her, Miss Valerie's voice has lost none of its original beauty since her sojourn in the silent drama. Miss Valerie sang on the operatic stage before taking up picture work.

The new policeman on a certain section of Riverside Drive learned that Marion Davies lived on his beat before he had patrolled it for a day. A little denizen of the Drive who insists on playing with the "big boys" 11 and 12 years old, although they callously make it plain that she is in their way, grew despondent over her persistent failure to catch or throw the ball, and set up a piercing protest of: "I'll tell Marion, I will!" The policeman reached the scene just in time to see the Davies car coming into sight. It stopped, the tears were dried, there was a short consultation with the "big boys" and it moved on, but, strange to say, the little girl's playing picked up marvellously. If the officer had been on a week, he would have known of Marion Davies' strong juvenile following for blocks around.

Marie Shotwell has been engaged to play one of the leading roles in a Hallmark picture, production of which was commenced this week at the Fifty-fourth st. studio. The title of the picture has not yet been chosen, but it is a screen version from an original story by Leon Britton. Miss Shotwell's last appearance on the screen was in "The Thirteenth Chair."

Film Answer to Hall Caine's Work Heralded by First National

"The Man Thou Gavest Me," an answer to Hall Caine's story of "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," recently released by Paramount Pictures Corporation, will be one of the forthcoming special feature attractions released by First Nation Exhibitors' Circuit as a starring vehicle for Katherine MacDonald.

The story of "The Man Thou Gavest Me" will present the woman's side of the domestic and moral problems raised by Hall Caine in his work.

Short Shots

Albert Capellani will make a series of feature pictures during the coming year starring Marjorie Rambeau. Mr. Capellani spent part of the summer in France, and is already with numerous ideas and plans for an energetic winter.

Mme. Olga Petrova, who is now on tour in vaudeville, is said to have made a record for herself at the United Booking Office in two particulars. Firstly, she is the highest salaried "single" woman act. Secondly, she has never been known to be late for a performance but once. That once occurred at the Majestic Theatre last week in Chicago, when Captain Gruber's elephants played on the same bill with the Polish star. Petrova is particularly fond of elephants, and stood in the wings discoursing with "Minnie" on the disadvantages of eating too many carrots, since a 7,000-pound weight doesn't improve one's waist line, until the stage manager rushed excitedly back stage to inform Mme. that the curtain had been up for three minutes. Petrova rushed on, and upon the blurr of faces before her, saw a mass of broad smiles. In her hand was one of "Minnie's" carrots instead of the single American beauty rose which she always carries and which she thought she was pressing tightly to her heart.

Thomas F. Fallon was asked the other day whether or not he had a story suitable for George Walsh. Unhesitatingly Mr. Fallon replied in the affirmative, went home, and in three days presented to the Fox scenario department a story, not a line of which had ever appeared upon paper 72 hours before. And of course it was just what Mr. Walsh was looking for.

Dean Raymond is playing a millionaire oil king in a vaudeville comedy sketch by Will Cressy, but is contemplating a return to pictures in the near future. Mr Raymond is probably one of the steadiest workers in the profession, and his services are so continually in demand that he is seldom without an engagement long enough for a vacation.

Universal-Smithsonian Company Getting Interesting Views

A letter, written by Dr. Edmund Heller in charge of the Universal-Smithsonian African expedition and addressed to Tarkington Baker, Universal general manager, reveals some interesting facts about the experiences of the travelers. According to the epistle, the expedition at the time of writing was scattered widely over the Union of South Africa. Scott and Heller were reported to be taking cinemas of the diamond mines, including shots of the processes employed and other matters of industrial and historical interest. A war dance of the natives was mentioned in particular, and also the taking of the "pulsator," which is the mechanism employed in sorting the gravel and collecting the diamonds on boards.

Bill Stowell and Horn are reported to be at work on the south coast taking pictures of the Congo caves, famous for their stalactite and stalagmite formations. Stowell is also described as having done a whale hunt and the processes of extracting oil from whales at the Saldahna Bay, north of Cape Town. Great hope is expressed that the results achieved will surpass anything of their kind in "shooting" African life and scenes.

L. J. Gasnier has announced the purchase of the film rights to George Barr McCutcheon's popular novel "The Butterfly Man" at a sum said to be among the highest ever paid for a screen vehicle. The reported price is in the neighborhood of $25,000.

First National Notes

MARSHALL NEILAN has his first production for the First National well under way, and two weeks will see the completion of the first film play, "The River's End," by James Oliver Curwood. Prior to the work of filming this story Neilan spent considerable time in planning his organization and securing experienced people who would greatly facilitate him in producing a quality of picture such as he desired. Included in his staff are Henry Cronjager and Sam Landers, cameramen; Ben Carre, technical director; Wellington Wales, business manager; Howard Ewing, electrical engineer, and Ed. O'Hara, studio publicity manager. Mr. Neilan will have a very small stock company, the only people being under contract are Marjorie Daw, leading woman for Fairbanks for more than a year, and Wesley Barry, the freckled face lad who Neilan discovered in a corner grocery.

"The River's End" will have an unusual array of talent which includes Lewis Stone, Jane Novak, George Nichols, Barney Sherry in addition to Miss Daw and Master Barry.

Pete Smith, New York representative of Marshall Neilan productions, who has been at the west coast for the past two weeks in conference with Neilan and others of the organization, departed for New York to resume his work thereon October 29.

The Robert W. Chambers story, "The Turning Point," is serving as vehicle for Katherine MacDonald for her third or fourth First National release. This photoplay has been in production more than two weeks under the direction of J. A. Barry and from a continuity prepared by H. Tipton Steck. Manager Sam E. Rork has selected a very notable cast to support Miss MacDonald, this being headed by Nigel Barrie who came from New York to the coast especially to play this lead. Other notables in the cast are Kenneth Harlan, William D. Mong, Walter Hires, William Clifford, William Colvin, Little Pat Moore and Misses Hedda Nova and Leota Lorraine

Fox Studio Happenings

A 25,000 acre ranch, forty miles north of Los Angeles where 10,000 head of cattle daily graze, is serving as the playground for the new William Fox producing unit which is making "Camouflaged" which stars Buck Jones. The troupe consisting of about fifty men and women have gone to this location to remain for ten days where director Charles Swickard is making the exteriors for this play of which he is author.

The first five-reel comedy drama for Shirley Mason, the recently contracted star by Fox, has been selected and will be an adaptation for Pearl Belle's story "Her Elephant Man." The continuity is now being written by Denison Clift and Scot Dunlap will be in charge of direction. The filming will not be commenced for at least two weeks.

"The Official Chaperon" is the title of the next play for Peggy Hyland which will be started within a week under the direction of Howard M. Mitchell. The cast has not been named.

Another new play soon to be started at Fox Studios is that which will star Madlaine Traverse, entitled "What Would You Do." This is said to be a highly emotional drama and it will be directed by Edmund Lawrence.

Director Clift Smith and company, which has been at Prescott, Ariz., making exteriors for a Tom Mix western, has returned to the Fox Studio and is now working on interiors.

Director Emmett J. Flynn, who has been in charge of filming the William Russell subjects, arrived in Los Angeles early this week having preceded his star by at least a week. The first film to be made at the west coast studio will be "The Lincoln Highway," but filming will not be started on this for at least ten days.

Preparations are now under way in the technical department of the Fox Studio for the first subject William Farnum will play in after his return to the western studio. Farnum is expected about the 1st of January and it is reported that Pearl White will come West a short time later.

Universal Activities

UNIVERSAL production activities are to be materially curtailed for the next few weeks according to announcement received by practically all directors and writers, on October 25th. Plans of the Universal provide that each director and production unit will, upon completion of the subject on which they are now working, defer further productions for a period of about thirty days. No statement has been issued by general manager Harry Cline respecting this change of policy, which is a contradiction of the statement made a few days previous which was to the effect that Universal this year would not adhere to the policy of former rainy or winter seasons of suspending production for a time. The new policy will cause the plant to have the appearance of a deserted village for a short period.

A noteworthy improvement made at Universal City, which will be very helpful in production, and at the same time reduce the cost greatly, is the erection of a permanent theatre in an enclosed stage. This setting is so constructed that it may easily be changed with respect to the stage and effects thereon, but the seating arrangement, orchestra pit, etc., have been built with a view of retaining the arrangement permanently. The theatre has been under construction for several months and the elaborateness of the interior may be gained from the fact that it cost approximately $35,000. The theatre was built by George Williams, former technical director of the Hippodrome theatre in New York, and the first use of the "edifice" was in the Dorothy Phillips photodrama, "Ambition."

What Metro Is Doing

WITH the first of the Drury Lane melodramas "The Best of Luck," completed under the direction of Ray Smallwood, it is reported from the Screen Classics Studio that "The Hope," produced at Theatre Royal, Drury Lane, in 1911, will next be filmed, Director Smallwood being in charge of the making. This production, as with the one just completed, will have an all-star cast which has not been selected because it will require several weeks' work on the part of the technical staff of the Screen Classics Studio to complete the settings needed for this, inasmuch as the play opens in England, then shifts to India and Italy, while the final scenes are laid in England. Some of the thrillers for this play are a volcano eruption, an earthquake, a polo game, derby and border warfare.

Emma Dunn, starred in the stage production of "Old Lady Thirty-One," has been engaged to play the role she originated on the stage in the film when it is produced shortly at the Metro studios. Continuity for this play is now being written by June Mathis, from the original script of the Rachel Crother comedy.

The Bert Lytell Company, now filming "The Right-Of-Way," adapted from the Sir Gilbert Parker novel, is on location at Lake Tahoe where exterior scenes are being made by Director Jack Dillon. This section of California is more than 7,000 feet above sea level, and offers ideal shots for Canadian Northwest locale, and has wonderful logging camp and water scenes. The company will be absent at least two weeks.

While making scenes for a seashore rain storm needed in "Should A Woman Tell?" the Metro staff found it necessary to build a 150-foot pier where a gasoline engine to operate a pump that would furnish the rain effects could be installed. A storm came up and the waves beat over the engine, so it was necessary to lash two men to the motor.

Thomas H. Ince Newsettes

"WATCH Out William" is the name selected for the next Charles Ray film now being started at the Thomas H. Ince Studio under the direction of Jerome Storm. Winifred Westover is playing the lead opposite this rube star. Agnes Johnston is the author of the story and scenario. Irwin Willatt continues on the second Ince special for Paramount-Artcraft which stars Hobart Bosworth, which is entitled, "Below the Surface." Luther Reed is the author of this play and Grace Darmond and Lloyd Hughes are the principals supporting Mr. Bosworth. Director Lloyd Ingram has the rehearsal of the new play for Doris May and Douglas MacLean. The story was written by Mildred Considine and Luther Reed, but no title has been selected.

The entire cast for the third J. Parker Read production starring Louise Glaum has been selected and includes Myrtle Stedman, Peggy Pearce, William Conklin and Irwin Cummings. A very wonderful interior was used this week for this play.

Doings at Vitagraph Plant

THIS week marked the beginning of a new series of two-reel O. Henry stories at the Vitagraph Studio under the direction of David Smith, who is responsible for the filming of a number of the next series. Jay Marley, who was featured in the most recent O. Henry subject made by the Vitagraph, has been selected to be the featured player in this new series, and the only other member of the cast named is Kate Price, who for several years appeared in Vitagraph subjects.

A rock crusher in the vicinity of Monrovia, California, is aiding and abetting the Larry Semon Company in the making of thrills for a new comedy in which it is reported that William Hauber and the Mazetta Brothers, acrobats, do the best work of their film careers in the matter of jumps and falls.

Montgomery and Rock have started a new comedy, as yet untitled; and Jimmy Aubrey is at work on a comedy laid in a dental office, which is under the direction of Noel Smith.

Goldwyn Studio Notes

GENERAL Manager Abraham Lehr of the Goldwyn Studio was host this week of the government party making a tour around the world to make plans for the around-the-world aerial derby. The commission which is composed of Commissioner Louis Beaumond, Major Charles J. Glidden and Benjamin Hillman, were accompanied by a party of six prominent men of aerial activities of the nation including officers of the Aero Club of America, the Aerial League, New York, chief of aerial police and William G. Sharp, United States Ambassador to France.

The party came to Los Angeles to complete arrangements for a landing field and will sail for Siberia from San Francisco November 3d. Almost an entire day was spent at the studio and the aerial officials saw practically all of the Goldwyn stars and producing units at work.

Here And There

Production at the Christie Comedy Studio continues amid the din of hammers and saws, concrete mixing machines, hoisting derricks, and what not.

This week a new two-reel Fay Tincher subject was commenced by Scott Sidney, which has been named "The Passing of Peevish Pete." It is a decided western, and is from a story by Scott Darling and Frank Conklin.

Frank Keenan has selected the following players to support him in his coming picture now being filmed, which is from an original story by Kate Corbaley: Hardy Kirkland, Edward McWade, Lucille Ward, Catherine Van Buren, Jay Belasco, Russ Powell and Graham Pettie. The film has not been titled, and is now being made at the Brunton studios.

NOVEMBER 15, 1919 NEWS MORE NEWS

Weather—just fair.

Joe Engle's coming west.

Pete Smith has gone back east.

Pauline Frederick has come back to town.

A Universal photoplay is titled "The Woman in the Plot."

Herbert Hayes is the dad of a boy which has been named Douglas.

Kathleen Williams is a student at the DeMille-Mercury aviation field.

Betty Blythe is a Los Angeles girl, and she came back from New York to play in pictures.

Bert Lytell threatens to give himself a Christmas gift—a clean shave, goodbye mustache.

Pat Dowling, now that he is married threatens to buy a second-hand mountain near Hollywood.

Max Karger and Jack Dillon played ball the other day, and then stayed in the hospital for two more days.

Al. St. John has taken up golfing, and so the entire company may be seen frequently on location — for golfing.

Tod Browning says the only Turkisk thing they gave him for a picture is a street, and who wants a Turkish exterior.

The Mayer-Harris Chaplin Company have a property man named Billy West, which doesn't mean they are going to make comedies.

Bill Wing was seen skimming the boulevards toward the Selig studio the other day; therefore, it is safe to predict Bill had a new idea.

Richard (the 'atless) Willis is home from a jaunt, donacher know, to New Yorktown. Reports the weather most extraordinary, and crops good.

Paul Powell made a scene of Mary Pickford the other day that cost $133 a foot, and Mary got run over by an automobile, besides paying the bill.

And now we learn that Leatrice Joy is from New Orleans, and she put the "L" on her name because the "L" stands for Louisiana. What do you think of that?

Ben Carre has taken his French accent from the head of the Nazimova productions technical staff, to the Marshall Neilan productions studio where he will technically direct.

Viola Dana was seen flirting with Mayor Snyder the other day. In fact, the almond-eyed star took him by the arm and walked away with him. Pretty tough for the mayor, eh?

For the benefit of the producing company now making a film titled "Should a Woman Tell," HOKUM advances the information that the Universal used this title, yea, many moons ago.

Dick A. Rowland, the president, who is visiting at the Metro studios, wandered out on the stage the other day, and got lost in the maze of sets, traps, etc., and had to call for help to find his way out.

Sid Chaplin goes to location by airplane. He took his cameraman, personal representative Carlyle Robinson, and flitted right up to Santa Barbara, and was back in five hours, and Santa Barbara is 100 miles away.

Monroe Salisbury was buried alive the other day, and his hair turned grey and his whiskers grew, and in the very next scene he was a spic and span clean shaven young fellow again, but the dear people will not see the scenes in this order.

HOLLYWOOD HOKUM has received a picture of Al E. and C. H. Christie taken when they wore their twaddling clothes. They were pretty children, and Charles had long curls. Pat Dowling labels the picture: "Christie Comedies are three years old."

HOKUM, at this season of the year, looks forward to the Yuletide and Holiday seasons. Therefore, what could be more appropriate than carrying the letters of our darlings and darlingettes of the films who wish to write to Santa Claus. We know a great many of the youngsters will want to write to dear old Nick, and so, a portion of our space will be contributed each week to those who have a message for the dear old man who brings joy on Christmas morn. Children, make your letters brief and to the point, and only write on one side of the paper. Address: Santa Clause care of HOKUM.

New Wage Schedules for New York Projectionists Go into Effect

Rates Worked out by Arbitration Between Union Officials and Exhibitors

FOR many weeks a conference of officials representing the New York State Exhibitors League and Local 306 has had before it the question of new schedules for the theatres in New York and vicinity. This work of establishing new rates was a difficult task because of the wide range of houses which would come under the operation of the schedules. There are theatres in New York as large and well appointed as any in the world, and conversely, there are a number of low class houses which have to be considered. Because of this Messrs. Cohen, Bermann and O'Reilly, representing the Exhibitors and Sam Kaplan with other officials of Local 306 representing the interests of the projectionists are to be commended for the successful outcome of their work.

Thinking that perhaps other Locals throughout the country would be interested to know of the basis on which New York "pros" are to receive their wages, the complete schedule is printed below. The various rating will be found to cover every type of house from the small "nickel house" (if there are any left) to the "dollar a throw" place of amusement.

The NEWS will welcome and print any letters written by readers on the subject of this new wage scale. Perhaps it will be interesting to compare what projectionists are getting in your city or town with these rates.

Debate Continues on Respective Merits of City Man and Small Towner

JOHN MITCHELL of Cordelle, Ga., has a bit to say in favor of the small town projectionist, although to his credit he does not attach all the blame on the city man.

As I have already written to your Projection Department twice before this time, I no longer feel as a stranger, and as I have a few words to say in regard to one of our brother's statements in the News of September 20th, I will now take the liberty of doing so. But before I state what I have to say in regard to any one else, I will tell the trouble I am now having.

September 25th I showed "Cheating the Public." This film was shipped to me directly from the Fox Exchange in Atlanta, Ga. I cannot begin to tell you of the condition in which this film was received. It took me about three hours to get this film in running shape. Enclosed you will find the bad part of the film that I cut out and please note the misframes. I don't think there were over forty or fifty misframes in this seven reel picture. Can you tell me any way to remedy this trouble?

Now don't think I take pleasure in knocking any branch of film service. Just look at the bad parts in this picture and let me hear what you have to say. The last time I wrote you in regard to such acts you advised me to make my complaint to the head office. As I do not know where the head office is located, may I ask your Projection Department to forward a copy of my complaint to the head office and I will send the postage to you. If the exchange can you please advise me who is? Do you think I should have devoted three hours of my time to help make a rich man richer. We operators make our living by running the machine and not repairing film in such condition. We pay them for the service of these films and it should be their duty to send film out in good condition. If we destroy a hundred or two feet of their property, they expect pay for it. Then if we devote our time in helping them repair their stuff why shouldn't we receive pay for our time. Common sense teaches us that anyone causing any harm to any print will do his best to repair same, or if he ran across a bad patch he would fix it.

If there is a man who is not capable of running a machine and taking care of films he should not be allowed to operate one. If the manager of such operator fails to fire a man of such type, don't you think he would be compelled to do so, if the exchanges would refuse to let anyone handle their property who could not take care of it.

Isn't such film dangerous? Don't you think that such film is liable to cause fire and probably burn up some house, and is it not dangerous for the public? Then why is it that such acts are allowed? If I am ignorant I don't want to remain that way. I would like to hear some other brother's opinion in regard to my statement.

Now I have a word or two to say in regard to Brother Lewis Garvin's statement about the city and small town operator. He said he was a small town operator. Well, I want to state that I am a small town operator. Brother Garvin said that the city operator was always knocking the small town operator about the condition of the film, and punch holes. I would like to say that there is a bad sheep in every herd and we will find a few large town operators who are not as good as some small town operators. But we all know that there are more sorry operators in a small town than in a city.

I think that every operator should be his own judge. He knows whether or not he punches holes in the end of each reel or not That is why I say he should know whether or not, when he runs across some city operator write-up in the NEWS in regard to punch holes, it means him. If he is one of the operators who punch holes in the end of each reel then he may know that the write-up was meant for him and others like him. If he is above such, even though he operates in a small town, he should know that it doesn't mean him.

Now in Brother Lewis Garvin's case, I can't see why he took up what some city operator had to say in regard to punch holes, because he being a member of the I. A. T. S. E. I a msure that he had no right to be offended, because I am positive that no local would let a man in if he was not capable of being a first class projectionist.

Enclosed I am sending you a letter mailed to me from the Vitagraph Exchange, Inc. I did not tell them that the rejectionist at Waldista, Ga., smashed it up, but I advised them that I received it from there. If the operator at Waldista did not let this picture ride the top of the sprocket teeth, he can tell where it came to him from. By each man telling where he received this picture from the sorry "operator" can soon be located.

Hoping I have not said too much, as I wanted some of the other brothers to know there are some exchanges that really care.

I am always for better projection. Let me hear what some other brother has to say in regard to my statement.

J. F. Welch, El Dorado, Ark.:—

I haven't as yet written a letter to the NEWS, but at that I don't feel like a stranger, for I have been a reader of the NEWS since 1913 and I consider it one of the best trade journals.

I noticed Mr. Garvin's letter in the issue of September 20th. I differ with him when he says they are all operators. Now surely Mr. Garvin, after having served eight years as an operator will not class himself with a lot of other operators that we have record of. At present there are more operators than there are projectionists.

And in regard to the small town operator doing more damage than the man in the city, you will always find that all of your damage done is in the theatres where they employ an operator. For where the projectionist is employed the film will be taken care of. Of course I will admit that there are operators employed in the city, as well as the small towns.

My idea of an operator is like many others. An operator is a man that works in the booth and who justs operates a picture machine and when the last foot of film has run through the machine he junks up the reels and slams them in the can any old way and then disappears from his booth. The quickest way is too slow for him. Also in the operator's line of tools, you will find Mr. Punch hanging within easy reach since he uses it often. You can always tell an operator by the way he makes patches. And when he comes to the misframes he just jumps at the framing lever and curses the operator who left it, but never takes time to fix it himself as he is too busy. It is very easy to distinguish an operator from a projectionist just the minute you step into the booth or projection room whichever it may be. In the operator's booth you can first notice his tools laying all around just where he happened to use them last (all but his punch. He has a certain place for that over his rewind table). Next cast you eye over the machines and you will notice he has just given them a bath of oil. He has no use for Mr. Broom, in fact he has never had the honor to meet the gentleman.

Now take a glance through the projection room where we find Mr. Projectionist at work. Notice his clean pojection room. Tools all in their proper places; projectors oiled properly, clean and minus all the extra deposit of oil.

Also when projectors are not in use you will find them well covered so any dust that might get in the projection room, will be kept away from them. You will find the projectionist cutting out misframes when they appear making proper patches, eliminating the punch-holes, cleaning the film and in fact putting it in the best of condition possible.

Now I am going to ask any man that has worked at the projection end of motion pictures if there shouldn't be a way to distinguish the two above men apart. I say there should, therefore operator and projectionist.

In closing I wish to call your attention to the inclosed label that I found in the lid of film container on September 18th. Some member down in the Lone Star State is doing all he can to do his duty. Then some sloppy operator tries to come back at him in this way. Now there is no use for me trying to tell this sloppy operator what I think of him, for the editor of this department wouldn't allow it in print, so I have to talk to myself. At any rate the man that did this hasn't any business in the game.

Now I haven't applied for membership in your League but I am strong for it and I certainly appreciate all the members are doing in trying to get rid of the punch hole artists. I certainly try to send my film away in as good condition as possible. And more times than not I send it away in better condition than I receive it.

Now in closing I will say I am a projectionist with ten years' experience. I will write some in the future as I have several different things to bring out. I am not expecting this letter to be published in this form as it is too long. Now the proper man could tell what I have in less words, but nevertheless I think it can be understood.

So This is the CAPITOL!

THE Capitol in New York opened in a blaze of glory. Those who were in the projection room with its gleaming array of nickle plated Simplexes will always remember the night. For some weeks previous to the opening plans had been laid to start the wheels agoing in a manner entirely befitting the occasion. Nothing was too elaborate for the opening night of the largest theatre in the world.

Tom Walker who was appointed chief projectionist from a long list of applicants had the plans in charge. He proposed to do the thing up right. This then was his idea:

If a ship—an ordinary sea-going ship—is favored with a bottle of perfectly good champagne when she takes her first plunge into her element why should a well-behaved projector he treated otherwise. Thus he reckoned. But he didn't stop there. A ship has to have a beautiful sponsor to fondle a bottle of spirits before it is hurled against the delicately curved bow of the vessel. The same thing should be done with his pet Simplex.

So it was decided that Miss Opal Black, athletic star and death-defying stunter of the Vitamine Company should brave the iron ladder leading to the projection room and assume the responsibility of the christening. Flashlight artists and certain nonentities in the projection world were to be present to witness the ceremony. Thus it was arranged.

Now shift your imagination to the opening night. The house with its 5,411 seats was buzzing with the expectant noises of a first night audience. It was already a little past the time set for the start—but who ever knew of an affair of this kind starting off on time. If course the audience didn't mind this. They expected it. But up in the projection room all was abustle. Opal had been escorted from her $15,000 Rolls Royce upholstered throughout in baby blue silk—that is, the car was upholstered, not Opal—and had made her way up the aforementioned iron ladder, across the grid-iron and into the room. Inside the room were eight or ten people waiting for the guest of honor. Hanging down from an eyelet in the ceiling was a baby blue silk ribbon and on the end of it was a bottle of champagne, real honest-to-before-July first-champagne. The ribbon had been adjusted so that the bottle would crash on the shapely pedestal of the middle Simplex. The stage was set.

Introductions were then in order and finally accomplished. The intercommunicating 'phone on the wall buzzed and Tom Walker stepped across to answer it. It was the House Manager asking in ungentlemanly tones when in he-ll the gang up there under the roof would be ready to start. Naturally this uneasiness on his part hastened ceremonies in the room. Everyone except Miss Black was pushed back against the wall and that beautiful lady stepped forward to raise and drop the christening fluid.

Just as she had it at the highest point in the arc of travel she hesitated and suddenly exclaimed "There is nothing in it." Most of those present divined that she meant the bottle and not the Simplexes. There was a rush forward, a grasp of the bottle and a violent agitation for an instant by knowing ones. Their verdict coincided with that of the lady's. It was too late for a hurried visit to someone's nearby cellar, and moreover the manager wanted to start his show. Much to the dismay of all present it was announced that the christening would have to be indefinitely postponed. Walker and his assistants got busy and soon the show was under way and running as smoothly as though a gallon of the precious fluid had been wasted on the highly finished bases of the Simplex projector.

Crestfallen and disappointed the christening party wended its dangerous way down the ladder and to their free seats on the orchestra floor. "Well," thought they, "better luck next time."

But the real question is still being debated: Between the time the bottle was hung by its silken cord and the moment when Miss Opal Black raised it dramatically, where in the devil did the contents go?

C. M. Rellihen, who represents the Franco-American Chemical Corp. of Chicago, had been in New York for some time, convincing users of the quality of his laboratory products. Then the King and Queen of the Belgians showed up. The newspapers made columns of "copy" from the actions of the Royal couple. And always prominent in the stories was the little reference to the Queen and her omnipresent Kodak, and how she often developed her own films.

Rellihen eyed these little notes and saw the germ of an idea. He located a beautiful box and filled it with 100 tubes of his developer. Tying up the finished product with the colors of Belgium he hied himself to the Waldorf and sought out one of the magic passes that would gain him entrance to the suite of Mr. and Mrs. Royalty. His diplomatic manner stood him in good stead and with the small cardboard in his hand he was conducted to the waiting room of the Queen.

The Queen's Secretary took the box and carried it to the Lady herself. Through the open door, Rellihen saw the package being opened in the presence of the Queen. An instant later the secretary returned and said:

"The Queen is very grateful for the gift and will write you her appreciation within a few days."

Shortly after the Royal Pair left New York, Rellihen received a letter which read as follows:

"The Secretary to the Queen of the Belgians has been instructed to have the honor to express the sincere thanks of Her Majesty for the very nice box of ARDEL that the Franco-American Chemical Corporation has been so kind as to send to Her."

An Advocate of Violence

IT has been nearly three months since a victim of the "man with the heart-shaped punch" has risen in wrath and demanded punishment for the culprit. Kokomo, Indiana, is the latest town to be thus outraged. Mr. Etchason, however, has gone a step beyond other accusers and suggests that projectionists constitute themselves a private detective agency with the idea of running down the punch possessor.

According to the letter below, the trouble maker must live in Indiana. Looks then as if Indianians ought to be able to ferret him out without much trouble. Go to it — and let us know what you find out.

KOKOMO, IND., October 24, 1919.

Editor, Projection Department, Motion Picture News.

Dear Sir.— Please find enclosed a few samples of Select Pictures Corporation's Alice Brady in "The Whirlpool." These punch marks were in every reel except the last reel and they sure look swell on a screen. These films came from the Indianapolis Branch and I think they should endeavor to locate this fellow who insists that "hearts are trumps" and they should show him that clubs are trumps.

Every operator in this town belongs to the N. A. M. F. League and I am sure there are no punch marks made in Kokomo. This fellow who did the damage in this picture must live in Indiana and it is a disgrace to the State to have him destroy the films which he runs and I advise you to put an article in the Projection Department that all operators visit one another and try to locate the punch and then punch the fellow who owns it.

With best regards to the League and the department and yourself, I remain,

Yours truly
ELMER ETCHASON,

More Dope on Condenser Breakage

H. F. O'Brien, Westinghouse representative, studio equipment expert and good friend to all projectionists, notices a statement in the News to which he adds a valuable hint. Since his letter contains other matter not of interest to projectionists we are taking out a few paragraphs for printing. Knowing Mr. O'Brien and his good nature we trust he will not be offended at thus mutilating his letter.

"I found time last night to glance through the September 27th issue of Motion Picture News and on page 2644 I noticed an article on "More Condenser Breakage."

"It has always been my experience that a high voltage at the arc will produce exactly the effect mentioned by the writer who is seeking information.

"I will venture that if you will write to this projectionist at Midland, Michigan, and ask him to put an A. C. voltmeter across his arc terminals you will find that he has a voltage there of approximately 90 volts or possibly higher and that if he will reduce this voltage he will positively eliminate the long flaming arc which has been breaking his condensers, and also obtain better projection.

I would be very much interested to know what the results of such a test would be.

It seems strange to me that a theatre which enjoys any patronage at all would continue to use 220-volt A. C. for projection. Apparently they do not stop to figure that they are paying for four times the amount of electricity they use, inasmuch as their arc voltage should be reduced to about one-fourth the line voltage in this case. The man in Midland ought to have a motor generator set.

Comment:

C. T., of Midland, Michigan, will please add the above to the Department's answer in the previous issue. Moreover it might not be a bad idea to show Mr. O'Brien's reply to his manager and perhaps a 1920 motor generator set will result.

Notice! An Error

IN the issue of October 25. Motion Picture News, in a reply to "F. P." on page 3192, the Editor was quoted as saying that the present limitation of Mazda Equipments is "a 12-foot picture at a 9-foot throw." Hardly had the ink on this page become dry before an avalanche of protests and denials commenced to come in.

The statement obviously was in error. It didn't require an expert projectionist to determine that. What happened was simple. The printer having decided that a cipher meant nothing to him merely dropped it from the Editor's typewritten "90" leaving a calm, cool and collected "9" to bring forth the wrath of manufacturers and Mazda users.

However, we regret the discrepancy of 81 feet and proceed herewith to rectify the statement.

We repeat "The present limitations of Mazda Equipment under commercial conditions may be considered as a 12-foot picture at 90 feet.

Technical Editor:

I am writing this to show you some artistic designs for warning marks that I cut out of a Metro production last Saturday and I am sure you will be very much interested in them.

Exhibit "A" is some very beautiful and artistic marks (which I have named Nu-Art) that some simple minded ???? has put in on the ends of the reels which to me look like an Electric storm. It seems that punch marks were not enough for his eyes to see.

Exhibit "B" are pieces that were cut from the same Feature and about thirty feet from the ends. This is not the first time I have received pictures from the Metro with the same kind of a big letter scratched on them after their numbers.

I do not know if the Metro Manager at their Detroit Exchange is aware of this kind of work that is going on in the shipping room. I am very sorry it happened as every Metro picture that I get is always in perfect condition.

As far as marking films at the exchanges for the identification, it is time that the the method used in the days of Florence Lawrence, Broncho Billy and Pathe French Comedies was done away with. Surely some other method can be employed.

In one of the last News (Oct. 18) Indiana speaks about a tube for a G. E. Mercury Rectifier not working. As I understand it, the tube was not in use for a long time. Now the place where I was before I came to Monroe, I was Chief, and I had a tube there that had been out of service for three years. They decided to open the house and I connected the tube to the line, froze my carbons and the tube worked. Indiana's tube must have been stored in a damp place. This one of mine was never out of the projection room from the time the house closed until it was opened again and it was always dry in the booth.

Sometime I am going to give you my experiences as a Chief.

Yours for Better Projection,
H. D. SHAY,
Monroe, Mich

Reply:

The samples of film enclosed in Shay's letter had been marked by scratching diagonal lines across one corner of each frame, evidently with a sharp edged tool. Not content with this signal the culprit had added the usual array of punch marks. From appearances one would assume that the man found it necessary to chew up 30 feet of perfectly good film just to give his lazy self sufficient time to make the change-overs.

Manufacturers of rectifier tubes are usually careful to inform the purchaser that if the tube is ever stored to place it in a dry place where the temperature is as even as possible. Without doubt, Indiana's trouble was caused by this very fact that whoever laid the tube away did not follow instructions.

To Correct Dull Picture

P. A. WILLS of Champaign, Ill., sends in some good suggestions on a variety of subjects from machine trouble to bad films.

In regard to H. D. Robertson's, of Fayetteville, Tenn., trouble with his dull picture, I would suggest his taking out his lens holder and slide and tightening the gib (spring), this should remedy his trouble as he states he has clean lenses and refocuses and then the picture become dull again. I had the same trouble until I tightened the gib. I would like to hear from him as to whether it helped him in his difficulty.

I received a comedy on Friday, which we were to run on Saturday. In the container was a slip stating the film was in to late to be inspected. We can readily see why the films are not shipped us in good condition when we note the spelling of the word too. As long as they have ignorant people for inspectors we cannot expect the film to be in good condition.

I also think that it would be a good plan to use a sticker or seal, such as Exhibitors Mutual uses, for the N. A. M. L. members in addition to the large sticker. The reason is, that the reels are sometimes changed and put in another box and then the sticker does not help the next projectionist as it should. The sticker would not have to be very large, but would have to have room for the name, number, etc., as is on the larger sticker. This could be printed with small type to economize on space, but I think it would really be a great benefit for all.

You have the name of my town spelled wrong, instead of Champagne it is Champaign, only a small matter but the country

Comment:

We will thank you for the suggestion addressed to Robertson. No doubt he will see your explanation in these columns and try it out if he has not already found the cause of his trouble.

We will remember your suggestion for a new-size sticker for N. A. M. L. members, and as soon as our present supply of labels is exhausted a new one will be considered.

Believes Shaft is Sprung

T. P. SHANAHAN, Local 380, Oklahoma City, Okla.:

Gentlemen: As a reader of the NEWS, I noticed in the October 18th issue of the NEWS that a Kentucky brother is having the same trouble I once experienced in regard to his Simplex Projecter and believe the trouble is from the same source, he said he sent his machine to the factory for repairs, of which he should have done himself. I believe if Brother Kentucky would examine the intermittent shaft he would find that it has been sprung and the cam has a tendency to bind at certain positions of the star.

I would suggest he try the intermittent movement from his other machine in the one that is giving trouble and if he gets proper results with same, send to the factory and get a new movement, thus saving the manager buying a new machine or even a new head.

Answer:

Many thanks for the suggestion. It is to be hoped that all other readers will offer suggestions of a similar nature when by so doing they will help out some other projectionists.

Now if the Kentucky man will send us a line telling just what was the trouble with his machine we will all be satisfied.

Questions and Answers

R. C. E. No. 948.

1. Is a rheostat used with a motor generator set?
2. How can you tell the positive and negative wires?

Answer:

1. It depends on the type of motor generator. With a constant current set a steadying resistance is not needed as the action of the generator is automatic. As the current demanded at the arc varies the voltage varies with it thus eliminating any necessity for a rheostat.

If the M. G. set is of the constant potential type a rheostat must be used in series with the arc. This is done to prevent the sudden rush of current when the arc is struck.

Naturally there is no rheostat used on the line side of the motor generator as to do so would defeat the real purpose of the machine, i. e., to reduce line voltage to working voltage.

2. The easiest and simplest method of testing out d. c. conductors for polarity is to connect them to the arc and run for a few minutes. If you run long enough for the crater to form you will know that the crater is on the positive wire. You can also distinguish polarity by watching the tips of your carbons. You will find that one tip will remain red longer than the other. This is the positive terminal. If these simple tests show that you have connected your positive wire to the lower carbon, reverse leads and you are ready for operation.

V. H., Marion, Ill.

Has there been any system devised yet for transferring a negative film to positive during development?

Answer:

There have been several schemes devised to accomplish this feat but it is our belief that none has been practicable to the degree required in commercial laboratory technique. For one method which has been found more or less satisfactory see answer to C. A. S., on page 3343, November 1st, 1919 issue.

H. L. Shetler No. 963:

My picture seems in focus from the projection room but the closer to the screen I get, the more it seems blurred.

Reply:

It is probable that you need a pair of opera or field glasses to use when focusing the picture from the machine room. When you once get it focused so that it is satisfactory when viewed close up to the screen, it will be equally as satisfactory at greater distances.

You may, however, have a screen surface which glares when viewed at short distances. If this is so, a change in surfacing is the only cure.

Tuberculosis kills 150,000 Americans every year, and yet the disease is preventable and curable.

The White Plague flourishes because of carelessness, ignorance and neglect. If the entire country knew of the menace, the death rate from tuberculosis would drop almost immediately.

Use the Motion Picture slide you have received in your theatre calling attention to the fight on tuberculosis and the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals.

The screen is the most potent force in America and the use of this slide will do more than any other one thing to awaken the people of America to their danger, and will help in obtaining the necessary money to finance the year 'round campaign against tuberculosis.

V. B., New Orleans, La.:

I have a couple of machines that jump a little. What could be the cause? Machines are brand new ones.

Answer:

As usual, you have given us little to work on. From what you have said it looks like a case of vibration. This may mean one of two things. The floor of your projection room may not be solid, or perhaps the machines do not stand firmly on the floor.

Because of the meagreness of your details it would do little good to go further into the matter. Write again, describing the kind of jump in the pictures, how often the trouble is noticed, and particularly the kind of machines.

Screens and Shutters

E. E. No. 124 asks:

First I would like to know what you think of the following screens: gold fibre, silver fibre, mirror and the gold satin fibre. Which to your mind is the best?

Have tests ever been made on the Extralite shutter to determine the percentage of light saved.

Reply:

Even though our policy allowed us to express our opinion of what was best in screens we would hesitate to do so without knowing considerable more about your theatre. The kind of screen that makes a hit in one theatre is an absolute failure in another. Some houses are long and narrow: others are short and wide. Different screen surfaces must be used for each type. Some screens are good on "angle projection," that is where the light beam strikes the back wall of the theatre at an angle, while some other screen surfaces fail entirely unless the projection is nearly horizontal.

All the kinds of screens you have mentioned are good and all have been satisfactory results when installed intelligently. There is but one safe procedure and that is to write to the supply house, telling it just what kind of projection you have and the dimensions of the house. Specify at the same time whether you like a picture with a slight color to it such as gold fibre gives or prefer a screen giving pure blacks and whites.

It is our belief that a prominent professor at Columbia University made exhaustive tests on the Extralite shutter and announced a light increase of from 11–20 per cent.

Wants to Lay Out Airdome

D. H. S., Florida:

I am erecting an Airdome and will have a level floor in it. I would like to have a little information as to how high the bottom of screen should be from the floor level.

Reply:

It would be rather difficulit to supply us with LESS data to work with. Before any kind of an answer can be given we should know the dimensions of your theatre, intended seating capacity, position of projection room and many other details such as would be found on the architect's plans.

However, we will gladly give you a few hints by which you will be able to answer your own questions. First, to give you a general idea of the method used in laying out a theatre we would suggest that you read the article on page 2037 of MOTION PICTURE NEWS of Sept. 6th.

First, it will be necessary to take an elevation view of your theatre, that is, a cross section through the middle from front to back. Sketch in the positions of the two or three back rows and from the top of the back seat draw a line toward the front of the house where the screen will be in such a way that the line misses by two or three inches the back of the seat directly in front. Properly, this line of sight should be drawn from the assumed position of the spectator's eye, but if the lines of sight clear the back of the seat in front when drawn from the top of the back seat then the lines of sight will be satisfactory when patrons are occupying these seats.

The only point there is of absolute necessity is that one which determines the bottom of the screen and this point should be seen from every seat in the house. Once this bottom point has been determined the rest of the layout is simple.

If you wish to snd us the drawings of your Airdome or, at least one drawing which shows the elevation, we will be glad to calculate the exact position of the screen so that the picture will be in the view of every spectator. This service will be absolutely free.

How to Use A. C.

D. S.:

Will you tell me how to get best results on alternating current?

ANSWER:

This requires close attention to selection and position of carbons, manipulation of arc and choice of revolving shutter.

There are several makes of carbons on the market for use exclusively on a. c. These special carbons are cored with a chemical compound which eliminates much of the noise of the old a. c arc. Be sure then that your carbons are manufactured for a. c.

Next to the selection of carbons comes the setting. Either the jacknife set or the ordinary d. c. set may be used although the former is preferable. Line up your optical system so that the optical axis just touches the tip of the upper carbon. Draw an arc of about ⅛". Do not try to increase this distance under the belief that by so doing you will have less interference from the lower tip. There may be less interference but other factors such as unsteadiness, spluttering, etc., will enter, thus materially reducing the light from the source.

Do not try to use both craters. Center your attention and care on one and get the maximum illumination from it.

If your arc flames badly borrow an a. c. voltmeter and measure the voltage across arc terminals. The reading will probably be high, providing you have selected the correct size of carbons. Lower this voltage and your screen results will be improved.

Finally the shutter. In most cases, alternating current demands the two wing shutter to eliminate the stroboscopic effect, or as it is commonly called, sychronization. With the three wing shutter the periods of darkness produced by the opaque blades are very apt to come at the same time as the zero points in the alterations of the current supply. This is avoided by using the two wing shutter.

In addition to the above there are certain other important details to be seen to. Get the best transforming equipment, whether it be a compensarc or economizer. Use it intelligently and according to the maker's instructions. There are too many projectionists who are prone to put into use all the unusual stunts they read or hear about. If some other projectionist has a scheme by which he gets more current from his transformer by using an iron nail, or a peculiar "hitch up" let him use it but don't copy him. The manufacturer made the device and tested it before placing it on the market. He knew the limitations and the possibilities better than any user.

Keep the carbon holders bright and free from rust and scale. Few persons realize the ohmic resistance of poor contracts.

Keep spare carbons in a dry place. If moisture gets into the core material, you will be kept busy trying to get a decent light on the screen.

The above suggestions are a few of those which ought to help a user of a. c. Under the best conditions it takes a lot of watchful watching to get good results from alternating current. Because of this it is to be hoped that the number of a. c. users will gradually decrease and indications are always pointing in that direction.

Who can Beat this Record?

E. G. Kemp, projectionist, Bonita Theatre, Tampa, Fla.:

I noticed in your October 25th issue that R. H. H., Andarko, Oklahoma, asks if you know of a rectifier tube that has been in operation over 12,000 hours.

I might state that I have been using the same tube for over four years, burning it thirteen hours daily, seven days per week. It has burned to date over 18,500 hours and is still going good. We are expecting to go up into the "twenties" with it. The rectifier I am using is a General Electric Type M.S. 30 amp. machine.

Let us hear from some users of old tubes throughout the country. It would be quite interesting to hear the records.

Comment:

Yes, that is a fine idea. If any of you projectionists have a pet tube that you have been nursing along for thousands of hours let us hear about it. If you have given it any particular treatment tell us about that too. Your tube needn't have equalled the record set by Projectionist Kemp as that we believe is unusual. But if your tube is still doing service after 8 or 10 thousand hours, the feat is worth mentioning.

Just as a point of information we would like to ask Kemp where his Tube is placed and if it has been painted black as a good many have.

The Complete Plan Book

"The Black Secret"

(Fifteen Episode Pathe Serial Starring Pearl White)

THE first three episodes of this serial look rather classy as there is no underworld stuff amid sordid surroundings constantly before the spectator, although the rapidly changing scenes incidently reaches the lower environments occasionally.

"The Black Secret" is adapted from the romantic novel "In Secret," by Robert W. Chambers. Bertram Millhauser scenarized the story and it was produced for Pathe by the well-known serial director, George B. Seitz.

Pearl White won her greatest following as a popular serial star and she is as active and youthful and effective as she always was; quick on the draw, but generally with a revolver piloting her advances into danger, and swinging heavily, as of yore, on the jaws of the villains.

Walter McGrail and Wallace McCutcheon have the principal roles in support of Miss White and the cast generally appea - well balanced with every part in capable hands.

Mystery, love and adventure are injected in this picture; the last serial in which Pearl White will be seen prior to her entrance as a feature film star.

She is the American girl attached to United States Secret Service and suspects her chief of being in sympathy with the enemy, a gang of organized and desperate adversaries determined to gain possession of the great secret. And this secret is apparently in the keeping of a drunken young man whom the heroine has to actually save from himself as he is anxious to drink himself to death.

The reviewer believes that this is a well produced, compelling serial that will thoroughly captivate all serial lovers and also suitably entertain tho e who do not as a general rule, fancy the serials.—TOM HAMLIN.

Three Sunshine Comedies

(Fox-Two Reels Each)

THE Sunshine comedies are looming up as creations of genuine ideas. It almost seems as if Hampton Del Ruth, the charge d'affairs, had said: "Enough of following the beaten path, let us us be original." "Give me a free hand and I'll turn out comedies which can be featured." This is the impression that his three newest offerings give us. First of all he has assembled some genuine funmakers, next he has seemingly corralled as gifted an ensemble, figuratively speaking, as Dr. Zeigfeld has in his Follies. What is left? Why the good old idea. New stunts, new tricks, new "business" and hustle, hustle, hustle, all the time, appears to be the Del Ruth slogan. You may define his methods as slapstick because it is broad burlesque or low comedy—but it isn't slapstick as we have come to know it.

The three comedies, "The Roaming Bathtub," "Footlight Maids," and "Back to Nature Girl," are really quite indescribable as to plot, although you can make up your mind that the latter two are in no need of a story. Why have a plot when the girls can intrigue the mind? Each one is ridiculous as the meaning of the word. Each is refreshingly original. Each carries a house full of tricks. And each is funny. There is no striving to gain a laugh, no catering to a smile through the employment of hard falls or rather athletic ingredients. Instead the action is achieved spontaneously because the tricks apparently build themselves. The formula back of them is mostly the CHASE. A game of tag—a game of hide and seek as it were.

The principals carry out the catch-me-if-you-can policy. They are here, there and everywhere. They chase bathtubs, crooks, ducks, girls, birds, and what not. And the stunts behind the chasing are unique. No one is quiet. The action never stops. And when that vital element is moving and there is an idea in it you can make up your mind that you've got a first class comedy. It is impossible to go into details concerning these pieces. The wealth of incident prevents. Some follows stunt and trick follows trick in rapid succession. And when you've grown tired of wondering what is coming next—why there are the girls to entertain you. They gambol on the green 'n' everything. They are the ones who put the kick into the comedies.—LAURENCE REID.

"Making Good With Mother"

(Lawrence Grossmith Comedy in One Reel)

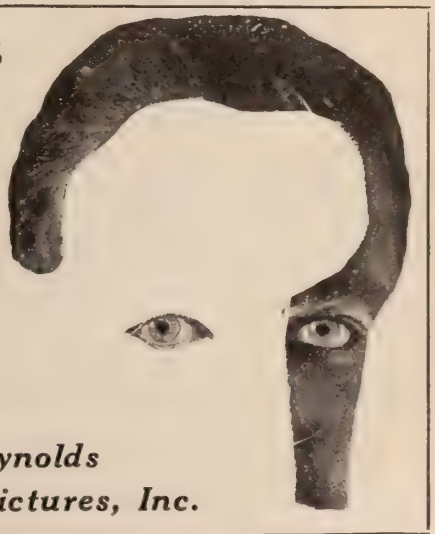
THIS one ran at the Rialto theatre and while well mounted and quite elaborately presented it looked rather amateurish. The professional punch seemed lacking.

It looked as if a large party of society people were enjoying themselves at the home of some wealthy Long Island friends when an automobile with a cameraman and a leading lady happened along and some one suggested producing a comedy picture on the spot with the regular parlor cut-up, Lawrence Grossmith, as principal comedian.

There were several funny incidents, naturally. The high spots being the chase of the valet after candy and the man under the bed while the leading lady was undressing. A good time was had by all the performers.

This is something different and may register as a novelty for that reason but should not be considered as a regular comedy offering. The gowns were very magnificent and the cast is very large.—TOM HAMLIN.

Viola Dana, in Screen Classics, "Please Get Married."



"ME AND CAPT. KIDD"
(WORLD)

Fantastic Story Offers Light Entertainment

WORLD presents Evelyn Greeley as a "glad" girl in her newest offering, "Me and Capt. Kidd." Being, as it is a fantastic type of story it soars occasionally beyond the realms of probabilities, which of course disarm one from becoming unduly analytical. The story offers a variation on the eternal triangle — a humorous variation if you will. A young wife is compromised with a youth to the extent that she is forced to marry him. Which is stretching a point for the characters if you accept the premise that theirs is a short and innocent acquaintance. And so they are separated — not to meet again for a number of years, at which time the husband, now a promising young lawyer, is chosen to take care of his own wife's divorce proceedings.

A novel development for a story which had familiar earmarks written all over it, So the tale which started out with the customary romantic trimmings becomes a thing of entertaining humorous values. Her father dies and she becomes a daughter of the rich. Her foster-parents would marry her off to a wealthy nondescript. It is then that she reveals her marriage. And her husband comes back into her life. Not willingly mind you, because he must first establish his good name.

The picture is bright and it sparkles with optimistic thought. The twist in the development will carry it by as an acceptable offering. Oscar Apfel's direction is praiseworthy.— Length, 5 reels.—Released November 3.— LAWRENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Me and Capt. Kidd," the newest picture in which the world star, Evelyn Greeley, appears, is not a tale of pirates, as the title suggests, but a society romance. It presents a story of the old triangle with distinctly new variations — the girl, her husband and the man who loves her. In this case, however, the man who loves turns out to be her husband, who she lost trace of years before. Miss Greeley plays the part of Peggy Stanton, who meets Tom Hamilton at the beach one summer and marries him.

Shortly after the ceremony, circumstances separated them and she came to New York. And so she lost all trace of her husband. Her foster-father is about to make a fashionable marriage for her when she confesses that she was married some years before. He at once sets out to get a divorce and retains a young lawyer to take charge of the case. The latter is astonished to learn that he is the very man whom Peggy is seeking to divorce. He assures his wealthy client that there will be no trouble in securing the signature of Peggy's husband to the application of divorce and goes to the little village where he first met the girl. She has journeyed there while the divorce proceedings are being settled.

On the beach he meets Peggy and she refuses to sign the application papers. Although Hamilton had changed his name, she recognized him at once and had fallen in love with him again. So Tom is forced to wire his client that he has failed in his mission. It is a novel plot which is unfolded here — a plot filled with rapid-fire situations. Miss Greeley is supported by Raymond McKee and other capable players.

CATCH LINES

She went out to hunt for Capt. Kidd's buried treasure but found only a husband. And they were separated for a number of years. What became of the romance? See "Me and Capt. Kidd."

See Evelyn Greeley in a whimsical play entitled "Me and Capt. Kidd." It is a novel story of a lawyer who is called upon to secure a divorce for his own wife!

PROGRAM READER

She was a girl who enjoyed a lark. One night she encountered a likable fellow and married him, although she didn't know anything about him. And when her father found it out he became exceedingly angry. She must obtain a divorce. There was no other way. And who do you suppose was the lawyer called in to handle the case? Why, her own husband! Think of it! He must rid himself of his long lost sweetheart by getting her a divorce! And right after he had seen her for the first time in years! How was it settled? Did she find her romance or did she get a divorce and marry some one else? You must find out for yourself when "Me and Capt. Kidd" comes to this theatre next ———— with Evelyn Greeley. It is a most unusual story — a story quite whimsical in its development. It unfolds a number of surefire situations.

SUGGESTIONS

Exploit this picture for its novelty of plot and characterization. It presents a most unusual idea and it is cleverly played by the star and her supporting players. Make a good deal of the title in your catch lines. Feature the twist in the development of the story. Bring out that it is the old tale of the Triangle with NEW VARIATIONS. Bring out its human touches and its underlying charm. Run stills of the star and picture in your lobby display. Catch lines look like an excellent angle to exploit the feature. You can express the story in an inviting way if you use your imagination. Such a catch line as "Married eight years — yet he didn't recognize his wife." Feature the director.

"A GIRL IN BOHEMIA"
(FOX)

Satisfactory Entertainment For Majority

A NEAT little modern drama with the suspensive element maintained and solved finally by the novel twist in the climax. This unique ending is akin to the dream thing but instead the "Seven Keys To Baldpate" finale is utilized where all the happenings are divulged as having been contained in the story which the young would-be authoress has just completed.

The young girl has written her first novel and her finance who is an author of best sellers frankly declares that her story is poor and does not depict life in Bohemia in its true light. Thereupon she writes another story and requests him to read it. She asserts that she will go to New York and live in Greenwich Village to obtain the correct atmosphere and it is there that all the action takes place.

She is cheated by the members of the Bohemian set and finally taken to jail and put through the third degree in the attempt to force her to confess that she has stabbed a certain woman. This picture should afford satisfactory entertainment for the majority and while not of particularly heavy calibre is well acted, mounted and produced.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are:—Metropolitan, average puller and generally pleasing; Elite, average puller and generally pleasing; Family, good puller and very pleasing; Labor, good puller and generally pleasing.—Length, 5 reels.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

William Fox presents Peggy Hyland in her latest screen offering, "A Girl in Bohemia," at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

The star portrays the role of a wealthy society girl who wanted to be an authoress. Her father and sweetheart try to discourage her. Her fiance is a successful author himself and frankly tells her that her first manuscript does not depict Bohemian life true to form and that it is a poor story.

It is then that the star tells them she will write another story. She gives the second story to her sweetheart to read and then she tells her father that she is going to New York City and will dwell in Greenwich Village to obtain the true atmosphere of Bohemia.

Then the action starts. The girl is cheated and imposed upon generally and even starts to elope with an actor until she finds that he hasn't enough money to buy the railroad tickets.

She agrees to go to the bank to get the money but finds that someone of her Bohemian friends has drawn out all the money she had on deposit.

Her actor man in the meantime has had a quarrel with his girl and the girl is stabbed by falling upon a knife. The young would-be authoress is accused of the murder and put through the third degree.

It is then that she decides that Bohemian life is not all that it was supposed to be. In the final denouement a great surprise is due the audience. The theatre manager will not divulge in advance just what this is but the picture is said to have a very novel and appealing twist in the finale.

CATCH LINES

Where one conventional girl becomes unconventional and then scurries back chastened to the convention.

One burly officer almost browbeats a young girl through brutal third degree methods to confess guilt when she was innocent.

She wanted to obtain Bohemian atmosphere first hand to provide material for her forthcoming novel and secured enough "atmosphere" for six books.

PROGRAM READER

She was a wealthy girl caught in bad company and was accused of doing away with a woman acquaintance.

When she was put through the third degree at the police station she withstood every effort they made to induce her to confess to a crime that she did not commit.

It all came about through her ambition to absorb the so-called true Bohemian atmosphere and it now looked as if she would not be able to maintain even a breathing acquaintance with Mister and Missus Atmosphere.

Her fiance was a successful author and she had visited Greenwich Village to get the right material for her book. The girl wanted to be a successful authoress herself and not have her husband get all the credit for brains in her family.

All this is shown in the William Fox film coming to this theatre next week entitled "A Girl in Bohemia" and starring Peggy Hyland.

SUGGESTIONS

The maker, the star and the title are the three high points most valuable in your exploitation after you have booked this picture. "William Fox presents Peggy Hyland in 'A Girl in Bohemia.'" This line will have a broad appeal you will find although it may not look startling. Of course the material from the "Program Reader" and the "Catch Lines" on this page should be utilized and also all the regular stuff.

And here is another thing that will help and the picture will make good on this point. Declare that one of the novel surprises in filmdom is brought out in the climax of this picture.

"THE GLORIOUS LADY"

(SELZNICK-SELECT)

Will Get By As Mildly Entertaining

IF you do not grow profuse and extravagant in your promises to prospective patrons when announcing this picture it will no doubt get by nicely as mildly entertaining. But hold a stop watch on superfluous adjectives and just bill it straight and y u will have no humiliating come-back to bother you afterwards.

This will assuredly register as an average society drama and several attempts at thrills and intense situations have been very well handled. Of course if the dainty Lady Loame had used a little horse sense all the trouble she fell heir to would have been averted. But if that happened there would have been no story. And if there had been no story there could have been no motion picture.

Just so long as theatres need pictures, and all the pictures can not be so-called knockouts, they must be thankful to get a production that scores up to average. And although this is a lightweight it should generally satisfy. It has an English locale, a quite romantic love element, with the inevitable plotters foiled, and the loving couple reunited.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, average puller and fairly pleasing; Elite, average puller and fairly pleasing; Family, average puller and fairly pleasing; Labor, ordinary puller and not very pleasing. —Length, 5 reels.—Released October 19,—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

Evelyn Brent, Robert Taber, Huntley Gordon, Marie Burke, Mona Kingsley and Mrs. Henry Clide.

Story by Edmund Goulding.
Directed by George Irving.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Olive Thomas is coming to the ———— theatre for a ———— days engagement in her latest Select Picture presented by Selznick Pictures Corporation and entitled, "The Glorious Lady."

This is from the story by Edmund Goulding and directed by George Irving.

The scenes are laid in England and is built around a "point-to-point" horse race in which the star as Ivis Benson the daughter of the chief tenant, rides Black Beauty to victory defeating her closest contender, the Duke of Loame.

Matt Moore, as the Duke, is immediately captivated by the winsome jockey and rather neglects the young lady he had been attending for some time.

The Duke is the last of a long race of high spirited hard drinking Englishmen and after the horse race started he was thrown from his horse and a thrilling rescue is made by the heroine.

Fnally the Duke won out against the expressed desires of all his relations and wins the girl as his wife. When a few plotters make her believe that she will never be able to bear the Duke a child she tries to get him to divorce her so that he could marry some one who could provide him with the child necessary as he was the last of his family.

When he refused, she feigned drunkenness and tried to humiliate him so that he would cast her off and finally she ran away. But the Duke found her and Lady Loame found complete happiness with her husband the Duke. And she bore him a man child. The cast in this Selznick picture is said to be a notable one and "The Glorious Lady" is pronounced a very excellent picture.

PROGRAM READER

Her husband, the Duke, refused to divorce her, although she begged to be freed.

She was not tired of being called Lady Loame but she felt that she loved her husband too much to handicap him any longer.

As a last recort in order to humiliate him so that he would let her go in disgust she feigned drunkenness.

Even then he would not divorce her. For he loved her dearly.

Then she ran away.

The Duke could not find her. She had vanished so thoroughly that even the dectives could find no trace of her. And the Duke was worried almost sick.

There were plotters in the house.

It was when they told her that she could not bear the Duke any children because of an accident caused when she fell from her horse, she determined to disappear so that the Duke could marry again and become the father of a child to succeed him, for he was the last of his family to perpetuate the name.

But plotters have a way of getting foiled. And in this very pretty romance they are finally foiled and the loving couple re-united.

"The Glorious Lady" is the title of the Selznick picture depicting these events. And it comes to this theatre with dainty Olive Thomas in the leading role.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this one you must depend upon the pulling power of the star to a very great extent. Olive Thomas is now quite well known as has no doubt a pulling power of considerable strength in many localities. Mention of course that Matt Moore is her leading man and that this is a Selznick Picture as this brand is quite well advertised in many places and should help some. Photographs and half-tone cuts of this pretty star should be displayed wherever possible with this line. "Olive Thomas, 'The Glorious Lady,' at the ———— theatre." This should do the work effectively as this is a picture that invites no circus stunts of any kind.

"HIS DIVORCED WIFE"

(UNIVERSAL)

A Simple Story of Simple Folks

IN a little mountain village in Eastern Kentucky dwelt a young girl named Nance who lived with her Pa and loved the village blacksmith who is the hero of the piece and is portrayed by Monroe Salisbury

A young attorney settled down in this little town of shacks expecting to make his living by lawing. He got to be District Attorney and from then on he was a villian. He wanted to win Nance and when the village pest is killed the scoundrelly District Attorney forgot his oath to the people and destroys the written confession of the real murderer. He had no good principles at all and just to get the honest and stalwart young smithy out of his path in order to win his wife, Nance, the attorney manages to fix the crime of murder on the blacksmith who could neither read nor write.

The smithy mooned around in his cell until they pardoned him and then he trudged back to his former home and found the rascally young attorney fussing around trying to make his grass widow marry him. The hero, the blacksmith, who is now an exconvict, is shot in the back by a bullet from the revolver held by the despicable attorney and then the villain meets his just deserts for he falls off his horse down a cliff.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities will register about the same everywhere. If Monroe Salisbury is a good drawing card in your locality the picture will pull. Length, 5 reels.—Released October 26.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"His Divorced Wife" is the title of the Universal Feature scheduled to appear at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

Monroe Salisbury is the star and this is a story of love, slander, hatred and revenge in a little mountain town of Eastern Kentucky.

As Asa Whipple, the village blacksmith, the young star wins the hand of Nance, the pretty daughter of Jethro Haws. Her father had gradually lost most of his property and was in reduced circumstances. He rather favored the suit of Rufus Couch, a rising young attorney but love won out and the blacksmith married Nance.

When a man is murdered in the town the young attorney hides the written confession of the murderer and manages to fix the crime on the young blacksmith. While the young husband is in prison Nance's father and the young attorney persuade her to divorce him.

He is pardoned and returns home just in time to prevent the wedding but decides to go so that his former wife could provide an education for their child through marrying the now wealthy attorney. But a quarrel ensues and the jealous lawyer shoots the blacksmith in the back but is killed himself when trying to escape as he falls off his horse and rolls down a steep cliff.

The young blacksmith recovers and the couple are re-united determined to start life anew.

This is heralded as a most excellent Monroe Salisbury vehicle and it is said to be intensely interesting and entertaining.

CATCH LINES

Falsely accused and convicted the young man was sent to prison and then his wife divorced him.

———

When the governor pardoned the prisoner the ex-convict returns to find his wife had secured a separation.

———

Where a stalwart village blacksmith finally bests an unprincipled lawyer in the game of love.

———

Right won out against wrong and villainy is again crushed in a romance of a mountain town.

PROGRAM READER

He was just the village blacksmith in a little mountain town. He could neither read nor write but he had a great and abiding love for Nance, the pretty daughter of one of the villagers.

And Nance had a mind of her own in spite of her father's pleadings and refused to wed a rising young attorney but married her true love, the village blacksmith.

When a ne'er-do-well is killed in the little mountain town the attorney manages to destroy the written confession of the real murderer and fastens the crime on his successful rival, the stalwart young blacksmith husband of Nance.

The young hero was sent to prison and then the attorney and the girl's father worked so hard on persuading Nance to secure a divorce in order that the attorney could provide an education for her little child that she finally reluctantly accedes.

And then her husband is pardoned when the Governor learns that he is innocent.

When he arrives back to his home town the young blacksmith finds that he has been divorced and his former wife is about to be married to the scoundrelly young attorney.

From then on things happen fast and furious.

"JOHN PETTICOATS"

(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Hart is Humerous as well as Human Here

WILLIAM S. HART has discarded his Western regalia for store clothes in his latest picture, "John Petticoats,"—a picture which offers him something new in characterization. It is good to see him out of his familiar role if for no other reason than it affords him a chance to show his ability in another direction. And by occasionally putting aside his chaps and doing something DIFFERENT he will always be assured of his following. We look upon him this time as a lumberjack who inherits a modiste shop in New Orleans and he brings to the part all his familiar ruggedness,—his human awkwardness.

The incongruous aspect of finding him in such a role emphasizes the aforementioned characteristics, so that he appears almost quaint. The part offers him no small opportunity to display his versatality. The little snatches of detail, the human touches, here and there, are what make this picture entertaining. He is ashamed of his business and whenever he opens his mouth he literally "puts his foot in it." His kindness, his strong sense of honor and his keen sense of humor are factors which make a novel characterization out of old and familiar material.

There are no insincerities here. What is melodramatic has its place. Indeed the characters act and talk like human beings—as they usually do in Gardner Sullivan's stories. Your patrons should enjoy this picture because it presents a new Hart—a Hart who can do the commonplace things as artistically as the heroic. Winifred Westover as the girl looks as if she might have stepped out of an old miniature, while Walt Whitman plays a gentleman, such, of the old school, to the life.—Length 5 Reels. —LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

William S. Hart's next Paramount-Artcraft feature, "John Petticoats," which will be shown at the ———— theatre beginning ————, affords this rugged star an entirely new role. Instead of the time-honored Westerner he portrays the part of a modiste in the city of New Orleans. In the North woods from which he came John Haynes is known as "Hardwood," a name he earned because he was the boss lumberjack of the camp. By the will of an uncle, just deceased, he has become owner of the modiste shop. Arriving in the Southern city he is flabbergasted to find that he owns a petticoat parlor.

It happens one day that Judge Meredith is unable to buy his granddaughter a new graduating dress, and "Hardwood" comes to the rescue by offering to board with him and thus provide the old gentleman with the necessary money. A ball is given in honor of her home-coming and John makes a sorry spectacle of himself. His crude manners prove a handicap in his efforts to win Caroline. His rival, a dissolute scion of a wealthy family, saves his life shortly after, and out of gratitude, the rough modiste offers to do anything for him.

He learns afterward that the young scamp is responsible for his forelady taking her life. So Haynes is called upon to make good his promise. The result is he remains silent so that his name is connected with the tragedy. Judge Meredith has just requested him to leave the house when he receives a letter which clears up the complications. So the lumberjack is taken back into the Meredith home. The picture carries a wealth of humor which is admirably commingled with pathos. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the story while the direction is taken care of by Lambert Hillyer.

CATCH LINES

Something entirely new for Mr. Hart—a wonderfully human and humorous story of a male modiste. And Bill Hart the modiste. From a lumber camp to a petticoat parlor is some leap. See how he made it.

You've seen Bill Hart as a bandit, as a lumberjack, as a cowboy, as a crook. But you never saw him as a modiste. Come and see him take charge of a petticoat parlor in "John Petticoats."

PROGRAM READER

Your favorite picture of Bill Hart is in the familiar role of a Westerner. You enjoy seeing him in chaps riding the plains in search of bandits or eluding sheriffs. You have admired him as a lumberjack and as a city crook. But wait—you've never seen him as a modiste. You've never looked upon him as the proprietor of a dressmaking parlor, have you? Wait! Your opportunity comes next ———— when he appears in his newest offering, "John Petticoats." Wonder of wonders! The great delineator of Western characters in charge of milady's shop! Why he even wears a dress suit. He dances 'n everything. A great play—a play bubbling over with rich comedy. A play of pathos too. For it is Bill Hart's way to make the tears follow the smiles and the smiles follow the tears. Don't fail to see this picture. It will go on record as one of his best.

"EYES OF YOUTH"

(EQUITY)

Wonderful Picture For All Classes

HERE is a picture that you can go the limit on intensely exploiting and you should satisfy all classes of patrons. It has a novel theme tieing up a series of three separate and distinct plots and is lavishly mounted, cleverly directed, and portrayed by a capable cast of well known screen artists.

Clara Kimball Young has one of the best roles of her screen career and one of her characterizations in particular registers supreme.

When the girl expresses a desire to look into the future and see what the final outcome of each of three decisions would be a Yogi permits her to gaze into a crystal globe and the action leading up to each final situation is graphically portrayed.

And the happy ending to this photoplay is reached when the disillusioned girl makes the fourth decision.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities will be about the same for all classes of audiences in every locality and for every theatre. This picture will undoubtedly pull tremendously and please splendidly.—Length, 7 reels.—Released October 26.—TOM HAMLIN.

THE CAST

Her Father.....Sam Southern
Her Suitor.....Edmund Lowe
Another.....Ralph Lewis
Still Another.....Milton Sills
The Yogi.....Vincent Serrano

From Stage Play by Max Marcin and Charles Guernon.
Scenario and Direction by Albert Parker.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Clara Kimball Young in her first Equity Pictures Corporation offering, "Eyes of Youth" will be shown at the ———— theatre for ———— days beginning ————.

This is from the successful stage play by Max Marcin and Charles Guernon and was scenarized and directed by Albert Parker.

The star appears as Gina Ashling, the daughter of a business man who is fast losing his hold financially and urges that she marry a certain wealthy man. She loves a young man who leaves for South America to try for the fortune and success that will enable him to provide for her in the environments she has been accustomed to.

There is another persistent suitor that she does not care for and probably thinks less of him than of the other two. He advises her that her duty is at home with her father and her brother and her sister instead of the grand opera career promised her by a visiting director who heard her beautiful voice.

It is then that a Hindu appears and places before her the crystal globe which he declares will reveal the future in each of the three choices. The first shows her the outcome should she stay at home, the second shows her graphically just what will occur if she accepts the grand opera career. The third gaze shows her the fate she would meet if she marries the wealthy man.

This is branded by critics as the most wonderful picture that Clara Kimball Young has ever starred in and they say that it gives her a wide scope for emotional acting. In the cast are such well known artists as Gareth Hughes, Pauline Starke, Sam Southern, Edmund Lowe, Ralph Lewis, Milton Sills and Vincent Serrano.

PROGRAM READER

Clara Kimball Young appears next week at this theatre in the role of a young woman who had three persistent suitors and a home career or successful operatic career to decide upon.

And the young woman was in doubt and expressed a wish that she could look ahead and see the final outcome of each of the decisions.

It is then that a Yogi approaches and assures her that if she will gaze into the crystal globe she will see the final outcome of each of the paths offered to her.

Should she take the advice of one of her suitors and sacrifice the grand opera career? He advised her that her duty was at home with her father, brother and sister.

This was pictured to her in the crystal and she turned from the outcome.

Her next gaze was expressed in the wish for the grand opera career and the final outcome of this filled her with horror.

Then she decides on the wealthy man in preference to the youth she loved. But when saw her finish in this it was as an outcast because he had grown tired of her several years later.

"Eyes of Youth" is pronounced by all critics as the wonder picture and Clara Kimball Young is said to have the best production here that she has ever appeared in heretofore.

It is her first Equity Pictures Corporation photoplay and will appear in this theatre all next week.

This production is from the successful stage play by Max Marcin and Charles Gurenon and was scenarized and directed by Albert Parker.

SUGGESTIONS

It is folly to suggest to any live exhibitor just what to emphasize in this picture after he has booked it. Because the answer will be unanimous—"Clara Kimball Young." She has not been seen in a new feature for some time now and this is her first Equity Pictures Corporation photoplay. Send the announcement cards to your society list.

Of course you will also tell them that this is from the very successful stage play by Max Marcin and Charles Guernon and that it was scenarized and directed by Albert Parker. And "Eyes of Youth" is an attractive title and there is such a wealth of exploitation possibilities open on this picture that will immediately occur to you that it would be a waste of space to suggest anymore than the high spots. The material can all be found on this page in "Press Notice-Story," "Program Reader," and "Catch Lines."

"TURNING THE TABLES"
(PARAMOUNT-ARTCRAFT)

Farce Will Agreeably Entertain Majority

THIS is an out-and-out farce from start to finish without a touch of drama or pathetic incidents to distract. But thrills have been injected where the two young ones try to escape from the sanitarium.

Dorothy Gish appears as the ward of a stern old aunt who finally has the girl adjudged light-headed and confined in a private sanitarium. But the girl manages to change places with the nurse at the very doors of the asylum and the real nurse is incarcerated as the patient while the girl is used as a regular nurse.

There are many comedy situations and chases which come to a climax when the unscrupulous superintendent marries the real nurse under the impression that she is the wealthy heiress. And the pseudo nurse cures one of the young male patients for her future husband.

Although far-fetched in spots this is pure farce and scores good heavy laughs in many of the situations. It is amusing enough to agreeably entertain the majority. And the direction is clever.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are: Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and very pleasing; Family, average puller and generally pleasing; Labor, average puller and fairly pleasing. Length, 5 reels.—Released in November.—TOM HAMLIN.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Dorothy Gish in "Turning the Tables," her latest Paramount-Artcraft offering, is scheduled for a ———— days' showing at the ———— theatre, beginning ————.

This is described as a photoplay of farce and thrills, and the story is by Wells Hastings. The star appears as the young ward of a maiden aunt, who is very stern with her and manipulates the young girl's fortune for her own personal benefit.

In order to get the girl out of the way the aunt has the girl adjudged slightly light-headed and confined to a private sanitarium. But our heroine manages to change places with her nurse at the very doors of the asylum and the real nurse is incarcerated as the patient and the real "patient" is accepted as the nurse.

She manages to nurse herself a fine young husband, and the unscrupulous superintendent of the sanitarium marries the real nurse, supposing her to be the wealthy young girl. Then the climax when the young folks try to escape from the place.

This is described as one of the most laughable farces of the year, and Dorothy Gish is said to be supported by an exceptional cast of comedians and comediennes.

One of the funniest incidents and the situation where the most thrills are afforded is the attempted escape when the hero holds one end of a long beam and the heroine hangs on the other end outside the third-story window and cannot get either up or down.

She is swayed from side to side, with a guard waiting eagerly to seize her as she swings toward their particular window.

PROGRAM READER

Her aunt said she was "weak in the noodle and should go to the bughouse." So the "nut factory" claimed her for a while.

As the nurse reached the doors of the sanitarium her young patient changed places with her and the nurse was incarcerated as the patient, while the alleged patient prowled around the asylum as a nurse.

When one young male patient thought the "nurse" was curing him she was merely grooming a future husband for herself.

And then right about here the unscrupulous superintendent of this private sanitarium married the real nurse, thinking she was the wealthy young heiress.

This was a topsy-turvy house all right, because all of the scoundrels got their dues and virtue was rewarded.

Yes, this is a hilarious farce, coming to this theatre next week.

You will know that it is funny when we mention that Dorothy Gish is the star and it is a Paramount-Artcraft picture.

SUGGESTIONS

When you book this picture just announce outright that: "It is only to laugh, and if laughing is against your doctor's orders, we warn you to stay away from this theatre next week. 'Cause Dorothy Gish is coming to raise the very dickens. They try to put her in a funny house as a patient and she comes out a full-fledged nurse." Material along this line is more effective when you have a farce to offer. Don't forget to mention, of course, that this is a Paramount-Artcraft picture.

"BONDS OF LOVE"
(GOLDWYN)

Frederick is Splendid in Mother-love Story

GOLDWYN has succeeded after many attempts in finding suitable material for Pauline Frederick's emotional talent. If Louis Sherwin had her in mind when he conceived "Bonds of Love" then he surely has her personality gauged to a nicety. The following which should be hers on the screen WILL be hers if he continues to be her scenarist and writes as appropriate material as he has here. Mr. Sherwin has gone into the land of mother love for his theme and has come out with a familiar formula—but a formula which takes on an appealing freshness so surely does he realize on the dramatic values. His technique is faultless insofar as any false conceptions are concerned.

What transpires on the screen has the semblance of appearing real. You will instantly recognize the evil-minded characters who are ever ready to defame anyone who threatens to expose them for what they are. You will sympathize with the governess who comes into the life of the bereaved father and takes the place of the little boy's mother. The evil minded ones continually taunt her with the virtues of the deceased, hoping thereby to make her go away so that the purse strings will remain untied.

The drama builds surely to its climax sending out on the way its pangs of anguish and its rays of mother love and romance. And the characterization is as fine a sample of feminine vitue as we have come across in some time. She is misunderstood to the sacrifice. The story is logical and it moves forward with ever increasing interest. Director Baker's touch is a sure as Mr. Sherwin's idea is reasonable.—Length, 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Pauline Frederick, the emotional star, comes to the ———— theatre next ———— in her latest Goldwyn photoplay entitled "Bonds of Love." Never before has her talent been displayed to better advantage than in this story by Louis Sherwin, erstwhile dramatic critic of the New York Globe, and which has been so effectively visualized by Director Reginald Barker. Miss Frederick assumes the role of Una Sayre, who is employed as governess for Jimmy in the home of Daniel Cabot. His sister-in-law, Lucy Beekman, and her brother, Harry, have been living on the bounty of their brother-in-law, Lucy exercising the duties of governess and running the household.

In fear that the new governess will overcome Cabot's vow never again to marry, they plan to keep the memory of their sister ever in his mind. The boy, however, forms an attachment for Una. Nevertheless, the others make life so miserable that she decides to leave. Just as she is about to say good-bye the little fellow is in danger of losing his life by drowning. Naturally she hastens to his rescue. Her bravery causes his father to beg her to stay. She accepts, but still his relatives persist in their persecution and their comparative references to the dead wife. Despite their machinations to blacken her character, the little boy finds a new mother and the social grafters lose their means of sustenance.

The unfathomable depths of mother love and the pain of being wracked between self-sacrifice and revenge are some of the emotions which the star is called upon to express. She is supported by a capable cast.

PROGRAM READER

The struggle between mother love, self-sacrifice and revenge furnishes the dramatic action of Pauline Frderick's newest picture, "Bonds of Love," which comes to this theatre beginning————. In this photodrama the star plays the role of a governess to a little boy who has lost his mother. How her association develops the mother love in her warm, affectionate nature, how she is persecuted by scheming relatives, who see in her a nemesis to their welfare, how she decides to leave, but discovers that her heart belongs to the boy and his father, are the situations which make this picture one of the most absorbing bits of drama that ever reached the screen. The star is presented with another opportunity to disclose new depths in her art. Remember the date, ————.

SUGGESTIONS

There are sufficient box office merits in "Bonds of Love" to warrant you giving extra exploitation to the picture. It presents a powerful theme, and it would be well to concentrate upon it in your copy. Announce that the star has the greatest role of her career. You will not go wrong here. Because it provides her with opportunity to display her emotional capabilities to the utmost. Attract the women in the exploitation of the theme and feature the star in all your advertising. Bring out the spirit of the picture and its message. You can use a mail campaign and drive home in the arguments the vibrant theme of mother love. Ask questions of your patrons along such lines as this: "Should a widower marry again to give his child a mother?" Run catch lines. That would be an excellent angle. Obtain the half-tone advertisements from your Goldwyn exchange. Use them. Run a teaser campaign on the question idea. Ask your patrons here. What are the bonds of love? The chance is yours to obtain big receipts.

"DESERT GOLD"
(HAMPTON-HODKINSON)

Vivid Action and Rich Backgrounds Here

ZANE Grey's ability to tell a story is emphatically brought forward in 'Desert Gold," which is visualized with admirable fidelity. He can elaborate the familiar Western Formula — shake up its ingredients so to speak, with the result his stories stand out not only for their vivid action for their vitality of plot and characterization. "Desert Gold" presents a different mixture of the ingredients. The same hardy pioneers, the outlaws, their search for the elusive gold, their primitive emotions — these are incorporated with a verisimilitude which should delight the spectator.

You forget the conventional pattern in the wealth of incident that is introduced. There will be those who will find flaws in the picture. True the continuity takes flight at times due to the scheme of injecting too much detail. The offering, seven reels in length, could be judiciously trimmed to five without losing any vital points of the story. And the titles which carry the villain along could be made less conventional.

Its merits far exceed its faults however, and the weaknesses will be forgotton in the colorful action that is unfolded. Fights succeed fights, thrills succeed thrills and all these melodramatic trimmings are emphasized with pictorial embellishments which are treat to the eye. Director Hunter has vitalized the story with dramatic touches. His sandstorm is immense. The producers have spared no expense as to cast. E. K. Lincoln, Russell Simpson, Edward Coxen, Margery Wilson and Eileen Percy are names which speak for themselves.—Length 7 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

"Desert Gold," the W. W. Hodkinson picture taken from Zane Grey's novel of the same name, will be presented at the ———— theatre beginning ————. The story has been acclaimed the greatest of the author's works, a fact which impresses one after witnessing the screen version. It is a tale of the West that Zane Grey knows so well — a tale of smashing situations and climaxes — a tale of action and suspense and atmosphere. A cast of brilliant players, headed by E. K. Lincoln, includes Eileen Percy, Margery Wilson, Walter Long, Russell Simpson, Edward Coxen and others.

The story depicts the stirring adventures of Dick Gale, a sturdy soldier of fortune. While traveling through the Southwest he encounters an old college friend. Captain Thorne, and assists, with the aid of several cowboys, in rescuing the officer's sweetheart, Mercedes Castenada, from Rojas, an outlaw, and his group of bandits. Thorne returns to duty while he intrusts the care of the girl to Gale. Together they seek refuge at the home of Jim Belding, a rancher who lives near the Forlorn river. There it is that the young adventurer meets and falls in love with Nell Burton, the foster-daughter of the rancher.

Learning that Mercedes is at the Belding ranch, Rojas hurries there to capture her. With the rancher's aid, the party manages to elude the bandits and strike out for Yuma headed by Yaqui, an Indian who owes his life to Gale, and who out of gratitude makes himself a self-appointed guardian. Hiding the girl in a cave, Gale and the others take their stand to battle the outlaws. The desperado band is wiped out, with the exception of Rojas, who finds Merecedes and attacks her. Rushing to her rescue, the Indian succeeds in throwing the bandit over a cliff. And so Gale turns to thoughts of love and marries Nell after her identity is established. The picture contains a wealth of photographic display.

SUGGESTIONS

You can jump your receipts on this picture if you exploit it for the full value of the author's name and its story quality and the names of the players. Zane Grey is one of the most widely read novelists of the day because he writes with a very vivid pen. Make the most of his popularity by featuring him in all your copy. Get a copy of his "Desert Gold" and print excerpts from it in your newspaper space and program reader. Publicize the feature in advance, so that the patrons will know what to expect.

Get all the accessories that you can obtain from the nearest Pathe exchange. Use them. Tell that it is an adventurous story which presents a double romance — a romance that is punctuated with the search for gold. Bring out its vital action. Feature the players. They make up an all-star cast. Co-operate with your bookseller in putting over the picture. Get a window display of the story a day in advance of your showing of the feature.

CATCH LINES

See Zane Grey's most powerful story, "Desert Gold," on the screen. It is a dashing double romance of the great outdoors.

Follow the long trail — the winding trail — the weary trail that led to desert gold. See a picture made from Zane Grey's thrilling story, "Desert Gold."

"SEALED HEARTS"
(SELZNICK-SELECT)

Characterization Kills Story Interest

EUGENE O'Brien will, in all probability, fail to please his army of followers here since his newest offering develops contrary to the dictates of good taste. The plan which producers have of making a conventional story to carry a twist is praiseworthy since a voice is crying in the wilderness for something NEW. This ambition is all right when it is used with subjects which are conventionally romantic, but in such a work as "Sealed Hearts" it only accentuates the unethical character of the theme. Not a glow of happiness is seen throughout its length until a sop is thrown to the customary ending.

The picture of a man in the second blooming of maturity attempting to defy human instincts and turn a deaf ear to the call of the heart is not a pleasant one. So emphatic is he in his denunciation of women that the spectator is surprised to find him susceptible to the first one who glances his way. And when she makes a marriage of convenience you lose sympathy for her in her inexplicable conduct. Wives of highest bidders are won over in time. But the conflict of youth versus age must be capitalized. Hence she falls in love with his son

The unwholesome twist comes when the irate husband denounces her in the presence of masculine company. Something snaps in his distorted brain and he dies — dies with the words that she is his son's mistress. A dramatic scene to the core but one which is unnatural and, therefore, unconvincing. Mawkish sentimentality penetrates the story throughout — a story which is a favorite with the sob sisters. There is no relief from its gray interludes — no sunshine is discernible. Romance is striven for but it rings false.— Length 5 reels.— LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Eugene O'Brien, the new Selznick star, who will be remembered as a leading man for Norma Talmadge and other well-known actresses of stage and screen, appears at the ———— theatre beginning ———— in the second of his stellar offerings, "Sealed Hearts," a photoplay from the pens of Eugene Walter and Edmund Goulding, and directed by Ralph Ince. This is a subject based upon the unnatural attempt of a man to resist the call of romance. It also presents a theme founded upon a marriage of convenience. Frank Marchbanks is in love with his life's work. He would insist that his son, Jack, turn a deaf ear to the call of the heart, since he carries the impression that a woman is detrimental to a man's success. Jack agrees.

In the meanwhile the father is taken ill and his doctor advises a long rest. During his stay at the Rutherfords, he meets Kate, the eldest daughter. And he, who has never known love, offers up his heart. The girl does not respond, even though her father urges her to make a marriage of convenience and thus save him from ruin. The son, however, is unable to understand his father's inexplicable renunciation of his theory. The latter endeavors to bring happiness to his wife, but the disparity of their ages make compatibility difficult.

Her inability to respond arouses an intense jealousy in her husband — a jealousy which finds expression against his son, inasmuch as Kate has avowed her love for him. He heaps every calumny upon them. Matters reach such a state that Marchbanks is almost completely unbalanced. At a dinner in which his wife is the only woman present he upbraids her and insults her for making his marriage a mockery. The strain is too severe and he dies, thus leaving Kate and Jack to find happiness together.

CATCH LINES

Eugene O'Brien, who created such a sensation with his first starring picture, "The Perfect Lover," will appear at the ———— in his newest offering, "Sealed Hearts."

Eugene O'Brien, supported by Robert Edeson and Lucille Lee Stewart, will be seen in his newest picture, "Sealed Hearts," next ————. A powerful picture of youth, age, and summertime.

He had always condemned women as detrimental to success. Yet no man can deny the call of the heart. See what happened to the stern financier in "Sealed Hearts."

Youth will be served. She made a marriage of convenience, but found that her heart could not respond. So she turned to a man of her own age. What happened? See "Sealed Hearts."

A tense drama of love and the tragedy that follows in its path if it is not sought in the natural way. Youth versus age presents a tremendous conflict. See "Sealed Hearts."

PROGRAM READER

He had always condemned women as detrimental to success. His was the straight road that led to his work. A dominant figure, his theory appeared so logical that his son was naturally influenced. Yet a strange thing happened. The stern, relentless man fell in love, proving thereby that one cannot fight or resist human instincts. He made a marriage of convenience. He tried to bring his wife happiness, but the disparity of their years prevented. Youth will be served.

How she found a communion of expression with the man she loved, how the misguided figure she married saw the handwriting on the wall — that youth turns to youth, how his anger and jealousy robbed him of his reason, are events which compose a powerful drama. It is a tremendous theme which is presented — a theme which carries a lesson and absorbing entertainment. The picture is "Sealed Hearts"— Eugene O'Brien is the star. At this theatre next ————.

"THE VENGEANCE OF DURAND"
(VITAGRAPH)

Good Suspensive Dramatic Photoplay

A very good dramatic photoplay with suspense maintained throughout that will command keen interest to the very end.

This Rex Beach story centers around the groundless jealously of a husband who suspicions every admirer of his beautiful wife and whose final unjust accusation goads her to suicide. Twelve years later their little daughter had blossomed into a charming young woman and is used by the revengeful father to allure and decoy the suspected lover of her dead mother to destruction.

But they both fall deeply in love instead and in the final denouement when the contemplated vengeance of Durand is thwarted the young lover is proved innocent of any blame in the mother's death. The locale is France and the picture is well mounted and capably directed.

Alice Joyce is very good in the dual role, first of the young mother and later as the charming daughter. And she is supported by a good cast.

Pulling possibilities and pleasing probabilities for respective audiences are — Metropolitan, good puller and very pleasing; Elite, good puller and highly pleasing; Family, good puller and entirely pleasing; Labor, big puller and very pleasing. Length 5 reels.— Released, November 1919.— TOM HAMLIN.

Directed by Tom Terriss.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

The famous Rex Beach story, "The Vengeance of Durand," appears in screen form with Alice Joyce as the star, at the ———— theatre for ——— days, beginning ————.

This Vitagraph picture was scenarized by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester and is described as a picture of great power and keen interest.

Henri Durand was so jealous of his beautiful wife that he hounded her every moment and suspicioned every one of her male admirers. His fears were groundless, as she was a true woman, but his final unjust accusation drove her to suicide.

One of her admirers, who was very unprincipled and envious of the apparent attention another admirer was receiving, had been the cause of the final outburst of temper on the husband's part. He had insinuated that his host's wife was in love with a certain young American.

Twelve years later the father and his motherless daughter met the young American whom the father suspected was the cause of his wife's death. And his charming daughter is persuaded to allure and decoy the young man to his destruction to satisfy Durand s desire for vengeance.

Romance enters and the girl cannot go through her part of the bargain. Her father is furious. Then the denouement occurs, which is declared to be one of the most gripping climaxes seen in a motion picture for a long time.

Alice Joyce has a dual role and appears first as the mother and later as the charming daughter.

PROGRAM READER

The wife was beautiful and had many admirers.

And the husband was unreasonably jealous.

Her manners were gracious and she was a true wife.

But the husband had a terrible temper and suspicioned every one of her many male admirers.

His final accusation goaded her to suicide.

When their twelve-year-old daughter grew into a charming young woman a dozen years later the father urged her to allure and decoy a certain young man to destruction.

He declared that this young man was the direct cause of her mother's death. And he believed it himself. He wanted vengeance.

Romance interfered here and the final climax of the photoplay is remarkable and gripping.

This Vitagraph picture is from the Rex Beach story, "The Vengeance of Durand," and will play this theatre next week. Alice Joyce is the star, in a dual role.

SUGGESTIONS

You have many good names to exploit when you book this picture. Herald it as a Big Vitagraph Special. This company has put out some big specials that will be remembered. Then mention that this is a Rex Beach story, and they all know what a Rex Beach story is. Don't forget to attach the names of the adapters, Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, as this is also a name that is well known and should cut some figure at your box office. Some may think that the title "The Vengeance of Durand" suggests far-fetched melodrama. Therefore it should be billed as a high class society drama that grips and thrills. Don't let them get the impression that this is low brow stuff. Go after the better class of patrons strongest. The title alone should draw the masses.

CATCH LINES

The damage a jealous husband can inflict is terrible to contemplate.

Groundless suspicion and unjust accusations drives one wife to eternity.

"IN HONOR'S WEB"
(VITAGRAPH)

Morey in Conventional Satisfactory Story

TRUST Harry Morey to have a fighting role! His name is synonymous with the word virility. Only this time you don't see him fighting his way out of the depths. It is just as well since he appears to be more adaptable for polished roles than in the primitive sort of things. So you will find him a man of culture, a member of society, whose mission is to protect a woman's honor even though it may cost him his life. A conventional pattern, but one which never fails to satisfy because of the heroic mould of the protagonist.

The fact that the figure finds himself in the shadow of the electric chair and is willing to forfeit his life even though he is innocent may be contrary to the laws of self-preservation, yet one forgets such an instinct by reason that he has temporarily put himself in the hero's place. Such is Harry Morley's ability to get into his characterization. The play develops into a mystery melodrama before it is half over. Which is in its favor since it brings out a goodly measure of suspense. You are not sure who committed the crime, still you are certain it isn't our hero. The evidence is overwhelming that he is guilty since his foolhardy warning to the villain is remembered by the telephone girl. The real murderer sends a bullet through a clock, stopping the hands at the hour that the hero is going to strike. A last minute confession and all is well. And so to the belated romance. A picture which moves forward with compact action and which is well staged and acted. "In Honor's Web!" There's a motion picture title for you.—Length 5 reels.—LAURENCE REID.

PRESS NOTICE-STORY

Harry T. Morey, the virile Vitagraph star, will appear in his latest production, "In Honor's Web," at the ———— theatre on ———— of ———— week. Mr. Morey has had any number of dominant roles, but the role which he interprets here is said to bring out his personality more emphatically than ever. It is a picture that tells how romance came and affected the life of a man mature in years, whose existence for long had been submerged in the deep channels of business.

Mr. Morey takes the role of Frank Powell, a wealthy manufacturer. He falls in love with the beautiful sister of the governor's wife. She, in the meantime, has become enmeshed in the love snares of a social idler. Frank also sees his younger brother, Bert, whom he is sending through college, win the affections of the girl he loves. The manufacturer undertakes to shield Irene from the evil attentions of the parasite. As this situation develops, Rodney Foster, the aforementioned social leper, is found murdered in his apartment. Frank is arrested for the crime. He is unable to present an alibi, since to do that would require him to besmirch the honor of the governor's wife, with whom he had been at the time of the crime. The tragic moment has been established beyond doubt by the bullet-wrecked clock.

In the end the real slayer is compelled to reveal the mystery of the tragedy. This is a strong picture which carries a plethora of tense dramatic scenes. It contains many moments of surprise. And through the action runs a delightful romance. Mr. Morey plays the hero with his accustomed authority and he is supported by a cast that includes such capable players as Gladden James, Agnes Ayres, Myrtle Stedman, George Backus and others.

PROGRAM READER

The power of state's evidence, so often resorted to by craven cowards who seek to escape the penalties of their crimes, comes into dramatic action in Vitagraph's picture, "In Honor's Web," starring that virile actor, Harry Morey. How he falls in love with the sister of the governor's wife, how romance comes to him late in life, how he sends his weakling brother to college, how he is forced to defend the honor of the governor's wife even though his own life is jeopardized, how he seals his lips to shield the woman — these questions are answered dramatically in the picture which comes to this theatre very soon. You will see how the law takes its course, you will see how one crooked deal inevitably leads to others, you will see the desertion of one friend by another in his hour of need. In all, you will see a powerful picture of life and love.

SUGGESTIONS

. aried though the stories are in which Harry Morey appears, there is a certain similarity about them when it comes to the character of the roles he enacts. Each one of them contains the elements of virility, punch, fight — in fact, all sorts of strength. Which leads us to ask, Are you making the most out of h's name that it is synonymous with his sort of role? Of course, he is doing all he can to establish this, but he can't do it all. It's up to you to advertise him as being synonymous with such character elements. Bring out that a Harry Morey picture is a capitalization of the element known as punch. Tell that his is a personality that is virile to the nth degree. You will keep picture-goers watching for his offerings if you adopt this course. You have a number of good situations in this picture which you can emphasize. Tell them it is a picture that carries the utmost in story interest. Feature the other players. Capitalize the title in catch lines and a teaser campaign.

TRIPLED !!!

Three Months Rolled Into One!!!

¶ During the month of October the number of machine orders received at the factory equalled THE TOTAL OF ANY THREE NORMAL MONTHS' ORDERS ! ! !

¶ And to this, we might add that each succeeding month since the first of the year carried with it an increasing number of machine orders.

¶ On many of these orders appeared the names of the country's largest and best known circuits together with the finest and representative theatres.

¶ We feel confident that this tremendous demand for Simplex which is taxing our facilities to almost unbelievable lengths speaks far more eloquently of Simplex popularity than can be told in any other manner.

To Exhibitors

Some years ago, when the so-called "Westerns" of the Silent Drama were hard-riding themselves into oblivion, I ventured the opinion that a rugged, virile, out-o'-doors artist like William S. Hart, backed by he-man stories, would lasso the fading popularity of this style of drama, and bring to the screen a novel characterization.

I had the utmost confidence in my judgment. After engaging the services of Mr. Hart, providing him with the proper scenarios, and surrounding him with strong support, I laid my case before the exhibitors. "Play these pictures and you'll make money," I said. You did—and you made money.

Some time later there came an incessant demand for a new screen type. I had one in mind—the bashful, unassuming, homespun boy, in roles of rural atmosphere. "Too radical an innovation," said a few of my motion picture friends. "Not enough appeal," said others. But I was convinced that the public was interested in character study, that it would learn to love the personality of its delineator, and the cleanness, the wholesomeness, of his stories. So I introduced Charles Ray. And again I laid my case before the exhibitors. "Play these pictures and you'll make money," I said. You did—and you made money.

The "American Girl," Dorothy Dalton, was the next type I introduced to your audiences. Physically beautiful, mentally attractive and possessed of a magnetic personality, she has more than borne out my prediction of success. The same may be said of Enid Bennett, that charming little actress, whose latest pictures, "The Haunted Bedroom," "The Virtuous Thief," "What Every Woman Learns" and "Stepping Out," have proved her versatility and ability.

I could go on and cite numerous other instances where faith in my judgment—and your faith in my judgment—has met with rich reward.

But to get down to brass tacks.

The hour is at hand for the presentation of another winner. You know it. So do I. The pulse of business demands new blood.

You have it in DOUGLAS MAC LEAN and DORIS MAY, a combination salad of youth, love, laughter and romance. The brightest, snappiest, most up-to-the-minutest pair of artists that has ever graced the Silver Screen.

DOUGLAS MAC LEAN, who so popularly supported such well-known stars as Mary Pickford, Maude Adams, Dorothy Dalton, Enid Bennett, Dorothy Gish, Alice Brady, Margaret Anglin, Marjorie Rambeau and others.

DORIS MAY, who was "the girl" with Charles Ray in "His Mother's Boy," "The Hired Man," "Playing the Game," "The Law of the North," "The Girl Dodger," and "Hayfoot, Strawfoot."

I'm offering these stars in up-to-date packages. Youth will be served. That much you'll admit. All right, they have youth. They have ability. They have capable direction. They have the support of unexcelled casts.

Anything else?

Stories!

Scintillating, sparkling stories from the pens of our greatest authors. Comedy dramas, guaranteed to work havoc with your funny bone. Love, romance, laughter—delightful entertainment.

Their first production is "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave," by Mary Roberts Rinehart, baring the emotions of a boy and a girl, the high spirits, the rollicking humor, the reckless daredeviltry of our young hero and heroine, bringing forth a riotously amusing plot—that's what "Twenty-three and a Half Hours' Leave" is—and each succeeding story is going to be as replete with the swish and the dash of Youth and its mockery of the prosaic Grown-up.

I speak for a new era in motion pictures. The serious drama has its place, but when the curtain falls, the lights go up—the fiddlers scrape a merry tune—the flutes coo laughing lilts of love, and comedy rules in her painted empire. It is the hour of Youth—the stress and care fade from the scene. Harlequin and Columbine lightfootedly dance through life, while withered Pantaloon shrinks in the background. Smiling and happy faces greet them—for laughter is better than tears, and thoughtlessness of Youth is more precious than the wisdom of years.

Therefore, it pleases me to introduce DOUGLAS MAC LEAN and DORIS MAY. I assure you they were born to entertain. They are destined to delight. As in the case of Mr. Hart and Mr. Ray, I say to you, "Play these pictures and you'll make money."

Cordially,

Thos. H. Ince

It has always been a source of sincere pride that, in introducing new artists, my selections have been received with cordial and critical appreciation.

During the present season two names will be added to the list of artists appearing under my direct supervision.

In sponsoring

DOUGLAS MACLEAN & DORIS MAY,

I am fully aware of my responsibility to the public and exhibitors, and I accept the hazard of this new venture with complete confidence in my judgment.

These young people possess the rare attributes of youth, charm and intellect; and I am giving them every aid I can command in good direction, skilled support and stories by the best known authors.

How Does Hodkinson Get So Many Big Productions?

This is not a question that we ask the exhibitors of the country. It is the question that hundreds of exhibitors are asking us. The question they ask other exhibitors and the many Hodkinson managers and salesmen.

There was no accident or luck about our getting the Benjamin B. Hampton productions, "The Westerners," the first of the Great Authors' Pictures, or "Desert Gold," the first of the Zane Grey pictures. One year ago Mr. Hampton set out to produce exactly the big pictures that he has produced and that you are now playing with such success.

There was no accident about our getting J. Parker Read Jr.'s wonderful "Sahara." Other distributors with less vision and with a lesser knowledge of the kind of pictures that exhibitors want for profit and for popular approval had turned "Sahara" down. Released in hot July, it has made a fortune for its producer and profits for exhibitors everywhere.

There is no accident about the first Dietrich-Beck production, "The Bandbox," now just released nationally. It is a great melodrama and we knew it would be before the scenario was ever set down on paper.

In the next six weeks we will release four more big productions, for which exhibitors will want to save open time.

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is getting the big productions because the producers who are making them know before they start exactly what they want to make; how they want to make it and what it will do for exhibitors after it is made.

It may interest exhibitors to know that every exhibitor who has played one of our big productions on percentage because he thought our prices too high has seen us take more money out of his house on percentage than we asked as a straight rental—most of the time twice as much.

Out of the Shadow of Loveless Youth

Barnabetta was a creature of environment. By some strange freak of inheritance she possessed all the sweetness and grace of her dead mother. But these qualities were stifled by the selfishness and boorishness of her father and her two impossible brothers.

In Realart's nonpareil photoplay production of Mrs. Fiske's great stage success, the crushed and well nigh broken spirit of the little kitchen drudge grips the sympathy of all. Her dull, drab days are lengthened into weeks and months and years of hopeless toil;

"Erstwhile Susan"

And then —

From the novel by Helen R. Martin

Scenario by Kathryne Stuart

REALART PICTURES

Into The Sunshine of Happy Maidenhood

The MIRACLE is wrought! Two great influences come into Barnabetta's life:

Mother-love for which her child's heart had yearned, and —
Love of a maid for a man.

The barriers which hold her strong, emotional nature in check are swept away and Barnabetta, transformed, stands revealed in the full glory of womanhood. In the interpretation of the story by the lights and shadows are deftly handled. Somber periods of repression and abuse have the poignancy of pathos; while the high lights of humor and sentiment are sparkling and vivid.

Do you remember?

When D. W. GRIFFITH gave the world "THE BIRTH OF A NATION", he set a standard years ahead of his day, a standard that endured to the spring of 1919.

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION," until this time, had remained the one great outstanding film classic, with records unapproached in countless theatres the country over.

Then came "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" and with it a new standard, new records, undreamed-of achievements in box-offices everywhere.

Do you remember what "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" did in your town — perhaps in your very theatre? Do you know that "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" is as far in advance of "THE BIRTH OF A NATION" as that master-film was in advance of its day?

The press of the country, the leaders of thought and the critics of art and drama, the great public and your fellow exhibitors so proclaim it.

Book "BROKEN BLOSSOMS" for your theatre now. Don't wait for our sales manager to call on you. CONFESSION FULL OF THRILLS

Henry Wichall, who plays the chief character of this unusual and powerful screen drama, gives a wonderful characterization of the young priest, whose sublime faith is ultimately successful. He is surrounded by a company of excellent players, including Margaret Landis, William Clifford, Irene Aldwyn and Francis McDonald.

These capable players have collaborated with Mr. Reid, and have produced a photodrama of compelling forcefulness. There is no propaganda in the story, but entertainment which keeps the audience alternately laughing and weeping, and always interesting. It is superlative entertainment, which plays upon all the finer emotions, with a story which holds the attention of men, women and children alike. The photography is particularly fine.

"The Confession" Wins Warm Commendation of Large Audience

PICTURE RANKS AS A MASTERPIECE

"The Confession," played for the first time in Boston last night in Symphony Hall before a large audience, can, without hesitation, be placed alongside "The Birth of a Nation," "Broken Blossoms" and other film masterpieces shown in this city during the past few years. It is a soul-stirring picture, with actors who do not fail, sentiment that rings true, and a plot unique.

The Boston Traveler

"THE CONFESSION" POWERFUL FILM

Before a large and enthusiastic audience, the motion picture drama, "The Confession," had its first presentation in Boston last night at Symphony Hall. Hal Reid's play contains some of the most highly dramatic situations ever portrayed upon the screen and, coupled with the masterful acting of Henry B. Walthall as Father Bartley, the scenes

The Boston Post

"THE CONFESSION"

Laughter chased tears, and a tense expectation held a large audience fascinated at the first public performance of "The Confession," the film version of Hal Reid's love lyric of a sublime faith on trial, which was presented at Symphony Hall last evening by George H. Davis. Only a veteran playwright with years of practical experience behind him could have written such a drama as "The Confession," in which every human emotion is pleasingly played upon in a photoplay which from the first scene to the last keeps the audience in constant attention. Only with the last scene, where all ends happily, does the tension relax.

Boston Evening Record

"The Confession" Is Beautiful Song of Devotion

Plenty of action amid beautiful scenes in the Canadian Northwest would easily have been melo-dramatic but for the clever direction and action of the cast.

All in all, "The Confession" carries with it a beautiful love story and a moral.

"The Confession" Film Shown in Symphony Hall

The author has skillfully wrought into his tale a charming love story, and a background on which humor and pathos of a telling sort are bountifully painted.

A Great 'Buy'

J.A. Berst UNITED PICTURE THEATRES OF AMERICA, INC. President.

A man who had earned every dollar he possessed and was willing to gamble his last penny on his own ideas is the story of an American boy who in his native land had achieved no little fame as a director of good pictures. Morton Thornton is his name. He had an innate love and respect for truth even in pictures He believed that realism was necessary in a photoplay.

He knew that romance and passion are most alluring when associated with primitive man and woman.

He knew his public and that the great mass of humanity have for a thousand years been interested in gypsy life. Among this primitive race, living in the 20th Century none of their men or women ever bent their knee to convention. Life and passion with them were untrammeled and ran as wild as does water in mountain brook.

He played his all on public interest and thus he evolved ROMANY "Where Love Runs Wild."

EVE IN EXILE

COSMO HAMILTON'S LATEST AND GREATEST WORK

Theatres in New York and Chicago have played "Scandal" continuously for more than half a year. Hundreds of thousands of people paid their money at the box office to see it. Other millions are familiar with Cosmo Hamilton stories. His name is known all over the country. People are interested in reading Cosmo Hamilton stories—in seeing Cosmo Hamilton plays and pictures. American Film Company now is offering his latest and greatest work—"Eve in Exile"—as a special super-feature attraction.

Enacting the story is the greatest cast that has yet been assembled to produce a famous story. Included in it are CHARLOTTE WALKER, Thomas Santschi, Wheeler Oakman, Melbourne MacDowell, George Periolat, Martha Mattox, Violet Palmer, Harvey Clark, Perry Banks and a dozen more favorites of screenland. Lois Zellner, famous for her scenario work, prepared the working script. Burton George superbly directed it. It is a perfect production in every respect. Unquestionably it will create new box-office records wherever it is shown. Many theatres will play it continuously for one, two and three weeks. Are YOU going to profit by this opportunity? ACCOMPLISHMENT

THE production and presentation of such a picture as "Eyes Of Youth" with Clara Kimball Young is an answer to the world's call for something bigger, something finer. The original stage play charmed hundreds of thousands of people not alone in New York where it ran for over a year but in all the representative cities throughout the country. The screen version surpasses the stage play in every detail, the elaborateness of the scenes and sumptuousness of production being in strict accordance with the rare beauties of the story.

THE bigness of "Eyes Of Youth" is shown where exhibitors want it to show—on the screen. Proof of its intense dramatic strength, and its ability to play capacity on long runs may be obtained from congratulatory telegrams of which the following is but a sample. "Los Angeles, Ca., Nov. 3rd. 'Eyes Of Youth' opened here to biggest business history Kinema, beating 'Miracle Man' in point of paid admissions and total of cash receipts." Tho' not yet even released, more than eight hundred engagements have been booked. Your nearest Equity Franchise Holder will send you the complete facts upon request.

"The Vengeance of Durand"

Directed by Tom Terriss

In "The Vengeance of Durand," the current feature at the B. S. Moss Broadway Theatre, Miss Joyce discloses a command of the art of pantomime and of the technique of the motion picture that impresses itself the more forcibly because the picture itself is a particularly fine example of its class.

In story, direction and photography, "The Vengeance of Durand" reflects credit upon the intelligence and skill of Vitagraph's personnel. It was adapted for the screen by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester from the novel by Rex Beach.

It is a pleasure to recommend this picture, not only to the confirmed film fan but to the casual photoplaygoer as well.

This Is A Word of Warning

Uttered by men who know the inside of the gigantic fight now going on under the surface for control of this industry. We advise our fellow exhibitors to sit tight and watch. The storm will break in two or three months and when it does exhibitors will need to be prepared for it.

You Are Safe for the Present—So Long As You Make No False Alliances

First National was organized to protect its members. Organized cooperation has placed every one of us in a position of absolute independence. The First National is a success. It has accomplished all we expected it to do. The producing-distributing trust that two years ago threatened our very business existence is no longer in a dominating position. Exhibitors are no longer at the mercy of any one distributor. Directors or producing stars of genius can now find a ready market for their product and are free to produce such stories as suit their talents. First National has revolutionized the industry by throwing the door wide open for all stars, directors and individual producers. The result has been that more good independently produced productions have been made in the past year than ever before.

Now A New and Greater Danger Threatens

But we are aware of it—are watching it—and are at present engaged on plans to defeat it.

We Pledge Ourselves to Bring About

Complete protection and supply for the individual exhibitor. We hold that we will more surely protect ourselves by protecting the unorganized exhibitor who hitherto has been at the mercy of the producing-distributing combination. No exhibitor is now so powerful that our plan will not make his position infinitely more secure. No exhibitor is too small to avail himself of the protection which will make him as independent as the most powerful.

Greater Protection and Support of the Individual Producer

We hold that the bona fide producer and the bona fide exhibitor have an equal community of interest in this industry. Our new plan will afford the most equitable working bases yet devised between producer and exhibitor.

r Advice To Exhibitors Is

DON'T be bluffed into selling your theatre.

Our plan will make your theatre worth twice as much as you can get now. WHY SELL? Our plan will make every individual theatre owner an independent and free man.

DON'T sign long term contracts for film service.

Our plan will revolutionize the distribution of costs of production and make for absolute equity in rentals.

HAS THE QUALITY CIRCULATION OF THE TRADE

"The Exhibitors' Medium of Communication"

Volume 20. No. 22 November 22, 1919

Pictures and Theatres

SOME big developments are taking place in this business. We have had, within the past few weeks, the announcements of several organizations aiming at cooperative buying. We will shortly have more.

A new National Circuit of theatres is to be announced: a new national organization of exhibitors is under way; several other announcements, from prominent concerns, are hinted at.

In the meanwhile the chaining and circuiting and producers' acquisition of theatres locally and nationally goes speedily on.

What are we facing?

Shall we have, in the end, several large groups of theatres? Is that the inevitable destiny of this business? Are we to parallel the circuits of the legitimate and vaudeville fields?

And then what?

The last is the important question; and many exhibitors and makers of pictures are asking it of themselves.

We all know that the business pot is boiling — furiously.

But what is to come out of the brew?

The chaining up of theatres, no matter how it is done or by whom, locally or nationally, is of course, the organization of picture buying power.

A producer may do it to assure an outlet for his pictures — an adequate and adequately priced outlet.

Exhibitors may do it to assure a supply of pictures — an adequate and adequately priced supply.

So we get down very quickly to the broad and simple basis.

There's a tug-of-war on between the makers and exhibitors of pictures.

It's a tug-of-war between pictures and theatres.

Pictures versus theatres. That is the essence of it.

It's the same old struggle that started with the business itself. There is nothing new about it.

Pictures are nothing without theatres; theatres are nothing without pictures.

If one man owned all the theatres he could control all production of pictures: but if all producers of pictures refused to meet his terms he would have to close up his theatres.

We will eliminate the absurd thought of one man owning all the theatres and having the ability to furnish them with pictures the public wants.

That is pure imagination, and, in fact there is too much imagination about the entire situation.

Fear follows imagination: both are equally baseless.

What is needed today is business sanity — a hard-headed consideration of the practical things involved.

A good picture is a power; a good theatre is a power. Both will make money. But, in order to do so, neither one is forced to control the other. And that's one good, sensible reason why they won't.

Good pictures will always get good theatres: and good theatres will always get good pictures. Has this ever failed to be true, in the past? Will it ever fail? No.

What we are approaching, if anything at all definite, is simply the eventual end of one of those cycles which have been strikingly characteristic of this interesting business from its very beginning.

Those who have watched its progress intelligently will recall that every so often the market tends to close up. And just so surely as it does it immediately thereafter breaks wide open again.

You can never control the production of pictures because you cannot control brains. The mere fact that you control the outlet for pictures won't suffice, for you won't give the public the benefit of enthusiastic, individual creative effort and then when the public quits, as it will, the whole business quits. Creative brains are not confined within the present business, by a very long shot.

The one factor to control is the public. If you can't control the public it is useless, it is calamitous to control the theatres, or the pictures.

But the public is a free agent in its choice of amusement. You can only control its fancy with good pictures and good theatres.

Consequently the man who runs a good theatre need never fear control from the top. That's unnatural. The menace won't last long. He's got his own control.

In chain theatre and cooperative propositions that do not mean control from the top there is nothing to fear. Of any others he need have no fear.

For the public has the say-so. That's the only say-so. The public alone directs this business.

That directive force, as with every business, is the world-old law of supply and demand — the supply of pictures to meet the public demand.

There are no short cuts except disastrous ones. A monkey-wrench thrown into the machinery gets the worst of it.

The thing to remember is the public — where all the money comes from.

The public wants good theatres and good pictures, good enough for the masses and the classes and low priced enough for all.

If we in this business don't realize this and meet this wonderful opportunity fully and sanely there are plenty of outside brains that will.

So far as the exhibitor is concerned — any exhibitor anywhere — he need not worry. There's one thing certain as daylight: He'll always get, as he always has had, enough good pictures.

And the maker of good pictures will always, as ever before, have a good market.

Wm. A. Johnston

Zittel Quits International.

It was announced as Motion Picture News went to press that C. F. Zittel (Zit) has resigned from International Film.

No details were given, and an interviewer was unable to locate Mr. Zittel.

It Might Have Been Worse

That exhibitors throughout the country are truly appreciative of the efforts of Motion Picure News to give them a maximum amount of service, on schedule time, at a moment when even a minimum would be acceptable and welcome, is evidenced by the many letters of congratulations received daily.

And a persistent line in these letters is: "We miss the large-size page and trust the printers' tangle will soon be straightened out so we can get back to it."

Motion Picture News, as well as our advertisers and readers, is likewise concerned about the large-size page, inasmuch as its relation to service is figured. We know its advantages to the advertisers, and its great help to the exhibitor. And we are not content to give only 50 per cent service when 100 per cent service is the need.

Truly, there is consolation for all in the prospects of an early settlement of the printing difficulties. Surmounting these difficulties thus far, in behalf of the producer and exhibitor, has given us great satisfaction.

Last week, for instance, there were 42 pages of usable service in our columns, handicapped as the trade press is by printing conditions, and there were 100 other pages of news, ads and interesting and valuable facts.

You can't compare others with that.

C. E. Tandy (center) and Carl Anderson (right) at Tandy oil well No. 1 in Texas. The photographer caught this on October 1, 1919.

Dealing In Personalities

NO, the picture that decorates the opposite (but should be on this) page this week was not taken on a studio set. Nor is it an exterior shot by a motion picture camera.

We realize the fact that many of you recognize C. E. Tandy and Carl Anderson. And that you can't place either of these film gentlemen in anything but a picture atmosphere.

But this picture is the real thing — a snapshot taken in the Rockburnett oil fields. Carl Anderson is vacationing around the tempestuous oil fields while Bre'er Tandy is actively playing the part of an oil man as head of the Tandy Oil Corporation.

When Bre'er Tandy sold out his interests in the Tandy and Lynch organization he left this well known picture game flat on its back and journeyed to the oil fields. And he must have known where he was going to — for the Mother Earth shown in the photo is now delivering something like three thousand barrels of oil a day to the hand and treasury of the Tandy Oil Corporation.

Which, our Secret Service man tells us, is good news to a number of New York film men. We do know that Charlie Schwerin holds some of the precious Tandy certificates. And we are told that other prominent film men about the Broadway district are beginning to collect dividends on Tandy oil.

Showing that a good man can get the coin in the picture game — or out of it.

"PERSONALITIES" reached the limit of its appointed space last week before we had the opportunity to tell you how glad we were to see Arthur James back in town. And now, after journeying to the Coast and back, Arthur is wondering when the present epidemic of strikes will let up long enough to permit a journey to Europe.

While on the subject of epidemics, we think Arthur will have to remain around town long enough to call in a physician on this epidemic of Guenther-style lettering. It's getting so that we have to read every single word of the ads to be sure of the identity of the company distributing a picture.

We'll wager that right now Arthur is cooking up something new in style — and something that'll make us all say "Great!" Which reminds us that we can say that same word a couple of times for the Fox ad we saw in the Saturday Evening Post last week with its effective picture of a theatre interior and the use of the white space of the screen for a sure-fire eye-catcher.

JUST to get all these Fox matters off our system at the one time we have to chronicle the fact that we encountered Harry MacDonald of the Fox theatre staff on Broadway this week. Which was something of a shock, for Harry, as the trusted agent of John Zanft and W. F. had been consigned to Denver when Fox bought four houses in that city.

And Denver — take it from Harry — is a ter-ri-bul long way from New York.

But MacDonald was kept on the job just long enough to get the wheels in running order and now he is journeying off to other parts of the country. Bre'er Zanft probably shipped him off because he thought the name of "MacDonald" wouldn't help any in the reception to the Prince of Wales at the Academy which John's broad shoulders have been elected to handle.

JOHN H. TAYLOR, is another film man we met on Broadway this week though we had thought that he was a few thousand miles away on the other side of the pond. The meeting brought us some news.

For it is no longer "John H. Taylor, of Inter-Ocean, London." Mr. Taylor is no longer associated with Inter-Ocean, and from the mysterious manner in which he hints of his deals on this side of the water it may be possible that we will omit the "London" from his description.

While on the subject of international characters we can also chronicle the fact that Marcel Mohrange, of Argentine, was a visitor to the News office this week. Mr. Mohrange has renewed his Vitagraph contract for three years — a safe indication of Vitagraph popularity in Argentine. The new contract assures Mr. Mohrange of an annual supply approximating fifty-two features, twenty-six Larry Semon comedies, four serials, and an indefinite number of specials. If you want to hear an enthusiastic man get Mohrange to talk of Vitagraph serials.

Gosh we haven't finished with our news of importers and exporters yet. Here's a line to state the news that Reginald Warde, the original mystery man of the game, departed for Los Angeles last Saturday.

Let us finish our Export Section with an ad:

LOST — STRAY ED — OR —

One hat — initials D. P. H. in crown. Cost a few bucks but is wanted particularly for its sentimental value, because its purchase almost caused me to lose a boat back to this side of the pond. Yes, and the same London hatter who made it makes the toppers of King George and the Prince of Wales. Hat was last seen at the Hotel Astor on Tuesday evening. Answers to name — "Fedora." Any information will be appreciated by David P. Howells. 729 Seventh Ave., N. Y. City.

EDDIE MACMANUS packed up his camera this week and said "Finis" to the first stage of the making of his latest special to follow "The Lost Battalion." By this time he is probably deep in the throes of the cutting and editing job. For Eddie's sake we hope he finishes the job before the new Eastman rates on film go into effect, which we understand is about the first of the year.

Yes, we have slipped you a bit of news in that last line. Eastman has announced a raise in raw stock prices. We'd hesitate before saying that George Eastman had heard about some of the rental prices the exhibitors were paying this year and decided to get his share. In fact, we'd rather not say it.

Brunet Promises Broader Pathe Aims

Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange Follows Up Announcement of Formation of Associated Exhibitors With Hints on Future

IN the wake of the announcement of the formation of the American Exhibitors, Inc., formed on behalf of a number of exhibitors, and backed by Pathe, Paul Brunet, Vice President and General Manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., has issued a statement embracing the progress recently made and giving a hint of the big plans now in the making for Pathe's future.

As outlined in last week's NEWS Associated Exhibitors contemplates creation of thirty-two regional districts for motion picture exploitation, with a franchise granted a pivotal city in each district. Pathe Exchange will be the distributing organization, Charles Pathe and several associates underwriting the activities of the association.

Broad Activities in View

Mr. Brunet's statement follows:

"With the best business months of the year now in the immediate future, it is fitting and proper to make a mental inventory of our organization and our product; to weight the future in the light of the present; to judge what we shall do from what we should do with our product and our personnel; and to briefly hint at our future plans.

"The formation of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., just announced, is the most impressive development of the year, in which Pathe Exchange, Inc., will enter into broader activities not only in America but throughout the entire world. The strength and effectiveness of the exhibitors organization, behind which Pathe stands, fully will be appreciated when, later on, will be announced the identities of the regional units and the arrangements that have been made for bigger and better pictures.

"Our exchange system has been enlarged, not only in order to better serve our customers but to better develop the business possibilities of certain territories covering a vast area. New exchanges have been installed in Little Rock, Ark., and Portland, Ore. We are now contemplating a new sub-office in Montana. this to be under the control of our Spokane exchange.

"Just as our force in the field and the number of our offices have been increased, so also has our force in the Home Office been enlarged. The system of having a separate feature department has fully justified itself. Our feature business has grown tremendously.

"Likewise the departmentalization of serials and short subjects cannot fail to be of great value in the realization of all the business possibilities in the short length films. Pathe has long enjoyed an enviable reputation in this field and has unquestionably been the controlling factor in it. Every competitor has followed the path which Pathe has blazed in serials, news weeklies and educational subjects, but we have been able to keep a long distance ahead of them. With separate departments devoted to these subjects we shall not fail to retain our supremacy. Furthermore, with Mr. Fred C. Quimby, Director of Exchanges, relieved of much of the detail with which he was formerly hampered, he is now enabled to devote his time to the larger problems of the Sales and Exchange organization.

Paul Brunet

"Coincident with the enlargement of the sales force has come the enlargement in the co-related Advertising, Publicity, Serial Publicity. Art and Exploitation Departments. The personnel has been increased with thoroughly competent men. As a result our sales force is being most tremendously helped with advertising and publicity that makes it much easier to get business from exhibitors and that educates the public to look for, ask for and see Pathe pictures.

"As for advertising, the fine two color inserts in the trade papers, the striking copy in the "fun magazines" and the Saturday Evening Post and the newspaper copy now running on "Bound and Gagged" are bringing much favorable comment. As for publicity, it is difficult to pick up a newspaper or magazine without finding Pathe general or serial publicity. As for posters, we have the best in the business.

"Just as we have increased our organization in the Home Office and improved it, so also have we improved our product. Looking over my program book for the coming months I find Hobart Henley's "A Gay Old Dog" with John Cumberland. Surely here we have a picture to be enthusiastic about, one as good as any produced this year; Blanche Sweet in "A Woman of Pleasure" a real box office star in a striking picture; Dolores Cassinelli in "The Right to Lie," a very powerful picture, the best we have yet had with Miss Cassinelli; The Blackton production "Dawn" with Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon; Frank Keenan in "Brothers Divided," a picture, which our film committee tells me they believe to be beyond doubt the greatest picture that Mr. Keenan ever starred in; William Desmond and Mary Thurman in "The Prince and Betty," a picture over which we are all enthusiastic. Mae Murray in "The A. B. C. of Love," a story with another big star; another Blackton production, the best yet "My Husband's Other Wife," with Miss Breamer; Blanche Sweet in Bret Harte's great story, "Fighting Cressy," a certain success.

"I find "The Black Secret," Pearl White's best serial; "Bound and Gagged," a serial that strikes a new note and demonstrates the fact that in George Seitz we have not only a great director but a great star; Ruth Roland in "The Adventures of Ruth," a title that ties up to a star, who in many sections outdraws other serial stars .

"I find the unequalled Pathe News; the very attractive Pathe Review; the unique and popular Topics of the Day; the Rolin Comedies with 'Snub' Pollard, fine, every one of them; and, finally, the greatest comedian of the day in the greatest comedies of the day—Harold Lloyd in the new Special Two Reel Comedies.

"The growth of Pathe business has been so rapid and abundant that our present facilities are taxed to the utmost. The most important step to meet our new mechanical demands will be the erection of the large factory at Long Island City, ground for which has already been purchased. The Bound Brook factory will be completely remodeled and improved. We will thus be enabled to handle properly the much larger business that we confidently anticipated.

"The Bonus System which we have adopted has proven its worth. It is a barrier against trouble. It proved to our employees that they share in the profits of the business and are a part of the business; and that the importance of their aid is fully recognized. While other companies are continually being stirred up by resignations and shiftings about, Pathe preserves its family spirit, its personnel, and its invincible morale. We propose to look to the interests of those whom we have associated with us, provided they have proven themselves worthy of the association.

"It is a matter of gratification with us at this time, when our busines is going forward with giant strides, and, when our product may be truly said to be admirable, that Mr. Charles Pathe, pioneer of the film business, creator of many things that have been adapted by the entire business, and truly a world figure. is with us. Mr. Pathe is very actively engaged in the perfecting of plans that will mean much to this organization. Pathe Exchange, Inc., now a great American business.

S. A. Lynch Absorbs Wells' Holdings

Largest Theatrical Deal Ever Effected in Atlanta Results in Lynch Enterprises Acquiring Many Properties Valued at Several Hundred Thousand Dollars

WHAT is considered the largest theatrical deal effected in Atlanta and probably in the South, was announced last week by the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., which has purchased the main theaters and holdings of Jake Wells, one of the best known chain theater owners and operators in the South, in Atlanta, Augusta, Savannah, Georgia and Knoxville, Tenn. The exact terms of the transfer of ownership were not announced, but it was given out that it involved the paying of "several hundred thousand dollars" to a statement attributed by a correspondent to Mr. Wells.

Holdings Acquired

In Atlanta this deal gives to the Lynch Enterprises the Lyric estate and operating company and the Keith vaudeville franchise, at which theater the Keith vaudeville is playing; the Forsyth, Strand, Vaudette, and Rialto theaters, presenting high class moving picture attractions.

The houses affected outside of Atlanta are the Bijou at Knoxville; the Wells and the Grand and the Grand real estate in Augusta and the Wells interest in the real estate and the operating company of the Bijou theater in Savannah.

From the offices of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., in the Hurt Bldg., it is announced that no change of policy in the conduct of the theaters purchased will take place — at least not for the present. In the exchange and film circles it has been noised about for some time that a big deal in which the majority of the Atlanta cinema theaters would be affected was on foot and in a general way is was known that Mr. Wells and the Lynch interests were negotiating, but not until the newspapers announced it with scare-headline stories was the deal officially known to have been made.

Much interest, as the result of the stories, has been created in the public mind of Atlanta in both parties of the deal. The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., while well known in trade for several years, has been little known in Atlanta. A deal of this magnitude, however, caused the Atlanta papers to busy themselves and print detailed stories of the activities of this large holding company, including, especially, the history of Mr. Lynch's phenominal career. They tell of the large recent acquisition of theaters in Texas and the other activities of the firm in all parts of the South, giving the firm credit for bringing many "dead ones" to life and prosperity after it had taken them over. The financial connections of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, Inc., were also given. The Famous Players–Lasky Corporation, are said to be "back of Lynch" or associated with him and banking house of Kuhn, Loeb and Company, is backing the Famous Players–Lasky Corporation. This means, according to the local papers, "many millions to play with."

Jake Wells' name has been foremost in theatrical circles in Atlanta for twenty years and his retirement from the local field will be regretted, as he is well liked in Atlanta, where he is known as a "big fellow" financially, mentally and physically. He brought to Atlanta its first stock company, some twenty years ago, from which company several large stars of the stage and screen sprang. He brought the first vaudeville program of importance to Atlanta and later when the demand for more and better moving picture shows became so apparent he stepped into that field in a big way, not only here but in other important cities of the South. It is said that he will devote himself chiefly to the operation of his twenty theaters in Richmond, his home and in Norfolk.

Champion Signs

Benny Leonard to Make a Film for Hall Distribution

FRANK G. HALL and Ascher Enterprises, Inc., of which Mr. Hall, Sidney Ascher and Joseph A. Jacobs are executive heads, have signed Benny Leonard, lightweight boxing champion of the world, to appear in a 15-episode serial, to be produced and distributed throughout the world by Mr. Hall, the contract involving more than a million dollars, $100,000 of which amount Mr. Leonard received as his initial payment for the fulfillment of the picture.

The contract entered into between Ascher Enterprises, Inc., Frank G. Hall, Benny Leonard and Billy Gibson, Leonard's manager, was closed November 11, and Mr. Hall announces that production work on the serial in which Mr. Leonard is to be featured, will be commenced immediately.

Linick-Jacoby Enterprises Take Over Another Playhouse

The State-Congress is the latest addition to Chicago's downtown theatres. It opens Saturday, November 22, with a policy which calls for eight acts of vaudeville and a feature picture with change of bill twice a week. It will be operated under the direction of Linick-Jacoby Enterprises, operators of the Ziegfeld Theatre, one of Chicago's highest class first-run motion picture houses.

Motion Picture Advertisers Meet and Discuss Live Subjects

Superfluity of small town screen censorship, live opportunities that exist to-day in far China for educational film, and uniformity of page size of motion picture trade papers, were subjects discussed by speakers at the monthly "open" luncheon of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers on Friday last at the Cafe Boulevard, New York.

Present as guests of the advertisers were: H. D. McGuire, of the National Board of Review, Prof. C. H. Robertson of the Lecture Department, Y. M. C. A. of China, and Messrs. Lesley Mason, Robert Welsh, J. Beecroft, J. Dannenberg and George Blaisdell of the Exhibitors' Trade Review, M. P. News, Exhibitors' Herald, Widd's Daily and the M. P. World, respectively.

Mr. McGuire, who was the first of the speakers to address the gathering, spoke of the tendency in smaller towns to set up amateur groups of unskilled censors, and invited the co-operation of the publicity members of the Association in assisting the National Board of Censors to discourage through the medium of newspapers and other editorial channels the irresponsible setting up of such local bodies.

"Near" Sunday Picture Shows Promoted by Minister

Dr. G. F. Salton, a clergyman of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has evolved a plan to drive "dull Sundays" away from Winnipeg, according to recent announcements made by him through various channels. He also declares that he has made a successful experiment with the 80,000 Winnipeggers who voted to make Sunday a dull day. He is accomplishing results, in other words, by conducting concerts at the Dominion Theatre twice each Sunday which resemble moving picture performances very closely.

Regular Sunday moving picture shows are not permitted in Winnipeg, but Dr. Salton and others have been conducting the "concerts" without difficulty. His object in conducting these events is that the people may have some place to go on Sundays where the atmosphere is inspiring.

Zierler Handles Clara K. Young Pictures in New York

Sam Zierler, formerly manager of the Big "U" Film Exchange, has resigned that position to become President of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, distributors of the Clara Kimball Young pictures for the State of New York.

Mr. Zierler has been associated with the Big "U" organization in one capacity or another for several years, and the severance of his old business relationships caused somewhat of a stir in film circles.

It is Mr. Zierler's intention to throw every ounce of his personality into the distribution of the Clara Kimball Young pictures, and contracts have already been negotiated for the finest houses in the City and State of New York.

PLANS OF DIRECTORS ASSOCIATION

THE first official announcement of the plans of the association in which the names of Directors Thomas Ince, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur, George Lane Tucker, Allen Dwan and Mack Sennett are coupled, came November 11 with wired confirmation of the affiliation by Ince and Neilan.

Sept. 1, 1920 is the date on which the association becomes effective. The agreement signed provides for the establishment of a distributing organization, and for the parties to the contract to work cooperatively. Releases will be principally of the all-star cast variety.

The official announcement from the Coast does not mention George Lane Tucker's name in the combination.

Plans For National Theatres

Nathan Ascher Elected a Vice President; Harry Rapf Names Several Stories Obtained

ANNOUNCEMENT of the election of Nathan Ascher, general manager of the Ascher Brothers Amusement Enterprises, Chicago, as one of the vice-presidents and directors of National Picture Theatres, Inc., came from the Selznick offices last week.

This appointment is the forerunner of others in the new co-operative company recently incorporated and organized, names which will include scores of the nation's most representative motion picture men are promised.

Through Mr. Ascher's appointment, the financial resources and support of the big Amusement Corporation will be solidly behind the new movement. As a vice-president and director of National Picture Theatres, Inc., Mr. Ascher will be active in the management of the organization's business affairs and in shaping its sales plans.

Harry Rapf, in charge of production at the Selznick West Coast Studios, announces the purchase of several famous stories which are now being picturized and enacted by all-star casts for release through Select Pictures Corporation to National Picture Theatres, Inc., the new exhibitor co-operative organization founded and incorporated by Lewis J. Selznick.

Heading the list of productions now in the course of making under the personal supervision of Harry Rapf are "Just A Wife," one of the highly successful David Belasco stage hits and "Blind Youth," in which Lou Tellegen scored his most decisive dramatic triumph during its extraordinary run as a stage play.

Announcement is also made that the production schedule arranged by National Picture Theatres, Inc., calls for one release every two weeks, the first of which is "Just A Wife," definitely scheduled for nation-wide distribution on January 1st.

The screen rights to "Just A Wife" and "Blind Youth" were secured against strong competition and the purchase prices are said to be among the highest ever paid for literary material for screen use.

"Just A Wife," from the pen of Eugene Walter, is a powerful drama of domestic life and was chosen for the initial offering to National Picture Theatres, Inc., because of its unique dramatic qualities and unusual popularity as a stage success.

"Blind Youth" was written jointly by Lou Tellegen and Willard Mack. The screen version was also adapted by the authors.

The production schedule of one release every two weeks is calculated to provide National Picture Theatres, Inc., with sufficient material with which to advance the exhibitors' own interests and maintain a high standard of presentation. The first two productions, "Just A Wife" and "Blind Youth" are typical, it is said, of the quality and calibre to distinguish all productions to be made in the Selznick West Coast studios for release to National Picture Theatres, Inc.

The productional plans arranged by Mr. Rapf guard against any sacrifice of quality and detail to reach the quantity standards which have proved detrimental to the best interests of exhibitors and their public. The schedule of one release every two weeks is in accordance with the wishes of showmen and provides ample time for the making of pictures that will excel in every point of production value and entertainment merit.

Opening Gun on Great Selznick Ad. Campaign Soon

The opening fire in Selznick Pictures new national advertising drive will begin in a tremendously big way Thanksgiving week, when a country-wide barrage of double-page displays in color will be spread before the eyes of more than fifty million readers. These advertisements will appear in the Saturday Evening Post, Ladies' Home Journal, Pictorial Review, Red Book, Country Gentleman, Photoplay Magazine, Green Book, Motion Picture Magazine, Picture Play Magazine, Blue Book, American Legion Weekly, and many others. In most of these publications advertisements have already appeared regularly, and it is announced that with the simultaneous appearance of the full list, full page advertisements will appear regularly.

The foregoing list is supplemented by advertising media which includes the programs of every theatre in New York City, electric signs in the Times Square district and elsewhere, and painted signs and twenty-four sheet stands throughout the country.

The campaign instituted and already put into effect for the further popularization of Selznick Pictures is said to be the biggest ever executed in the motion picture industry.

WESTERN WAFTINGS

Arthur Brick is a new salesman for the Triangle Film Corporation Exchange in Los Angeles, having begun his work for this concern this week. He will cover California, Arizona and New Mexico, and Mr. Brick is at present centering his interest in booking the forthcoming reissues of the Triangle. The first to be released is that titled "The Weaker Sex," written by Monte M. Katterjohn, directed by Thomas H. Ince, and having Charles Ray, Louise Glaum, Dorothy Dalton, Margaret Thompson, Robert McKim and J. Barney Sherry in the cast.

W. S. Rand, sales manager of the United Artists Corporation Exchange in Los Angeles, is planning to leave about November 12th on a business trip to Salt Lake, Ogden and other Utah towns.

Jack Scott, late assistant manager for the Fox Exchange in San Francisco and previous to that time connected with Pathe in Denver, arrived in Los Angeles the week of November 3rd, accompanied by Mrs. Scott.

Rex Midgley, owner of the American Theatre at Oakland, Calif., arrived in Los Angeles during the week of November 3rd to pay his many friends a visit. During his visit he is being entertained by Walter S. Rand, sales manager of the United Artists local exchange.

"When The Clouds Roll By," second release of Douglas Fairbanks on the United Artists program, has been booked at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, about December 29th.

E. D. and H. E. Yost have sold their theatre at Orange, Calif., and opened the Yost Theatre at Santa Ana on November 11th.

"The Hushed Hour," starring Blanche Sweet and released by Equity Pictures Corporation, has been booked by Manager Herman Bosley to show at an early date at his Alhambra Theatre, Los Angeles.

Manager Arthur B. Lamb, of the Los Angeles Metro Exchange, announces that his exchange won seventh place in the national contest of the greatest proportionate increase in sales conducted by Metro Pictures Corporation.

Manager Benjamin of the Los Angeles All Star Feature Distributors announces the purchase by Sol L. Lesser of the Jack Sherrill production "Once To Every Man," and the Tom Mix Fox five reel subject "The Heart of Texas Ryan."

Charles Ray, now working in "Watch Out William" under the direction of Jerome Storm, will have a supporting cast which includes Winifred Westover as leading woman, Betty Schade, Dick Rush, Donald MacDonald, George Hernandez and Lew Morrison.

Walter Greene Out of Famous-Lasky

Vice President in Charge of Distribution and One of the Organizers of Faramount Resigns and Goes to Coast to Put Plans in Effect Benefiting Exhibitors

WALTER E. Greene, vice president, director and managing director of the department of distribution of the Famous Players–Lasky Corporation resigned from that organization this week and left for California on Tuesday to complete his plans for the carrying into effect a number of plans he has perfected for the benefit of exhibitors during the past year. Announcement of his plans will be made by Mr. Greene upon his return from the coast. Mr. Greene is one of the best known men in the motion picture industry and is considered one of the pioneers who has created many benefits for the advancement of the business.

Started in Small Way

Nearly twenty years ago he became interested in motion pictures when he took a traveling outfit through the New England States, the show consisting of a couple of single and two-reelers. Success marked the first venture so he established the first exchange in Boston under the name of the W. E. Greene Film Exchange, which was later incorporated. Upon the appearance of the first five-reel feature produced by the Famous Players Film Company he secured the franchise for the distribution of these productions for the New England district, at which time he became associated with Hiram Abrams, former president of Paramount Pictures Corporation and recently the organizer of the "Big Four."

Mr. Greene was one of the organizers of the Paramount Pictures Corporation and during the early years of that organization he was the originator of the Paramount News Weekly, which was later the Paramount Pictograph. With the advancement of the business, Mr. Greene became the organizer of the Artcraft Pictures Corporation when Mary Pickford branched forth to produce bigger and better pictures. With the consolidation of Famous Players, Lasky, Morosco, Pallas Pictures and Paramount, Mr. Greene was made director of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and later elected to the vice-presidency, at which time he became the managing director of the department of distribution, which position he has admirably filled for the past two years.

When seen at his office regarding his resignation, Mr. Greene said, "Although this action may come as a surprise to many of my friends, it has been my intention to act in this manner for over six months, during which time I have been perfecting plans for big things which will be of greater benefit to exhibitors, but which plans are not in such a state of perfection at this particular time for me to make them public, and as soon as I return from California I will make an announcement to the trade which will have a rather startling ring to it."

Mr. Hiram Abrams, of the United Artists Corporation, who had been Mr. Greene's business associate for over fifteen years and knows of Mr. Greene's ability probably better than any other personage in the industry said over the telephone, when asked what he thought of Mr. Greene's resignation, "I'm surprised only in the fact that it did not happen long ago. Mr. Greene's absolute knowledge of this industry, his prestige among exhibitors throughout the entire country for fair dealing and progressive advancement and his standing in financial and business circles has made him one of the really big men in this business. There is no doubt in my mind but that his future plans will be of such a nature that they will be of the most extreme benefit to the industry, for he has had in mind big things for a long while and he has had to free himself of big organization details to carry forth his ideals."

Mr. Greene left November 11 for Califorina and although pressed for a more absolute statement regarding his future plans would not divulge any of his details.

SAENGER RUMORS

Denial Made That Any Negotiations Are On

RUMORS that the Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans is negotiating with any individual or concern for the sale of its theatre or exchange interests in the Southeast are emphatically denied by W. H. Gueringer, assistant manager in charge of the concern's New York headquarters.

"There is not a semblance of truth in the reports that have been circulated," declared Mr. Gueringer. "The Saenger Amusement Company has not been approached, nor is there any thought or intention of it disposing of any of its properties."

F. I. L. M. Clubs Decide to Form a National Federation

A CONVENTION of delegates from various F. I. L. M. Clubs located throughout the United States was held last week at the offices of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry in the Times Building, New York. These clubs were formed a few years ago in the film distributing centers by exchange managers for the purpose of co-operation and co-ordination in both executive and protective measures.

During the meeting here it was decided to form a National Federation of F. I. L. M. Clubs, thus unifying all the existing organizations, and officers were elected as follows: President, S. Eckman, Jr., who is Manager of the Goldwyn New York Exchange; Vice-Presidents, J. E. Flynn, Goldwyn Detroit Manager, with supervision over clubs in the Central West; R. C. Seery, Manager for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit in Chicago, for the Western Territory; Fred B. Murphy, in the East; Floyd St. Johns, Select San Francisco Manager, for the Pacific Coast; R. B. Seltzer, World Washington Manager, for the South, and I. E. Chadwick, New York Secretary and Treasurer.

The new Federation has applied for membership in the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as an autonomous entity.

Irish Flock to Initial Showing of "For the Freedom of Ireland"

Freedom shrieked, this time with joy, at Orchestra Hall, Chicago, last Monday night, when before a distinguished audience which packed the big loop theatre, the Capital Film Company gave a private showing of "For the Freedom of Ireland."

Friends of Ireland signalized the presentation of "For the Freedom of Ireland" by turning the occasion into a memorable celebration of music and oratory. There were speeches by Mayor William Hale Thompson, former Governor Dunne, Father F. X. McCabe of De Paul University, and others. Mme. Marie De Rohan-McArdle gave a splended rendition of a varied program of Irish and American songs and revealed rare artistry in the mad scene from "Lucia de Lammermoor."

Plans for the exploitation of "For the Freedom of Ireland" will be announced within a few days.

Film Post of American Legion Elects Officers

The Film Post, American Legion, met on October 19, 1919, at No. 138 West 46th Street, New York City and elected W. H. Pemberton, of the Green Room Club as President, Harold L. Pech, of the N. V. A. as Treasurer and Joseph C. Scott, of the Film Players Club as Secretary.

Any person who served in the Army, Navy or Marines during the late World War and is eligible to membership in the American Legion may apply to the Film Post for membership, if now engaged in the taking, manufacture or sale of Motion Pictures.

Sunday Shows Hit in Oklahoma

The city council at Hominy, Okla., has passed an ordinance prohibiting Sunday shows of any kind, including moving pictures. The theatre men and the ministers had circulated petitions, both for and against Sunday shows. It is understood that the case will be appealed to a higher court.

Looping the Loop in the Windy City

S. L. Barnhard of the Capital Film Company, Chicago, has arrived at California Studios of the Company, to supervise work there and organize two more companies, the demand for two reel pictures far exceeding the present capacity of the studio.

Joe Friedman, who has been confined to his home for two weeks, by illness, is back at his desk in the Celebrated Players Chicago office.

E. H. Maisel has sold his Capitol Theatre at Springfield, Illinois, to Itsky Bernstein, who is a brother of the Bernstein boys who own theatres at Lincoln, Illinois.

E. P. Milburn has sold the Ruby Palace Theatre at Marseilles, Illinois, to A. R. Workman.

Steve Major, manager of the Opera House at Gerard, Illinois, reports that theatres in this vicinity have been closed by the health authorities due to an epidemic of scarlet fever.

So great has become the volume of business in the Chicago office of the First National, according to Harry Weiss, that Messers. Weiss and Seery having no more room for employes in their already crowded quarters, have been forced to add a night force.

Carl Mueller of the Harper Hotel, Rock Island, Illinois, gave a dinner to Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, recently. of twenty covers. The dining room looked like a film convention.

G. W. Reynolds has opened his Armory Theatre at Dekalb, Illinois, to capacity business and also is running the Princess.

Harry Gramp of Rockford, Illinois, owner of theatres in Galesburg, Rockford and elsewhere, has added another house to his string, at Beloit, Wisconsin, which he reports already is doing big business.

Both theatres at Milledgeville, Illinois, are now under one management. C. A. Mendenhall having bought out the interests of his competitor, C. A. Puterbaugh.

R. C. Cropper, president and general manager of the Beehive Film Exchanges, announces the purchase for the states of Illinois, Indiana & Wisconsin, of the Tyrad Feature "THE RED VIPER." It will be released as a Beehive special feature in addition to the regular Beehive feature program of two releases a month.

P. C. Schram of Kalamazoo, a successful exhibitor, has just purchased the Lyric Theatre of that city and installed a new Bartola.

The house will seat about 1,400 on two floors. It has been decorated by one of the city's best known firms of interior decorators and will be, when it is ready to open, one of the city's most attractive houses.

G. L. Levine, Chicago

Members of Local No. 2 I. A. T. S. E., the men who set the scenery for the motion picture business in Chicago, will give their annual dance on February 12, Lincoln's Birthday, at the First Regiment Armory. It will be designated the Theatrical Victory Ball, and the reception committee will comprise the members who saw service in the war.

A. Teitel, who has become widely known as the Chicago "Film Doctor," has successively completed cleaning eighteen prints of thirteen reels each of "Hearts of the World" and according to Irving M. Lesser, president and general manager of the All Star Features Distributors, Inc., the condition of the films was improved 200 per cent by Dr. Teitel's treatment.

"The Roosevelt" is the name chosen by Ascher Brothers for their proposed Chicago loop theatre, which will represent a $1,800,000 investment. These progressive exhibitors have bought a National Picture Theatre, Inc., franchise which will cover all their houses, and Mr. Nathan Ascher will be a director of the National Corporation and vice president representing the Chicago district.

The Shakespeare Theatre at Forty-third street and Ellis avenue, Chicago, has been purchased by Messrs. Brunhild and Young, owners of the Emmett Theatre, who have secured the services of Mr. Julius Lamm as manager.

Fred M. Shafer has resigned as manager of the Washington theatre to take charge of a Chicago theatre.

The New Koppin theatre on Gratiot avenue, located in a colored neighborhood, opened with "The Radium Mystery" and "Johnny Get Your Gun." The house has 999 chairs and the policy calls for a daily change. It is a one floor house, beautifully decorated and well located.

Arthur S. Hyman Attractions have incorporated for $100,000.

Charles S. Porter, manager of the Forest theatre, announces that he will build a new house on Hamilton avenue to seat 2,000.

Joseph Ferte has resigned as city salesman for Goldwyn to take charge of the Paramount exchange in Montreal.

Wm. Fox Addresses His Ex-Service Men at Armistice Day Meeting

On Tuesday, Nov. 11, William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, addressed the various departments of the organization on the occasion of the first anniversary of the signing of the armistice.

According to reports, the Fox organization has several hundred men, and some women, back at their work in the film industry after serving under the colors during the period of war. To these Mr. Fox addressed himself especially—although his brief talk was of a general nature, emphasizing his appreciation of the splendid co-operation throughout the firm. Mr. Fox explained that he was proud he had so many of his men back with him, and grateful that so few had been called upon to make the supreme sacrifice.

Each department of the organization in the home office on West 46th street was visited by Mr. Fox.

Enterprise Optical Man Finds Improvement in Projection

O. F. Spahr of the Enterprise Optical Company has returned to Chicago after a week's trip to Minneapolis and the northwest, enthused over the way exhibitors of that district are improving the projection of pictures, coincident with the profitable business they are enjoying.

As an evidence of exhibitors' determination to screen their pictures in the best possible manner by the purchase of new machines, he states that S. A. Lewis, owner of the Rialto Theatre Supply Company, who handles the product of the Enterprise Optical Company in the northwest, recently has placed De Luxe Motiographs in forty theatres and Regular Model Machines in fifteen houses, as well as doing a big business in renewing projectors.

MUTUAL PLEASURE

Constance Binney Meets Men Who Distribute Her Films

CONSTANCE BINNEY, Realart star, had an opportunity to meet exhibitors, who will show her pictures, last week in Cleveland. The occasion was a luncheon presided over by James B. Reilly, local manager for Realart, at which prominent exhibitors and other film men of the city were in attendance. Miss Binney is appearing in Cleveland in "39 East," the play in which she scored in New York last season.

Charles D. Isaacson Resigns as Ad. Manager of Goldwyn Corp.

Charles D. Isaacson has resigned as manager in the advertising department of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. Mr. Isaacson, it is stated, leaves to handle the rapidly growing demands from publishers for his literary output. During his connection with Goldwyn he had maintained through his personal office the New York Globe's music department and its concert bureau. This he will, of course, continue, devoting considerable time now to the syndication of his newspaper articles through the Associated Newspapers.

Duncan and Moreno of Vitagraph Busy on Serials at Hollywood

Both William Duncan and Antonio Moreno are reported to be industriously "plugging" away at their Vitagraph serials at the Hollywood studio. Mr. Duncan has completed "Smashing Barriers."

Antonio Moreno is just half through with "The Invisible Hand," another Smith-Brady serial, having finished the seventh chapter and being well into the eighth. This serial, according to reports, will be presented by Vitagraph immediately upon the release of the final episode of "Smashing Barriers."

"Red Lantern" Earns Bonus From Satisfied Exhibitor

The Delft Theatre in Escanaba, Mich., recently showed the Nazimova production, "The Red Lantern" for two days with Metro's guarantee that the picture would do a specified amount of business. The result of the showing not only vindicated the confidence of the Metro branch manager who rented out the print but was responsible for the payment of a substantial bonus from the satisfied exhibitors according to the agreement made in advance.

New Fox Player Has Been in Support of Franklyn Farnum

That Canyon Pictures Corporation made no idle boast when it claimed an all star cast would support Franklyn Farnum in two reel westerns, is proved according to Jacob Weinberg, president of Canyon, by the signing of "Buck" Jones by Fox. Jones is one of the leading players in support of Farnum.

Music In The Picture Theatre

Hugo Riesenfeld Mixes Interesting Bits of Philosophy With Plain "Hoss Sense" On Subject

MUSIC and its place in the motion-picture of yesterday, to-day and tomorrow was the subject of an interview recently had with Hugo Riesenfeld, the managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto, Broadway's photoplay palaces. The salient comments of Mr. Hugo are quoted directly, as much of their significance would be otherwise lost:

"The taste for good moving pictures is inherent; it is mankind's desire to see itself and it's neighbor. In the big city, where the personal touch does not exist for a large part of the population, there are hundreds of thousands who seek in the movie the picture of domestic life, the family group, the little home incidents the romances of everyday existence that the inhabitant of the small city and the country lives day by day.

"The desire for good music, however, is not innate. It is gained by most of us from hearing the best of tunes again and again, until we acquire the taste. Added to the motion picture, in pleasing surroundings and carefully chosen to fit the story, music and pictures blend into one harmonious whole, and the audience scarcely realizes that it is getting as much good music as it would hear at an ordinary concert. And it does not go to sleep.

"The taste in pictures improves under the stimulus of good music until the original movie fan becomes a confirmed motion picture and music patron. How the taste for better things in motion picture theatres developed is best seen from the offerings in the average motion picture house. A month ago I was in a theatre far uptown and saw a beautiful scenic picture with a voice singing behind the stage. I heard people exclaiming about the beauty on the screen and the music. The idea, first conceived and executed in the more expensive theatres downtown has spread to the little neighborhood institutions and is being appreciated to the utmost by thousands whom neither propaganda for classical music nor music school could reach.

"Four years ago we bashfully introduced a classical number here and there on our program, but the bulk of our music was of the promenade concert variety. Four years of serious effort has not been in vain. We are not afraid to-day to play the most difficult and modern composers and the people like it.

"The next step? The motion picture-music houses are coming in great numbers. If I were to venture into the field of prophecy I should say that within the next five years New York will see the present Broadway theatrical district one great array of beautiful motion picture houses. The orchestras will be an even bigger feature than they are now, and we have almost fifty trained men in each of our houses. But the people want music and they are going to get it.

Big Western Houses in Contest?

Indications are Grauman's Great Theatre and the California Will Battle to Supremacy

THE picture public of Los Angeles is to have the benefit of a contest to determine who is the greatest exhibitor, it is apparent. No one has publicly announced entrance into such a contest, but future plans of Sid Grauman of Grauman's Million Dollar Cinema Temple, and S. L. Rathapfel, sent to Los Angeles to serve as managing director of the California Theatre after its purchase by the Goldwyn interests, at their respective houses indicate that both plan to maintain "the greatest show on earth."

Sid Grauman has made no definite statement regarding any changes at his house, but indirectly it is learned, that he has many new features to be added to his already nationally famous show. He intends, according to recent statement, to maintain a motion picture theatre in the strictest sense of the term, adding to his program of films just sufficient music and other light numbers to add variety. There is not an afternoon or evening when the big lobby of this theatre, which has a standing room capacity of 1,500, is not well filled with patrons waiting for seats. It is a nightly occurrence to see a long line extending from the lobby down the edge of the sidewalk. It is doubtful if there is another theatre in the country where people wait for hours to see a program as they do at Graumans.

Shortly after coming to Los Angeles and giving the California Theatre an inspection, Mr. Rothapfel, whose success as manager of the Strand, Rivoli and Rialto is well known, decided to close the California Theatre on the day it was turned over to the Goldwyn interests by the former owners and managers, Messrs. Fred Miller, Harry Leonhardt and associates, in order that slight changes in decorative scheme, lighting effects and stage equipment might be made. The theatre closed following the last performance, Sunday, November 2d, and remained dark five days, then re-opened under the Rothapfel direction.

The new California Theatre managing director has been very reticent with respect to his plans.

He has stated: "The policy of advertising our features will be most conservative, and the use of superlatives will be entirely eliminated. The prices will be somewhat higher than heretofore, but I am sure, upon seeing what we are trying to accomplish, the slight increase will be gladly paid."

Rapid Progress on "Empty Arms"

Work on "Empty Arms," the initial Lester Park-Edward Whiteside production, is progressing rapidly at the Thanhouser Studios in New Rochelle. Frank Reicher is directing and Gail Kane is in the leading role.

Legion Tendered Film Facilities

Samuel Goldwyn in Letter to Convention of War Veterans Offers Producing Aid

BEFORE the great assemblage of militant Americans brought together in Minneapolis for the first constitutional convention of the American Legion, Col. Henry D. Lindsley, chairman of the convention, read a letter from Samuel Goldwyn, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, offering all the facilities of his tremendous producing and distributing organization to propagate the Legion's ideal of Americanism on the screen. The thousands of delegates present, received the letter from Mr. Goldwyn with enthusiastic applause and it was referred to a committee for action.

The offer means that as soon as the American Legion decides to produce any kind of a picture, it may use Goldwyn's Studios, either in Culver City or the East and that it will receive the fullest cooperation of Goldwyn's producing forces. When the production is completed it may be distributed through Goldwyn's twenty-two exchanges. The delegates at the convention displayed a keen interest in possibilities opened for effective screen propaganda.

"You stand on the threshold of a new epoch in American life," Mr. Goldwyn's letter says in part "You, yourselves, are to be the builders of that epoch. Behind you is the withering blast and flame of war. The future is an uncut rock before you; the shape it will take will be given by your hands.

"It will be a privilege for us to co-operate with you in this great work. Goldwyn Pictures and the men who distribute them cover the United States like the sensitive fingers of a many-fingered hand. If you have a picture to make give us the opportunity of helping you. If you have a picture to distribute let us be your agent. We will be proud to bear your message. The ideas of our trained experts are at your disposal for a full discussion of this important matter. What is the most effective co-operation we can give you?"

Gouverneur Morris, one of Goldwyn's Eminent Authors, who is a direct descendant of a general in the American Revolution, is particularly interested in the work of the American Legion. In connection with Goldwyn's offer of motion picture producing and distributing facilities, Mr. Morris wrote: "Not since the war of the revolution has there been so potential a source of Americanism as the American Legion. It represents no party, no section, no creed, no class. It is made up of all parties, all sections, all classes and all creeds. It is composed largely of men who in the shadow of death have learned the value of courage, self-sacrifice, self-discipline and the square deal.

"The American Legion believes that by the fires of universal service all the tried and untried ores in the great Melting Pot will be smelted into the strong, bright and resilient metal of loyal and generous citizenship."

M. Hoffman Leaves For London

Famous Players–Lasky Former Coast Manager Will Take Charge of New Producing Enterprise Abroad

MILTON E. HOFFMAN, formerly General Manger of the Lasky studio on the West Coast, sailed from New York last week for London where he will assume the general management of the studio of Famous Players-Lasky British Producers, Ltd. Upon Mr. Hoffman's arrival in London, Albert A. Kaufman, who has had entire charge of the construction of the big plant and its equipment, will return to this country, it is said.

The new studio is said to be situated in the heart of London and is reported to be one of the largest in England. It was formerly the center of extensive production activity, but the war having virtually halted the motion picture industry in Great Britain several years ago, it was necessary, according to reports, to completely remodel the structure and install entirely new equipment. Under Captain Kaufman's supervision the plant has been transformed into what is described as one of the most modern and best equipped studios in Europe.

Under Mr. Hoffman, active production operations will be started at once, it is stated. According to reports, one company will commence work immediately and by early spring it is probable that at least three companies will be working simultaneously, with additional accommodations for even more producing units still in reserve.

Mr. Hoffman is said to be one of the most experienced and capable production-executives in the motion picture business. It was on the 1st of April, 1916, that he went to the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company as studio manager. When the Lasky Company was merged with Famous Players in the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation he became general manager of the West Coast studio.

According to reports, Captain Kaufman will return to this country in a few weeks and it is understood that he will assume a responsible executive position with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Jack Stewart is Made Division Manager by Triangle Film

Jack Stewart, manager of the Cincinnati Triangle Exchange, has been appointed division manager with supervision over the Cincinnati, Cleveland, Detroit and Pittsburg branches. He will also continue as manager of Cincinnati, where he, it is reported, has made an admirable record for Triangle and for himself.

Wood Directs Wally Reid Again

Sam Wood is again directing Wallace Reid in his new production for Paramount-Artcraft, work on which was started Monday. This will be a picturization of a series of Byron Morgan stories which appeared in the Saturday Evening Post and will be titled "The Bear Trap." This picture will be a sequel to "The Roaring Road."

THIS AND THAT

The Collins Studio Company, which was incorporated under the laws of Ohio recently, for $115,000, is now operating in Cleveland in a temporary location at 1514 Prospect avenue, until a new building can be completed on a parcel of land at 3648 Euclid avenue, which was released this week by the organization.

The property, which is 60 by 217 feet, was leased for 99 years from Julius Tuteur, president of the Franz Premier Company, for $4,500 for the first five years and for $5,400 for the remaining years of the lease.

Cleveland will have a new film building. But the where and the when are in the hands of the N.Am.P.I. Secretary Frederick Elliott was here for several days last week looking over proposed sites, but if he had any definite idea of which one was the best, he failed to say so.

P. A. McGuire has been appointed Advertising Manager of the Nicholas Power Co., and will give his entire time to publicity work for the company.

The Royal Theatre of Providence, R. I., celebrated its sixth anniversary last week, by announcing that an addition to seat about 600 persons would be ready in a short time. When the enlarged theatre is dedicated a more extensive program will be offered.

Apart from the fact that "Broken Blossoms," D. W. Griffith's feature film, has done the very unusual thing for a motion picture in Baltimore, that of staying two weeks at one theatre, it has also broken the attendance record of the New Theatre in that city according to Louis a DeHoff, the manager.

The visit to Buffalo of Cardinal Mercier was the featured subject of the Strand theatre local events last week. Manager E. O. Wineberg "shot" over 500 feet showing the heroic primate of Belgium at various places of interest in the city.

The Buffalo Commercial has started a motion picture department called "At the Movies." It is published several times during the week and is attracting a lot of attention.

M. A. Greenwald, for two years connected with the Cleveland Fox office, has been appointed manager of the Buffalo exchange, succeeding Thomas W. Brady, resigned. Mr. Greenwald will assume his new duties at once and enlarge the sales force.

Mae Murray in New Perret Film, Called "The A.B.C. of Love"

After the success with which Leonce Perret's production "The Twin Pawns," starring Mae Murray, was received throughout the country Pathe announces the acquisition of his latest six-reel Special feature with Mae Murray, "The A. B. C. of Love," to be released December 14th. The picture is taken from Mr. Perret's story of the same name and is described as one of unusual excellence.

Merry Building Boom in Buffalo

Millions Being Invested For New Properties in Queen City of Lakes and Near Territory

THE theatre building boom goes merrily on in Buffalo and surrounding district. When some of the houses now under construction are completed Buffalo will have some of the finest theatre properties in the country. Plans are about complete for the big Shea Metropolitan which Harold B. Franklin, managing director of the Shea Hippodrome says will have 250 more seats than the capitol in New York. This mammoth picture house will be on Main street near Chippewa.

It was learned this week that negotiations have about been completed by interests representing Marcus Loew for the acquisition of property in the block bounded by Main, Washington, East Mohawk and East Huron streets for the building of a $600,000 theatre with a seating capacity of 3,400. It is understood that a single piece of property is holding up the completion of the deal.

Joseph Kozanowski has obtained permits for the building of a large theatre at 1107 Broadway. The house will be of brick construction and will cost $75,000. This new theatre will be in the heart of one of the thickest populated section in the city, being just beyond the Broadway market.

It is rumored that the Statler interests are planning to include a theatre in their new mammoth hotel which according to the rumors will be one of the finest in the country. It will be located on the present Castle Inn Hotel site which is the former home of President Millard Fillmore.

N. E. Dipson has purchased five pieces of property on the north side of Main street in Batavia upon which he will build a $125,000 theatre.

Joseph A. Schuchert and Charles Hayman are building a $750,000 theatre at Niagara Falls.

The house which George Hall and George Haney are building in the South Park district is nearing completion and will be called the Piccadilly.

North Buffalo will soon have a mammoth picture house. It is being built by W. F. MacDonald.

It is rumored that the Mark-Strand corporation are considering putting the largest of a chain of Mark-Strand theatres in Buffalo, but Walter Hayes, a member of the company, says that nothing can be announced at this time.

Big Baltimore Theatre Deal

One of the biggest moving-picture theatre deals ever consummated in Baltimore took place when C. E. Whitehurst, president of the company that built and controls the New and Garden Theatre in that city acquired control of the Parkway and McHenry Theatres. Neither parties to the deal would reveal the amount of money involved, but it is known to have been an exceedingly large sum. It has been pointed out by persons in the motion picture business in Baltimore that Mr. Whitehurst was probably actuated by a desire to eliminate competition to the new Century Theatre which he is preparing to build on Lexington street near Liberty.

The work of re-titling "A Burlesque on Carmen," the Essanay Chaplin, now being state righted under the control of Victor Kremer, has been completed by George Bunny and Bert Ennis.

Exhibitor Service Bureau

"No Man Ever Ate a Ten Dollar Meal and Felt Right"

By Ralph Ruffner

Manager of the Rialto Theatre, San Francisco.

You won't read over two sentences of this article before you will have found out that this chap, Ruffner can write. He is a sort of motion picture Sam Blythe in that he can handle a dry subject like this one on admissions the way Blythe handles a political story, make it interesting reading and at the same time prove his statements and convince you that he knows what he is talking about. The history of Mr. Ruffner in show business is mighty interesting. He has risen to a country wide fame as one of the most original men in the business and yet he is still the same likable boy that he was before prosperity and fame came his way. Of one thing we are sure you will enjoy reading his article one of the series we are now publishing each week on this page.

THE OPEN MARKET is for the Farmers. It has developed a lot of Woolworth merchandise with Tiffany price marks. It would seem that if a man were to try to keep pace with the outrageous rentals now being asked, increased admissions would automatically come about. But will the public respond in sufficient numbers to justify? I believe they will, just in proportion to the merits of the individual attraction, and it requires more than the customary length of showing to prove this. In other words, when big money is paid and admissions increased there is an instant wariness on the part of many theatre goers who are not immediately responsive and a longer run is necessary to get the initial investment back with such returns as circumstances make possible. The application of a theory — its success or otherwise — depends entirely upon local conditions and what would prove true in San Francisco could not be expected to work out in Wichita. Just now, the Rialto, here in San Francisco, is engaged in testing a theory which is working out very satisfactorily. When the new order of things appeared and higher rentals were asked, the theatre did not elevate its prices nor did it obligate itself to pay extreme sums for productions it had not seen. Like all first class theatre properties, we have the facilities for marketing a film properly. The Rialto will pay a fair and just price for any production which comes up to its ideas of good entertainment. We have a certain latitude of prices we can afford to pay based upon what we can afford to charge. If the banquet is a $10 per plate affair, we don't sit in, for no man ever ate $10 worth of substantial food at one "settin" and came away feeling right. For the moment we are staying within our means and by so doing we are probably remaining in both the good graces and the means of our friends. When the time comes for us to present an attraction whose rental figure over-steps the line of possible results based upon normal admissions, we shall elevate prices at the box office as we believe necessary. A theatre is judged by the class of entertainment offered as a man is judged by the company he keeps. It costs money to travel first class and there is a knack in spending money first class. A merchant must keep faith with the public. He must handle good merchandise. He is expected to know it is good before he endorses it. If he finds himself victimized by the wholesaler, as a good merchant he will not, in turn, victimize his customers, but will stand a loss and buy with greater discretion in the future. I wish I could write something of particular interest to the small-town manager. Intensified showmanship begins there. I began there. Many a picket fence did I walk straddle of—so to speak—to learn what constitutes dangerous ground and HOW to walk on it when necessary; and this theory thing of which I speak is merely past experience coming to the surface for another trial, only in a broader sense. The most money I ever made was made at regular admissions. The most money I ever lost was lost at increased admissions. I have been over-sold but never twice by the same man. I have been undersold but never by the same man. This price thing is dangerous ground for both exchange and exhibitor. One can juggle prices, the other cannot. We signed a contract yesterday for a film at $700 on which the initial quotation was $3,000 ten days ago. The unfortunate part of such a policy is that this salesman will undoubtedly get a lot of easy money in the territory and many exhibitors will raise their admissions on the strength of what they paid, only to grace their screens with a commodity of ordinary merit, because flowery talk and the present epidemic of high rentals for the moment caused them to feel such a step was in line with the general trend of things. River boats were not built to sail the seas, but little does that concern the pirates who give no recognition to the fact as they tempt one to take passage on these ocean excursions, so to speak. Here in San Francisco we have a large transient trade in addition to a steady-building-week-to-week trade. Were we to suddenly elevate our prices to satisfy the demands of the exchange men and pay them the prices which "New York" dictates shall be asked, the box office boost would have no material effect on the strangers, but it would prove a momentary set-back and perhaps a serious one with our steadies. For example: The other day a party of men were discussing the raise on the part of the boot-blacks from 10¢ to 15¢ for a shine — a fifty per cent increase — and it was found that every man present was and had been shining his own shoes since the raise went into effect. It was not because they couldn't afford it, but because, I am sure, they were not conversant with the whys and wherefors of the bootblacks' problems, and rather than argue the point they just didn't donate, that's all. A 5¢ boost is responsible for this attitude among a crowd of men who might easily be called "ready money." This being true, how must increased theatre admissions be looked upon by families? So far as educating the public is concerned, it isn't an easy matter to carry on an educational campaign in newspapers whose display rates run from $4.90 to $7 per inch for amusements, and particularly uninviting would such a campaign be at this time in view of the typhoon of increased prices constantly about the heads of the ordinary mortals who make profits possible. Those

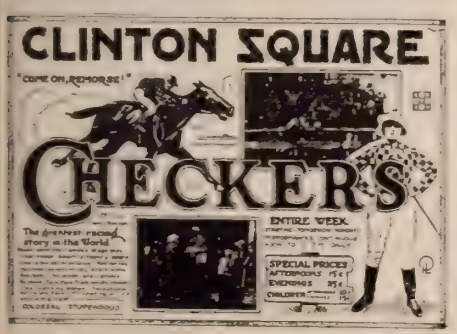
RECENTLY we told you something about the advertising of the Nemo theatre at Johnstown, Pa., and what this house did with an anniversary week. Here is one of the displays that Barclay used on this occasion, a two-column eight inch ad. on "The New Moon." We had later specimens but chose this one since we think it is rather classy for small space. Especially effective is the hand drawn line billing the star. It is seldom that we see as good work as this from a city of Johnstown's size.

A weakminded man is always the most head strong.

THE Clinton Square theatre of Albany comes through with the best display we have ever seen from New York State's capital city, in this half page on "Checkers." Using the illustration of the famous race horse scene which has characterized nearly every display framed for this feature and getting the title up in big letters together with two good scene cuts, builds this into a most effective ad.

We really call this the best display that has come to our attention on the feature, and is especially to be commended from the fact that as a rule Albany exhibitors apparently pay little attention to their advertising.



Sound money is the kind which jingles in a fellow's pockets.

WE are strong for displays of this character, hand drawn and artistic to the last word but we never use one for these pages without some regrets since so few exhibitors can use them as models for their own displays and that is one of the greatest uses this department has. We never select an ad without considering whether or not it will be of use to some one else, the exhibiting of fancy specimens of displays being a second consideration.

The work of the Strand ad man on this display for "The Thunderbolt" we call one of the very cleverest examples of its kind from every point of view. Especially do we approve of the selling talk which creates an interest in the subject matter of the picture and in the explanatory sentences printed on the "jardiniers" at each lower corner calling attention to the two stars' previous hits.

In size this was four columns by twelve inches. The Strand is located at Omaha and is one of the A. H. Bland houses.

A genius is a man who can do almost anything but make a living.

THE Arcade theatre of Jacksonville, Florida, hs come through with another full page of good stuff, this time on "Her Kingdom of Dreams." We really don't call this the best ever but we must admit that it attracts attention and for the most part advertises the feature from absolutely the right angle, first featuring the star, next the title and with the great array of acting talent which has parts in the production given much attention.

In criticism we suggest that the two descriptive scenes at the top of the page only serve to dress the ad and attract attention and do not do a great deal toward selling the picture and also that the Arcade has been a bit extravagant in billing this as the "supreme triumph of her screen career" and as "The Perfect Photoplay." It had enough selling angles without going in for the personal guarantee which is always rather a bad policy even with the greatest of hits since no picture will please everyone and a lot of them fall way short of this goal. Still as we said in the beginning this is good stuff, better than an average.

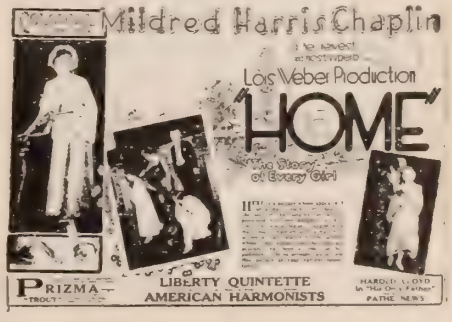
The hog may be a squealer but he seldom gives anything away.

WE had sort of thought that S. Barrett McCormick had a monopoly on all the good advertising in and about Indianapolis but this display of the Colonial's of above-mentioned city proves our theory incorrect.

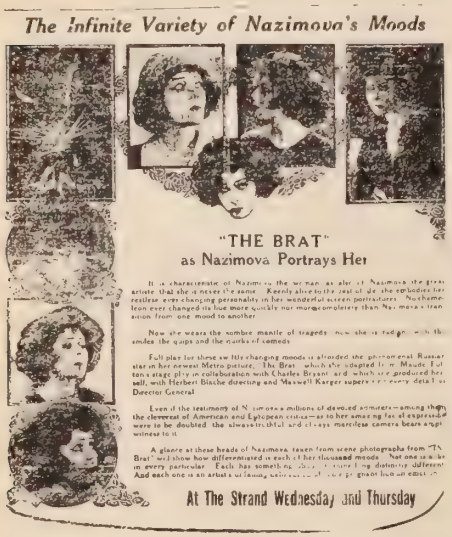
Here is one of the choicest displays we have run cross, six columns wide and ten inches deep, attractively framed with good selling talk and a nice display of the star's name and the title of the production. The stills used do not reproduce any too well and it is too bad that they don't, since we might give this the 100 per cent label, whereas as it is, the percentage must be dropped a bit. However, this is first class advertising, better than 90 per cent of what we see, which by the way, is most of the better displays used in this whole United States.



Looking Over the Ads

You would be somewhat surprised at the really small number of cities which can boast of good advertising although the general average is fast improving. In fact, we can almost see it grow from week to week.

Most people neglect doing to-morrow what they can put off doing to-day.



WHEN we wrote a special service section on "The Brat" we called attention to a producer's cut which we recommended for advertising this picture and which we felt was going to be widely used.

Here it is, as used by the Strand Theatre of Fremont, Ohio, a town of some fifteen thousand inhabitants. However, this was not the only display the Strand framed for this picture in the same edition, almost a whole page was monopolized with display and reading matter.

We mention this to try and impress once more with our admonition to bill the good picture like a circus above all others, rather than to figure that the production will do a good business without special effort. A good production, coupled with a popular star, will do well unaided but it will clean up when properly exploited and make friends for your theatre. This picture did such a wonderful business for the Strand that the news reached our Cleveland correspondent who reported it to us, with the reason therefor, which was the exploitation given it. Every day it is becoming more important to pick only the good ones and then advertise them properly. The day when about so much business could be depended upon, regardless of the attraction or the amount of publicity obtained is gone. There is a wide margin to-day in what individual attractions will do. See to it that you pick only features which deserve exploitation and then go to it. In size this ad was four columns by twelve inches. With the exception of the name and date line this is all producer's cut.

THE Metropolitan theatre of Cleveland has used the teaser idea in its selling talk for advertising "The Hushed Hour" and we believe succeeded in framing something which will attract the attention of the reader and incite curiosity concerning the film itself. There is however one trouble with this selling talk, one which is liable to accrue whenever the teaser method of advertising is attempted and that is that the selling talk mentioned is misleading. The story of "The Hushed Hour" has nothing whatever to do with stopped clocks or suspension of business as this reading matter infers.

In connection with the subject of teaser campaigns it might not be out of place to say that a great many good advertising men are very much against their use except in a mystery story or a light comedy where people are more apt to forgive you if they are misled into believing something that isn't. In this opinion we are inclined to concur, as the lawyers say.

So far as the biggest part of this display goes it is excellent, sure to attract attention from the illustration alone if from no other angle.

A lost opportunity seldom finds its way back.

THE Grand of Minneapolis has chosen to give the new Pearl White serial "The Black Secret" the best end of this display, three columns by twelve inches over several numbers of vaudeville, something a great many combination houses are doing these days. We are using this display for the reason given. It is also an interesting specimen of practically a straight type ad. very nicely framed in a style easy of composition but nevertheless effective.

Billing Pearl White above the title of the new production we believe is quite correct since this star in her particular line is a great favorite and always of greater interest to fans than the name of the production she may be appearing in. In size this display was three columns wide and twelve inches deep.

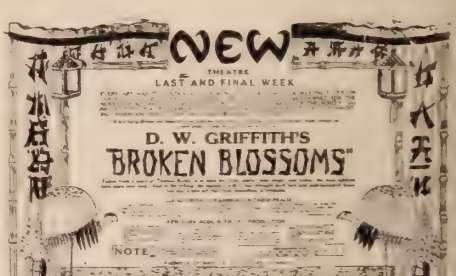
Gossip is a deadly gas that is often fatal to the best of friendships.

WE call this half page display of the New Theatre, Baltimore, on "Broken Blossoms" the most effective ad we have seen on this picture and it has hd a lot of good advertising framed both with the producers' cuts and by exhibitors.

The place where this display excels to our mind is the decorative border with its design suggestive of Chinese atmosphere although the reading matter used is all high class. This ad is entirely original with the exception of the Chinese birds at the lower corners which were suggested in the producer's press book and therefore the New ad man is entitled to all the credit for so fine a display which we label 100 per cent in our batting averge column.

Using the favorable reviews written by the various dramatic critics both in Baltimore and New York, we call excellent stuff, especially the reports of the Baltimore papers. In fact this whole display strikes us as a masterpiece. What more can we say?

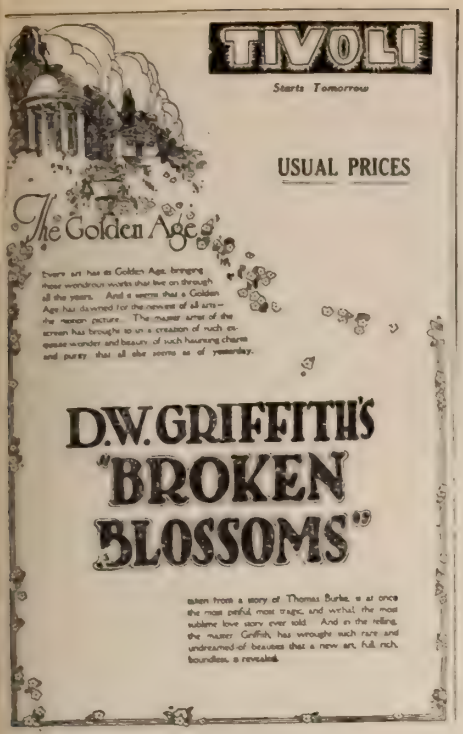


Sin may be ugly but it understands the art of beauty culture.

HERE is an example of exhibitors aid which if it was always reached in quality would make advertising displays an easy matter, since all the Tivoli did to secure this high grade result was to insert its name cut in the first mortise and the "usual prices" line in the second mortise.

And certainly this is an artistic display

How Exhibitors Advertise



which will sell "Broken Blossoms" quite as well as if a high salaried artist had laid awake nights planning it all out and then spent half a day in framing it. This cut should get almost universal use when the feature begins to play the houses in cities where the best that can be gotten in mechanical help in framing an ad is straight type. The cut is a popular size, three columns by twelve inches. The Tivoli is located in San Francisco. It played a rather extended engagement on "Broken Blossoms."

The trouble with a man who doesn't know anything is that he is always telling it to others.

THE use of this display on "The Vengeance of Durand" by the Superba of San Diego, Cal., serves at least two purposes. First it exemplifies the correct way to use a head cut of a star, and second, it will prove to you that release dates don't mean much any more. This picture is not scheduled for release for some time, is showing at the Broadwy this week is a pre-release subject and still it has been played on the West Coast some time ago, since this ad appeared in the San Diego Union of the issue of October 26th.

As for the display itself, it is better than average and quite up to the Superba's standard. Here is somewhat of a question to our minds in the billing. Should the star be billed above the title of a picture adapted from one of Rex Beach's novels? We are inclined to think that we would shout our heads off on the title relegating even so popular star as Miss Joyce to second place.

In size this was four columns by twelve inches, about the usual Superba space. We use quite a lot of this theatre's displays as they are usually very good and are fine subjects for exhibitors who desire models from which to frame their own displays.

The proof of the good showman isn't always in the money his house takes in.

THIS is a fair sample of the advertising done in Boston, small displays, this one is two columns by four inches, advertising the features only. While there is nothing unusual about this display it can be labeled as high grade work. It would seem that doing service for two big first run houses a larger space might be purchased to advantage and a more extensive selling talk framed. It is quite possible that billing Griffith and the title of his latest feature, "Scarlet Days," is sufficient to attract big business but certainly the "Luck in Pawn" picture needs some explanation as to its merits.

With "Daddy Long Legs" record of 19 weeks in Boston in mind, we would figure the bean city a fertile field for the exploitation of pictures.

A lot of exhibitors borrow trouble when they negotiate a loan for improvements to their theatre which aren't necessary.

THE New Aster of Minneapolis is responsible for this display on Mabel Normand's "Upstairs" and has produced one of the best advertisements we have seen on this feature, and we believe entirely original.

Here is the use of the personal guarantee in the shape of a typewritten letter to the public signed by the manager of the theatre.

We do not remember using anything from the New Aster recently and therefore are not familiar with the character and style of its product but from this we judge that its advertising standard is high.

WE are choosing this display on "The Miracle Man," a full page from the Houston (Texas) Chronicle, for just one reason, and that is, that here is an ad that can be framed by the theatre in the very smallest towns, the tanks as they are called in the show business. And right here we want to recommend that you who have show shops in these smaller cities do just what has been done here when you play this feature, buy a whole page to advertise it.

who know the showman's problems and who are mentally lenient, will continue to go as often as they can afford, those who don't WON'T. People can get along without motion picture entertainment if they have to—the flu shut-down proved that. The Rialto's admissions the past ten weeks have been and are: Adults 28¢, Children 11¢, Loges 50–, matinees and nights. I believe in a one price house. When I came here the prices were 10-20-30 and 40¢. It was necessary for a patron to speak a piece at the box office window—the loss of precious time on a busy day or night—and further necessary to pass through three different hands before the proper location in the house was reached. We threw out the 20¢ and 30¢ tickets and established 25¢ as the general admission, adding the war tax of 3¢. If we maintain this and Congress wipes out the admission tax, we will still have our 25¢. If they do not, the patron still continues to pay his own tax. We added 10c to the price of our loges on the assumption that those who bought loge seats could afford the extra dime. This plan pays us $16 more per house than was possible under the old order. California cities have been strong for three and four prices. One will see a line a block or so long—especially in Los Angeles. These are the low-price seekers, while the orchestra and loges will be largely vacant often times. Long lines of people are not always an indication that the house is doing a capacity business, for while one part of the theatre may be sold out, there may be lots of room in some other section. Here in the Rialto we permit smoking in any part of our balcony, and though the price is the same as the lower floor, no difficulty is experienced in filling it. The term "Selective Booking" is going the rounds now. That aptly describes it. This year it is the same old horse on the same old track, with the same old rider and the same old bookmakers. On September 4th, 1919, two weeks ago, I saw a wonderful melon, figuratively speaking, which sampled first class. I knew I could retail this melon to my customers with the knowledge that they would be delighted, and though I offered top price I could not buy it unless I further agreed to pay a handsome bonus for three little onions which I was told were in the ground but which had not yet sprouted. The yard in which they were planted had—in times gone by—produced some very poor onions in which the worms had chewed their initials, and knowing I could get no definite assurance that the embryo onions would develop into marketable produce, I went my way, disgusted with the System. The unborn onions and the beautiful melon were closed out later to another buyer because he was willing to "stand and deliver," though my offer for the melon beat his. AND THAT IS SELECTIVE BOOKING. So for the present, the Rialto will continue to play the side lines, letting others sign up long distance contracts to their hearts' content. Those pictures we buy will be given IMMEDIATE dates. Those we play are those which have passed inspection. Happily we are not embarrassed with contracts which compel us to play or pay Woolworth merchandise at Tiffany prices.

Transforms Vacant Lot Into Desert to Exploit "Sahara"

GLENN CONDON, manager of the Majestic theatre Tulsa, Okla., had a Sahara all his own for his engagement of "Sahara"—a desert on a vacant expanse adjoining the Majestic. At the close of Saturday night's performance Manager Condon put his force to work on transforming the lot into a desert by strewing it with sand, imitation sage-brush and cactus, while on the other end a force of carpenters erected a little tent, a skilful reproduction of that shown in the picture.

The big crowd that flocked to the Majestic for the opening performance Sunday stood open-mouthed at the transformation. To give his patrons a chance to revel in the desert sand Mr. Congdon placed his ticket office inside the makeshift tent, where through an arrangement with a local songshop, Mr. Congdon had installed a piano and a quartet of male singers attired in Arab costume to render "Beautiful Sahara," Frederick V. Bowers' ballad which the Louise Glaum picture inspired.

The Majestic lobby on "Sahara" revealed the same care and attention that Mr. Condon had lavished on his little desert. Art, that was entirely absent in his side show on the lot, ran riot in the lobby. Mr. Condon had some beautiful oil and water color paintings reproduced from the scene "stills" on "Sahara" and these surrounded a life-size portrait of Louise Glaum.

For the four-day engagement the management supplied Arab costumes for its ushers, ticket sellers and other employes who came in touch with the eager throngs that voted Mr. Condon's outdoor desert setting his stunt of stunts.

Sanders Comes Across With A "Bearcat" for "Bearcat"

J. W. SANDERS, manager of the Strand Theatre of Mattoon, Ill., tells us how he put over "When Bearcat When Dry."

Naturally the title of this feature is going to suggest a lot of clever exploitation stunts and we are not surprised to see them beginning to come in.

Here is what Managers Sanders did on the Strand's engagement on this feature, as it was told to us in his letter.

"We started about 4 weeks previous to the playing date, by taking a dozen of the 'Coming' one sheets that are furnished gratis. They have a large circle in the centre, reading 'When Bear Cat Went Dry,' I cut that out and pasted a neat white paper on the bottom, which read, 'They Drank Bevo, Graino,' etc. I put these in the windows of every soft-drink joint in town. I did not have a thing on the one sheet to indicate that it was a picture, but it started people to talking.

"The next week I plastered the town with stickers. I followed that by pinning a button on every boy that I could, and then a week before the show plastered the town with my paper on the pictures. The result was, I did a smashing big business."

Personal Inspection of Tom Moore's Exploitation Methods

HERE is an opportunity to measure some of the things which bring people into the theatre. An opportunity which is not often presented since advertising in any of it's various forms is not usually to be weighed on a scale which will determine its true value. We have heard various men discuss the subject with much apparent conviction that they knew all that was to be known. The next day some other sharp would argue right the opposite and make his case both logical and clear. Discussing advertising is very much like discussing law. You may prove anything you like.

Window display in Kann Bros. department store window arranged by Bert Adler, Realart's special representative at the Washington showing in Tom Moore's Rialto theatre

The case in point, as they say in the court room, is the experience of Tom Moore, the Washington exhibitor, manager of the Rialto, Strand and Garden theatres has had with his engagement of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" at the Rialto theatre.

The picture opened at the Rialto Sunday, November 3d. An hour before the first Sunday show the lobby and street was blocked with people waiting to get in. Sunday night fully two thousand people were turned away and when the admissions were counted for the opening day's business it was found that the Chautard picture had broken the house record previously held by Mary Pickford, America's favorite actress in "Daddy Long Legs," her greatest screen hit.

Immediately you showmen will inquire, "Why?"

First, we will give you our idea of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" viewed as an attraction before anyone has seen the picture and any mouth to mouth advertising could build patronage for it.

A feature produced by a new firm, directed by Emile Chautard, who has a good reputation but who would hardly mean a great deal to audiences, adopted from a French novel which is not one of the best sellers although quite widely read, a cast of capable players but which contains no stars and a title which will sound alluring and interesting to the average person who goes to the picture theatre. Yet this film has broken all opening day records for Mr. Moore.

We will now tell you about the advertising campaign. For a week previous to the opening date liberal advertising space was purchased in the Washington papers. All of this display was of the teaser type. Viewed without partiality we would call it good average stuff both as to size and quality. No other forms of exploitation were used.

Sometime prior to the opening date, Mr. Moore announced that a prologue was being prepared as an additional attraction. This feature was given quite a bit of publicity, both in the text pages of the Washington papers and in the displays, especially the former, since Mr. Moore has gained a reputation for his prologues and the announcement of the proposed staging of another was an item of news in Washington.

In the stories concerning the proposed prologue for "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" was the mention that one Miss Fay Brennan, a Washington girl, would enact the role of the heroine of the film for the pantomime performance. Miss Brennan, in Washington, is more than a name, since she has just won a beauty contest, and in so doing secured a lot of publicity and is being considered for further honors, just what they are being immaterial to this story. The Rialto advertising dwelt particularly on the fact that Miss Brennan would appear in the prologue.

This done, the Rialto waited for the opening with the result described. You will probably have reached your conclusions as to the reasons fr the phenomenal business "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" did at the Rialto. See if it agrees with our own.

The writer saw the prologue in question and calls it a most effective bit of stage craft, the work of Mr. Moore and Mr. Chautard as co-directors.

Following is a description of it and accompanying are cuts which illustrate our story. Also cuts of the Rialto foyer, one of the most beautiful rooms we have ever seen about a theatre, decorated for "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" showing and a picture of a tie-up in a window display effected with the Kann Department Store, one of Washington's leading mercantile establishments. Before the picture is flashed on the screen, the rising curtains reveal in the center of the stage the mysterious "Yellow Room" with the barred window at one side. The lights are subdued, an air of mystery pervades the entire scene. A green hued spot light discloses in an aperture at one side the cat, whose lingering "m-e-o-w" precedes important action in the film story. The green light fades, to show at the other side in an aperture the mysterious old woman who hovers near the castle containing the "Yellow Room"—always near when trouble occurs She predicts evil in her muttering voice. She is intently listening for the repeated "meow" of the cat.

In the dim light a skulking figure is seen. As the dim light sweeps back and forth across the stage the figure each time seen is nearer the "Yellow Room." A long hand reaches for the door knob. Then flashes on the screen the scene from the film of the long hand and the clutching hand of the mysterious assailant. He seizes the girl; she screams, draws back, secures a revolver and fires. The "kick" comes from a real scream and a revolver shot behind the screen, timed with the film. The picture follows in its entirety.

Tom Moore believes his scene will be copied all over the country. Mr. Moore, while greatly pleased with the opening the Chautard picture had, stated that he was not surprised.

He also commented on the effectiveness of prologues.

"Ordinarily I do not believe in prologues — only certain types of pictures are effective when combined with them," Mr. Moore said.

"What I consider the best feature of 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' from an exploitation standpoint, is that it comes at the public from a new angle. We had war pictures, labor is now in the spotlight and the picture fan wants a change. I think with a smashing prologue the mystery story is just what is desired.

Then, Mr. Moore who impresses us as a man who looks well into the future, went on to give his ideas of what is to happen in the exhibiting field in the years to come.

Lobby of the Rialto theatre, Washington, the new million dollar Moore house, dressed for the "Mystery of the Yellow Room" engagement.

"The day is coming when actors and sets will be utilized extensively in the exploitation of motion pictures — when prologues will be given for a week or two in advance of the showing of a big production, instead of a minute or two in advance."

"I do not expect to change the character of my programs," he explains, "Except, of course, that I hope to be able to take advantage of every opportunity to book bigger and better pictures. I mean, though, that my theatres are to remain photoplay houses. The additional stage area is required solely to facilitate better presentation and exploitation.

"Let me cite a concrete illustration. When I saw 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' at the Broadway Theatre in New York the other night I was impressed at once with the possibilities it offers for exploitation. The key scene in which the girl is attacked, if presented on the stage with original sets and employing actors in person instead of in picture, would be a tremendously forceful advertisement of the production. Realism would be wonderfully enhanced by hearing the girl's pathetic cries for help and her father's desperate hammering on the barred door of the room.

"I am using such a scene as the prologue to the picture, but my contention is that really I thus derive only part of the whole value which the situation offers. Suppose, in connection with my program for a week or two in advance of showing 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room,' I had begun putting on this scene, following it with an announcement that it was an enactment of one incident from a picture to be shown at a subsequent date. Would I not thus have developed a great deal of advance interest in the production, and at the same time have afforded a thrill for my audience?

"Why, I will venture to assert that this prologue, if put to such a use, would bring greater crowds to see 'The Mystery of the Yellow Room' than ever have attended the best exploited pictures in all the history of the industry! And this is but one case in scores. I cite this production because it happens to have made a special appeal to me and because I am showing it now at my Rialto Theatre. The only reason I did not utilize the plan outlined in connection with exploitation is because the period between booking and showing was too short to permit of making the necessary arrangements.

"The first time I tried a stunt of this sort — a supplemental scene, I mean — was during the presentation of 'The Whip.' You will recall that there is a big race in the picture. Well, I showed that race scene, with the tread mill appurtenances that were used for the stage production of 'The Futurity Winner.' The stunt cost a little money, but say! I packed the house every night and I produced an outburst of enthusiasm which the picture alone could not have developed in a thousand years of presentation.

The Efficiency of the Teaser Campaign

By R. E. Pritchard

Director of Advertising and Publicity, Allen Theatre Enterprises, Canada.

GIVEN a humorous, or at least a light subject, the teaser method of advertising will pay, provided there is a real idea behind it. But there must be some real idea to be developed; once you start forcing this sort of exploitation it loses its "punch." That is my conclusion after trying this method of advertising in Toronto and in some of the smaller cities where the Allen Theatre Enterprises own theatres. In every case where the plan has been faithfully carried out the result has been good business.

Just at the same moment I want to convey a warning to advertising men to be sure that the matter on which the teaser idea is based is actually in the picture. I had one experience in which I adopted a press book idea and used it in connection with one theatre before I had seen the picture itself. When I did see it my discovery was that much of the matter was not embraced in the production and that a person after having seen the picture would still be uncertain as to what the teaser matter referred. Needless to say further matter was changed to fit the picture.

In the case of a serious picture I am convinced that the teaser idea is out of place. It is very well to single first one and then another idea out for exploitation, but where the production is a drama or a high class offering the connection with the picture itself should be made clear. No matter how well you may work your plan out it is pretty certain that the public will know that it is being "kidded," and when you are able to come along and offer the people something in the way of laughs they will enter into the spirit of it, and that since the ad. man is taking the trouble to play this end there must be something in the offering itself worth their while.

My first experience in Canada with this method of advertising was with Marguerite Clark in "Girls." Reports had come from various sections that the star had lost a great portion of her drawing power and in some instances managers had put on "double bills" to make the appeal stronger. In playing the single picture it was manifestly the remedy to put the selling argument on the picture itself and allow the star to be only incidental. The teaser is certainly calculated to arouse advance interest and here the offering was straight comedy.

Front of the Allen theatre, Calgary, for "Girls" engagement.

I found the tip for the teaser in a four column advertisement in the Famous Players-Lasky press book. This followed the usual policy of putting practically all the emphasis on the star, but the illustration embraced the pictures of the three girl characters and under these in small type were the respective sentences: "See No Man," "Listen to No Man," "Kiss No Man." It is apparent to every one that the three lines used alone would attract the attention of every woman and lots of the men. So this we proceeded to do. We set the three line in 14 pt. type, of bold face, and placed one of these on every page of the newspapers two days before we announced the name of the picture. In some cases we carried these for more than one day, but we found that the single insertion was sufficient.

As a matter of fact I believe that it is a mistake to prolong a teaser campaign over too long a time. With the first appearance of such advertising the average reader is apt to suspect that there is a trick about it and his curiosity will be aroused to a sufficiently high pitch to watch the papers for a couple of days to see what it is all about, but if the time is prolonged you are apt to find your prospective patron losing interest.

Now while a few newspapers in Canada are called the Sunday World and the like, as a matter of fact they are printed and distributed on Saturday on account of the laws prohibiting their publication and sale on Sunday. So we are really confined to the Saturday afternoon papers to making the announcement that would appear in the real Sunday issues in the United States.

Therefore we carried the "See No Man," etc. teasers in the Thursday issues and then on Friday we came along with an announcement inviting the girls of the city to join the Man Haters Club. These were set along the style generally adopted by associations being organized, club notices and the like. In these advertisements the lines from the first teaser were repeated, this time they being given as the motto of the club. In addition "M. Clark" was named as the president of the club and the street and number of the theatre was given as the place for filing applications.

Then on Saturday came the definite announcement. The man-hater idea was now developed in the minds of everyone, and therefore the catch line to use in the large advertising was something that would immediately connect the people with the teaser campaign and at the same time induce them to read the rest of the display so that we would sell them the picture itself. So we used as the top line "How They Hated Men." Below this we carried the illustration from the Famous Players-Lasky press book and then our own selling argument on the picture, building it on the girl idea and also bringing out the fact that this was made from the play by Clyde Fitch. The name of the star was now made prominent, but it was only after we had rivetted the attention of the public through the teaser and then had sold the picture on its own merit.

This general plan was carried out in most of the cities in which the picture was played and the reports were uniform that it did big business — bigger in the cities where the teaser campaign was tried than in the others. The advertisements that are reproduced here are those of our Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan, theatre. This is a city of 25,000, yet the plan that worked well here was also used in Toronto, a city just twenty times as large.

The teasers were slightly varied in Toronto by combining the three line teaser and the announcement of the Man Haters club. Although this campaign was used in only one newspaper it brought dozens of callers to the Allen theatre. Even then they did not stop, but numerous calls on the phone demanded the details of the organization. Similar advertising was used in the Saturday papers.

In the case of "Girls" this plan of advertising was largely an experiment since it has been given little attention in Canadian cities, but since trying it in some of the smaller cities and in the second largest city in the Dominion I am satisfied that this plan works well regardless of the size of the town when you use this in connection with the right sort of a picture. That this was proven to my satisfaction is shown by the fact that we have held up our regular plan of advertising in order to put through the teaser on a picture that we are showing at the Allen theatre, Toronto.

Unquestionably the greatest value of this type of advertising is to arouse the curiosity—to get the people talking. I have seen some advice that care should be taken to avoid displays on the picture in front of the theatre because this "will give away the fact that the advertising is about a picture." That is all rot. Probably nine-tenths of the people suspect that it refers to a picture any way, and if you can get them to walk down to your house and take a look you certainly have aroused enough interest to be pretty sure that they will come to see the offering.

It was with that idea in view that Manager J. F. Price of the Allen theatre, Calgary, reproduce the heads of the three girls in front of his lobby with the inscription below them.

Let me say that I realize that the teaser idea is one that must not be worked often. As a general proposition I would rather advertise the pictures on their merits. My usual campaign includes a full seven days advertising on each production — counting the so called Sunday issues but there are times when it pays and when it stimulates interest itself to depart from the routine especially when the picture permits you to give the people the advance suggestion of a laugh.

Tom Moore's Birds Are Birds

THIS is not a story of birds as we are won't to hear the word used in the gargon of film language but a tale of the two-winged, feathered kind. Neither does it concern Tom Moore, the actor being a chronicle about Tom Moore, the Washington exhibitor, owner of the Rialto, the Strand and the Garden theatres in the Capitol city.

To be specific, it is a story about the canary birds which adorn the foyer of Mr. Moore's Rialto Theatre.

The Rialto boasts a large oval foyer between the lobby and the auditorium, a beautiful room where patrons wishing to crowd in to see Moore's shows may wait.

Around the room in cages are placed a dozen or more canaries who fill the air with melody with their bird language carols so long as the music in the theatre can be heard. Their music is not the usual thin trill of the breed but full-throated joyous notes of the trained singers, since they are specially selected specimens from a well-bred family.

The thing which surprised the writer is the fact that at 11.00 o'clock P. M. the canaries are still singing away oblivious to the fact that bed time in bird land has long since arrived.

Mr. Moore is authority for a little story of his pets' peculiarities. In the winter time it is necessary to protect the birds at night and cloth slip covers have been provided to pull down over the cages. This of course shuts out the light. Hours after the birds would be expected to have retired, it is not unusual to hear from one of the cages a faint "peep" and then from some other cages a "peep peep" which will travel around the room. Then the whole company will burst into song that will continue for five minutes to be hushed as suddenly as it began, a sort of grand finale for the evening's performance.

Here is a Brand New Exploitation Stunt Used In Denver

THE aeroplane has become such a common thing for exploitation purposes in putting over pictures that much of it's potency has been lost, but the Princess Theatre of Denver has managed to dig up something in the aeroplane line which certainly must have proven a banner attention attracter and made a whole lot of talk.

When the Princess booked "The Grim Game," the Houdini film, T. A. Sullivan, the house's enterprising manager, looked about for something novel in the way of publicity stunts.

Now the wreck of an aeroplane, a most thrilling and convincing sequence, is one of the film's notable features, so Mr. Sullivan conceived the idea of getting a real wrecked aeroplane and setting it up in the Princess' lobby.

He found one, just where we don't know, and soon had the big machine mounted as you will see by the accompanying illustrations.

There could be no mistaking the fact that the machine had been wrecked. It looked as if it had been through the world war, for it was battered and banged and it's paint had long since disappeared. The crowds which began to collect the moment the machine was exhibited convinced Mr. Sullivan that he had picked a winner, but he did not stop with just showing the frame of the plane. The big powerful gas motor was carted to the theatre and placed on exhibition also. Now, there was a far-sighted knowledge of human nature evidenced by the showman when he set the engine of the plane up for inspection. Machinery has a strange fascination for a great many people. They like to look at the evidence of man's ingenuity and will inspect the intricate parts of a motor as if they were experts. Especially is this true of the male sex and consequently the Princess had a crowd of men and women about it's lobby every hour of the "The Grim Game's" showing. Our caption "The Best Exploitation Stunt of the Week" is temporarily laid aside during the publication of the News in this size but if it were in vogue this week, this stunt would surely have been run under it.

Ushers Are Attired in Broadcloth for "Broken Blossoms"

IF your better half is always wanting to "do something" about the theater and feels slighted when you infer that you don't think so much of her ideas on showmanship and you are looking for an opportunity to let her help in the conduct of "your house" besides run "her own house" meaning the one at which you tell the baker man to deliver the bread, all you have to do is to follow the example of J. J. Parker president of the Majestic Amusement Corporation of Portland Oregon when he played "Broken Blossoms."

Prior to the week the Majestic was to play the Griffith feature, its president and manager began looking about for some suitable exploitation stunts.

They decided to dress the stage and auditorium appropriately and to costume their ushers in Chinese clothing.

It was in carrying out the latter idea that Mrs. Parker was pressed into service. The eight girl ushers of the house were turned over to Mrs. Parker and they all repaired to the dressmakers. The result accruing from the combined ideas of the several females was the array of costumes which you will see in the accompanying cut of the theatre stage taken during the "Broken Blossoms" showing.

Further inspection of the cut will give you an idea of the stage decorations used at the Majestic. The result of the two stunts is said to have been productive of much favorable comment from patrons and is thought to have been a potent factor in the business the film did at this house.

Sounds Like a Fish Story But It's Gospel Truth

THIS sounds like a "fish story" but it is gospel truth. We took pains to verify the statements made even after receiving the "dope" for our story from a very reliable source, since any instance of a show playing all night and all day in a town of ten thousand inhabitants has never been recorded, but this is what "Back to God's Country" did in Owosso, Mich., not for one day, but for three days and three nights.

You will want to know a plausible reason why any film or any show, no matter how good it was or who was the star, could keep people out of their beds. We did too and here it is. James Oliver Curwood who wrote the magazine story of "Wapi, The Walrus" from which "Back to God's Country" is adapted, claims Owosso as his home town and it was the tieing in with local color and the fact that the engagement for the film was limited to the three days which made possible such a record as we are about to make public.

Local color is one of our pet theories, not theory either, since it has been demonstrated thousands of times that the greatest bet in the show game is playing the local talent angle. It never fails, whether the town be ten hundred, ten thousand or ten million in population. People are born with a pride in their own town just as they are born with a pride for their nation.

The Strand Theatre of Owosso booked "Back to God's Country" for three days, an extra long run for any feature, because it realized the exploitation possibilities of using the home ties of the author as a local color campaign for the picture; consequently the Strand management went after the business by emphasizing the fact that this production was from the pen of the world-famous James Oliver Curwood, who loved Owosso folks so much he lived among them.

Into all parts of that district of Michigan which surrounds Owosso, went the word that the famous and friendly author's work would be the attraction at the Strand Theatre. It was through a sense of psychological showmanship that the Strand management preferred to harp on the personal intimacy with James Oliver Curwood rather than upon the many exploitation possibilities for novel work.

Before the picture was scheduled to open, it was noticed that out-of-towners began registering at the few hotels in Owosso, which is credited with a combined population of 10,039 people. All mercantile businesses, especially retailers, noticed a surprising rise in business. The American Legion representatives gathered a big street crowd for the first time in a month and all local restaurants ran out of clean napkins. Luckily, the local laundry girls were not on a strike.

The management of the Strand was in a predicament. He had booked "Back to God's Country" for a three days' run. He telephoned the First National Exchange of Detroit and attempted to extend the run. It was impossible.

There was only thing to do. The management of the theatre called upon James Oliver Curwood and outlined a plan for running the picture all night until the majority of the people could see it.

Curwood smiled and replied:

"There is no picture or author that a crowd would stay up all night to see. It's never been heard of and you may turn the whole thing into a fizzle."

"Not on your tintype," replied the manager. "I am going to run all night shows and start the day's performances at eight o'clock in the morning. You don't need to look horrified, Mr. Curwood. You may be the author and supervisor of this production and part owner of the Curwood-Carver Company which produced it, but once the exchange rents it to me for my good money I am going to do as I see fit with it."

"Go ahead," replied Curwood. "I'm with you strong!"

It was necessary to employ three shifts of ushers, ticket takers and operators.

But the theatre cleared the biggest profit in its history.

Grand Junction Isn't Much on the Map But It Boasts a Live Wire Showman

THIS story is mostly "boost" something which is usually taboo in the Service Bureau, since our aim is to aid and encourage exhibitors in becoming better showmen.

It is the encouragement angle which has led us to publish this rather personal article concerning one Ole N. Nelson a Colorado exhibitor.

We figure that any time we tell a story of some exhibitor who is a better showman than the average in the size town in which he resides and does things better than other exhibitors of his class, that we are presenting to their view an example which should be an inspiration.

An exploitation man in New York sits back, with pride in his heart as he thinks of the great stunt he put over when he issued a single page of newspaper material on some special feature. But out in Grand Junction, Colo. surely you will be forgiven if you never have heard of the place, where, according to the city folks, they don't know very much, that would be a commonplace publicity idea.

Every now and then the name of Ole N. Nelson comes up in the home office of some bug film concern back East through the medium of some very fat contract he has just signed. Ole is Manager of the Majestic Theatre in Grand Junction, and the chances are that some time in his life he lived in New York, or was there on a visit, because he is always referring to the big city.

A few years ago there were 7,500 persons in Grand Junction. Today there may be 8,000, but not many more. Yet Nelson puts on a show that would do justice to a town of ten times that size. But the main point about this story is that Nelson is a great press agent. He doesn't spend his time knocking the material he gets from the branch manager; but, every week he gets out his own paper — four pages, and of regular newspaper size. When he obtains material that suits him, it appears in this paper. When he doesn't, he writes it himself.

Thirty-five hundred persons in Grand Junction and surrounding points get a copy of "The Movie Fan" each Wednesday. The rural routes Nelson covers by machine. In the urban districts he has seven carriers distributing his papers. This sounds like a tremendously costly proposition, but Ole sees to it that it isn't. His newspaper carriers advertising each week from the leading merchants of his town; and this practically covers the entire cost of producing the sheet.

In his last issue, Nelson devoted almost a full page to "The Thirteenth Chair," which he considered one of the best box office pictures he ever saw. His judgment was verified by the returns he obtained from the picture.

"Big town stuff put on in big town fashion" is Nelson's slogan. "There may be better pictures than you see at the Majestic, but we don't know where you'll find them" is another typical Nelson line.

Ole never charges more than twenty-five cents for a seat. He has played the biggest productions at these prices, and made money too.

Gusdanovic Theatres Play Phillips Feature

PAUL GUSDANOVIC, the Cleveland exhibitor, recently played "The Right to Happiness" to a most successful engagement at the Strand and Orpheum theatres which was characterized by a heavy exploitation campaign even for Cleveland, which goes in for extensive advertising on nearly every first class picture released.

In the Phillips' feature, Gusdanovic recognized an unusual opportunity for exploitation and appropriated twenty-five hundred dollars for his advertising campaign.

For four weeks previous to the opening of the picture, all three daily papers carried small one-inch "teaser" ads in black or white style bearing the words, "Have You the Right to Happiness?" and a line drawing scene cut of Dorothy Phillips' head at the left.

Thousands of hanger cards and bells were hung over the entire city and in every street car the week previous and a gang of newsboys were engaged to plaster the windshields of every automobile in the uptown section with small "Right to Happiness" stickers.

Twenty-five 24 sheets, together with hundreds of one sheets were pasted in every corner of the city.

This was aside from the special newspaper publicity, including special big reviews of the pictures by the dramatic editors themselves instead of the usual movie editor reviews, obtained by means of an elaborate screening at the Hotel Winton with an orchestra.

But one of the biggest drawing cards in all the advertising stunts was the front on each house. At the Orpheum, Manager Ryder carried out literally the early Russian scenes of the picture by decorating his marquise with a real Russian tower.

At the Strand, Manager Surrell had three large cut-outs of three sheets made for his easels and the box office was specially made up with an attractively colored beaver board arrangement. A specially painted banner, bearing scenes from the picture stretched across the entire front of the house.

The result was that both houses were packed to the doors all during the opening day until closing time, despite damp nasty weather that constantly threatened a big storm. On the following day it rained all day until midnight, causing almost every motion picture theater in the city except the Strand and Orpheum to appear very much deserted.

The business for the remainder of the week will go down in the records of the two theaters to be pointed to with much pride in the future.

Unique Lobby Display Advertises Latest Kerrigan Film

JOHN SIEFERT, one of Ohio's up to the minute showmen and manager of the Rialto theatre of Dayton, recently constructed a most unique lobby display for "A White Man's Chance."

As much of the action in the Kerrigan picture has Mexico for its locale, there was the atmosphere of the revolt-ridden southern republic in every available inch of lobby space. In the centre Mr. Seifert had an oxcart closely resembling the one in which the handsome hero enters a Mexican village in his search of love and adventure. In the cart was a figure in cardboard closely resembling the star.

Around the vehicle and all the way to the box-office was strewn imitation cacti, through which the crowds waded good naturedly to purchase tickets. Overhead, from one end of the lobby to the other, there were a hundred sombreros hanging over electric light bulbs. The Rialto's lady ushers brought the Mexican atmosphere inside the theatre by wearing sombreros throughout the presentation.

During the showing Mr. Seifert furnished a surprise by having the curtain raised where the star as a pseudo Spanish nobleman is entertaining the heroine with his mandolin. The Seifert Symphony Orchestra struck up a Spanish number and on the stage came a quartet of Spanish dancers and singers. After a ten-minute exhibition the curtain was lowered and the picture resumed amid applause at every performance.

Here is a Good Advertising Stunt

IN Elwood, Ind., Manager S. Mackey of the Baby Grand won the cooperation of the leading merchant, R. L. Leeson & Co. This firm issues a weekly house paper with a large mailing list. Manager Mackey had the Leeson company make one issue with this heading "The Miracle Merchant of Elwood" and much of the issue was devoted to telling of the "Miracle Man" visit to the Baby Grand theater.

This old lady didn't live in a shoe but in a new automobile.

The Olympia theatre's, Pittsburg, Pa., decorations for "The Right to Happiness" showing.

Some New Advertising Stunts For Phillips Film In Pittsburgh

WITH a lobby display that libelled the entrances to many gardens, and a little added exploitation George Tomopolis succeeded in playing "The Right to Happiness" to a record breaking crowd recently at the Olympic Theatre, in Pittsburgh.

After showing the picture, he decided to go a little more into detail into its exploitation, an immense sign over the entrance in electric lights, carried the wording, "The Right to Happiness," and a second sign hung from the ceiling in the lobby, had a similar sign announcing the fact that Dorothy Phillips appeared in the production. He took advantage on his excellent lobby and used four one sheet stands with stills and portrait pictures of the star and the production. Above the cashier's cage was an immense oil portrait of Dorothy Phillips. On each side wall of the lobby were large cut-outs showing the action of the star in the picture.

Taking advantage of the season, the manager contrived to arrange branches of trees with the beautifully colored leaves showing to great advantage.

The Olympic lobby display, during the week of the run of "THE RIGHT TO HAPPINESS" was one of the neatest ever arranged in Pittsburgh.

Not content to please his patrons as they entered the theatre but in order to obtain more of them he originated the idea of having an elderly country woman ride about town in a very popular make of car. She would stop in a very busy section, get up and profess ignorance of the town and amazement of the different things she saw. Such a character naturally drew a large crowd. When a sufficiently large crowd had collected, the old country woman then amazed the crowd by opening her pocketsack and allow them to read a sign reading "Its Yours, The Right to Happiness, at the Olympic Theatre now."

Another very effective medium was employed in sending to all parts of the city, a more expensive automobile, with a pleasant looking colored chauffeur and a newly wedded couple in the tonneau of the car. On each side of the car hung a sign, having the same wording as did the one used by the old country woman. This attracted much attention and a bit of humour was accepted as a clever piece of work.

The expense of exploitation in this manner is not only very small, but informs the public that they have a wide-a-wake showman in their town.

Wichita Eagle gives Photoplays Attention

THREE pages of advertising and free space are devoted to motion pictures in the Oct. 19th Eagle edition of the Wichita (Kansas) Eagle.

On the first page is a nice layout of the stars which will appear at the local theatres during the current week. On all three pages, a lot of interesting theatrical chatter none of it long winded or press agent bunk is sandwiched in among the nice lot of displays used by the several motion picture houses. In fact we have seen very few papers which are giving more space to the photoplay than is the Eagle nor do we find many which equal it in the quality of the text used.

The pages are edited by Flora Parsons under the title of theatrical editor. Among the displays, were one on "The Brat," "The Miracle Man" and also nearly a half page of one of Paramount-Artcrafts National ads.

Here they all are, the famous characters which "Little Mary" knew in "The Hoodlum." This is a scene from the Tivoli theatre prologue for the Pickford film's engagement

Exploitation Which Added to the Entertainment Value of the Show

CASTING a new light upon the nature and value of exploitation, Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli Theatre, San Francisco, has opened a line of thought for exhibitors who are desirous of appropriating money for the cause of exploitation and yet are anxious to improve their performance through this extra expenditure.

Probably the most significant thought about Costello's action which resulted in putting over a special feature attraction with the greatest success ever known to the star or to the theatre, is the fact that every cent spent in his exploitation was spent in making a more enjoyable show for Tivoli patrons.

In brief Costello adopted the idea that exhibitor-exploitation is not only possible on the outside of the theatre, through the medium of newspapers, billboards, various "tie-ups" and special novelty stunts. He further showed that it is possible within the very walls of a theatre.

"Without the shade of a doubt," said Costello, "some of the greatest teaser campaigns and most helpful exploitation efforts have been accomplished by a series of slides. It is not necessary to be continually reaching out into the mass of citizens attempting to sell non-theatre goers tickets to your show. I venture to say that five out of the average eight persons are theatregoers. Some are more particular than others, it is true. There are about two persons in every ten who don't go to the theatre and who won't go. To try to reach those two is a waste of money.

"When I mapped out my exploitation procedure for 'The Hoodlum,' I was well aware that the campaign must be unusual. I do not want to go on record as opposed to sensational billboard campaigns and smashing newspaper advertisements. I am heartily in favor of such methods when the theme of the picture adapts itself to such methods.

"But to me 'The Hoodlum' meant something different. In the first place the name of the star and story was incentive enough for fifty per cent of the average theatregoers. The other half had to be reached by special work. I decided that it was to my advantage to so arrange my campaign that the money spent would aid in pleasing the public as well as bringing them to the the theatre."

Thus Costello explains the sentiment which prompted his action. Here, the story is no longer up to him. It is best told by the succession of newspaper criticisms and the many lauding articles that told how Costello had conceived a prologue that would go down in San Francisco Theatrical History as one of the greatest novelties ever presented at a motion picture theatre. To be sure, the picture was a source of public comment. But it was the originality Costello showed in his preparation of a prologue that created the greatest attention, that caused those who had seen the picture to speak of it to others, that branded "The Hoodlum" and its tenement people, its poorly-clad urchins, its policeman, its crapshooting, its hurdy-gurdy shimmie dance, its Dish Lowry and its bartender, its Cohan and its Murphy and its Amy Burke, in the memory of the people of San Francisco.

There was another reason that combined with the foregoing to prompt Costello to go to the expense and worry and labor to arrange this prologue. San Francisco is a city of color. It has the artistic sense inbred. Moreover it is familiar with the colorful Latin Quarter where those of a dozen nationalities are cast in the melting pot. This thought appealed to the people of the Golden Gate.

Perhaps the most interesting part of Costello's exploitation campaign is the fact that it can be adapted for use by any exhibitor. The scene was that of a tenement street. The principals were two small girls, dressed in tenement garb, and dancers of unusual ability, a trio consisting of a street vendor, a bartender and a

Kingston Exhibitor Gives "Evangeline" Unique Exploitation

AN example of the most dignified exploitation of a motion picture ever utilized by an exhibitor was that presented by the window of Forsyth & Davis, a high-class bookstore in the city of Kingston, N. Y., during the recent run of the screen version of Longfellow's immortal poem, "Evangeline."

G. Gildersleeve, manager of the Kingston Opera House, where "Evangeline" was booked for a three-day run, is one of the industry's most conservative theatre men. With the closing of dates for showing the picture, Mr. Gildersleeve immediately inaugurated an advertising campaign wholly novel in his section.

A canvass of the churches, schools, literary societies and clubs was begun, Messrs. Forsyth & Davis, proprietors of the most select box and music store in Kingston, were approached on the subject of advertising the screen version of the Longfellow poem, and the opportunity to create an increased demand for the song based on the story, as well as for handsomely bound volumes of the poem and of the complete works of the poet Longfellow.

In the window of the bookstore was arranged the most impressive display of pictures from the play, books of all sizes containing the school edition of "Evangeline," a beautifully framed portrait of Longfellow, and indorsements of the photoplay by societies and clubs. In the center, very conservatively displayed, was the announcement of the opening date of the picture at the Kingston Opera House.

Mr. Gildersleeve declares that the manner in which this window was dressed, the simplicity of it, and the artistic effect of the whole, played an important part in the box office returns on the picture. It also aroused considerable comment throughout Kingston.

The theatre also was dressed by Mr. Gildersleeve in a manner most befitting the atmosphere and locale of the play. Great boughs of trees from the hills outside of Kingston were brought in, and a veritable bower of foliage and artificial blossoms made the Opera House the most attractive theatre in town.

Rough wooden frames, with the bark still on them, surrounded the lobby and entrance to the house, as well as the box office and many beautiful scenes from "Evangeline" were displayed advantageously about the entrance.

Doric of K. C. Uses Lobby Display for "Broken Blossoms"

"BROKEN BLOSSOMS" is being given one of its first showings to western cities at the Doric Theatre, Kansas City, and Manager A. E. Eisner is presenting the artistic production with all the exotic and beautiful setting of an Eastern background and atmosphere.

To enter the foyer one walks on Japanese matting. On each side of the box office are huge figures of Buddah with incense offerings at their feet. The entire foyer is covered on the ceiling and sides with lattice work interwoven with Japanese lanterns and Oriental blooms. In one corner of the foyer is a large tree of cherry blossoms.

Ushers in exquisite Japanese robes usher the visitor into a veritable temple through Tori gates that cover all of the entrances. The lattice work is used in the interior, and soft colored lanterns line the walls. Incense is burned inside the theatre during performances.

On each side of the stage, but not on the stage proper, are dimly lit temples. On the stage proper is a Japanese bridge.

The orchestra, which plays the beautiful "Broken Blossoms" score, has been augmented. An unusually good violinist adds to the beauty of production and setting.

Financially speaking, Manager Eisner has had no cause as yet to complain and the production will be held over at least another week.

Exploitation Which Added To Entertainment

policeman. The scene with more than twenty children playing in the street. A monkey was gaily cavorting to the tune of a hurdy-gurdy. As the various melodies were ground out, the two girl dancers went into their specialty effort.

At the psychological moment the policeman broke into the scene, scattering all the youngsters except one who refused to go, saying his mother was no longer at home — that she was in Heaven. This introduced a song by the trio entitled, "I Hear You Calling Me."

Costello's original prologue did more than establish a wonderful box-office record. It established for all time the equality of the motion picture with the spoken drama. One by one the San Francisco newspapers sent their dramatic critics to view the spectacle and one by one each newspaper published a glowing endorsement of the entertainment. Not one shaft of criticism was heard. To print the dramatic critic accounts of the performance would be a repetition of superlatively favorable accounts.

The most striking feature of the exploitation campaign that did not go outside of the theatre is that it proved that exploitation is not limited in methods and that besides newspapers and billboards there are other ways of promoting the interests of a motion picture.

More Good Stuff From Medford, Ore.

THE Liberty Theatre of Medford, Oregon, is not a stranger to the readers of the News, since several of its campaigns of exploitation on pictures in the way of illustrations of lobby displays have been published.

In the accompanying cut you will see another of manager Henry Harcke's lobby displays, this time the feature on which he has practised this form of publicity being "A Romance of Happy Valley."

It is quite possible that this particular display isn't going to be of any great interest to many of our readers at this time of the year since the green boughs, grass and flowers of which the display is principally composed have been bitten by the frost in most sections of our country but a next spring is coming and also without doubt other pictures on which a display of this sort would be as appropriate will be released. Therefore, the idea and the way the display was built is worth while remembering.

Mr. Harcke has a small theatre in a small town yet he finds it profitable to go in for lobby displays, many of which are more elaborate than the one shown in the cut. In fact, Mr. Harcke is a first class contradiction of the theory that good showmanship is wasted effort in small towns and that lobby displays and such exploitation do not pay until you get up into the week run houses. We don't know how long Mr. Harcke does run his films, but imagine a couple of days is the average.

GRAUMAN STAGES DECIDED NOVELTY

SID GRAUMAN has originated a decided novelty for this week's bill at Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles. It is entitled "Tour Through Grauman's," and consists of close-up views of the theatre "back stage."

A special stage setting has been constructed, an interior with grand stairways to right and left at the back. The act which runs about twenty minutes, opens with a solo by Gladys Allen, who sings an introduction, addressing herself to Organist Minor. Mr. Minor follows with a demonstration of the range of the famous instrument at the Grauman. The chief operator of the picture machines then introduces himself and gives a demonstration of how pictures are projected. A miniature screen is dropped and "A Doll's House," a short subject, is run off. Next is a solo by Clyde Peterson, which introduces orchestra director Arthur Kay, who then directs an orchestral number from the stage. The theatre's chief electrician then introduces himself and explains how lighting effects are accomplished. The mammoth switchboard is moved to the center of the stage and a demonstration given. The act is concluded by the appearance of the thirty-two usherettes of the house. Four of this force present a dance and a fancy drill.

The act is going over for the biggest hit of the season.

Hammons Controls Projector

Portable Projection Machine, Invention of E. J. Hadley, Controlled by Educational President

THE purchase of the world's rights for the distribution of a new and greatly improved portable projection machine is announced by Vice-President E. W. Hammons, of the Educational Films Corporation of America, as one of the features of the new policy for the coming year.

The machine, which will be known as "The Rotary" is said to be different in many essential details from any that have been offered by inventors thus far. It includes all the advantages of the massive theatrical projector, without sacrificing the requirements of the perfect portable machine.

Speaking of the new venture, Mr. Hammons says, "We have carefully investigated more than a dozen portable machines during the past five years. A constant succession of models have passed through our hands, and all have had their good points, but in every case we have encountered one or more disadvantages which seemed to off-set the other features and thus rendered them of doubtful practical value.

"The 'Rotary' is the first device which we have inspected that has stood up under our tests. The public will realize that the primary object of the Educational Films Corporation is to manufacture and distribute moving picture films, and that we cannot lend our name to the sale of a projection machine unless that machine is certain to result in 100% satisfactory operation.

"Anything less than that would be disastrous, and I have therefore satisfied myself that the "Rotary"—in operation—will provide such service that will be certain to increase the use of motion pictures. The sale of the new projector is closely allied with our activities in the non-theatrical field, and we feel secure in our belief that the machine will open up new markets and make certain the satisfactory operation of a portable projector."

A striking feature of the new machine is the use of the patented rotary presser movement instead of the ordinary intermittent device. Besides the difference in weight, the rotary movement is much easier on the film, eliminating entirely the quick, jerky pull which is the objectional feature of the usual intermittent device, when working at even ordinary speeds.

The extensive use of "maglanite"—a newly invented variety of hardened aluminum, which costs $1.25 per pound, and which is much used in the manufacture of aeroplane motors—is responsible for the unusual weight, or, rather, lack of weight, in the new "Rotary" machine. In spite of the extra equipment and protective devices which are included, the total weight is less than twenty-five pounds.

The advantage of using standard film, with the most powerful light that has yet been provided in a small machine; motor-driven wind and rewinding devices and fireproof construction which keeps the film separate from the lamp and which makes unnecessary the use of a massive asbestos booth, are a few of the many features which have influenced Mr. Hammons in his selection.

"The Rotary" is the invention of Edwin J. Hadley, a projection engineer and pioneer exhibitor, who is acknowledged to be one of the best known experts in the motion picture field.

"The Confession" Wins Praise

Joe Brandt Reports That its First Exhibition in Boston Has Gained Approval of Public and Press

"THE CONFESSION," the latest production of the National Film Corporation, starring Henry Walthall, was, according to reports received here, the object of considerable public approval and the recipient of some highly commendatory press reviews, following its initial performance in Boston last week.

Joe Brandt, general representative of the National, is highly elated at the success of the picture, and as an instance of the approbation with which the first showing was received, submits the following selection taken from the columns of the "Boston Pilot":

"It is rather refreshing to turn from the moving pictures of the day and other salacious themes and questionable situations to the photoplay exhibited in this city this week, entitled "The Confession." It is a story of real human interest, beautifully depicted on the screen and conveys a noble lesson. The plot hinges upon the theme of the confessional and shows a Catholic priest ready to suffer torture and a loss of all his loved ones rather than break the seal of the confessional. The best way to remove objectionable films from our picture houses is to substitute pictures like 'The Confession.' It marks an epoch in the moving picture world."

Bulls Eye Issues Mercury Comics

Bulls Eye Film Corporation announces that it will release the "Mercury Comedies," starring Milburn Moranti. Grover Jones is the director.

Dorothy Dalton is star in "The Flame of the Youkon," which is to be released by Triangle.

Barton Pipe Organ, a Bartoli Product, Soon on Market

The Barton Pipe Organ, manufactured by the Bartola Musical Instrument Company, will put on the market within thirty days, according to sales manager, Arthur J. Abrams, who is elated over the quality of the new instrument which he declares is an "eighteen carat" pipe organ, containing many radical improvements.

Mr. Abrams has been identified with moving pictures as producer and sales manager and is widely known as the man who successively synchronized moving pictures and phonographs. He predicts a great demand for the new Barton Pipe Organ from theatre owners who desire to give their patrons the best to be had in the way of music, and says that several are waiting the completion of the instrument to have one installed in their houses.

Rothacker Laboratory Work on "Old Kentucky" Wins Praise

After viewing the first print of "In Old Kentucky," Mr. Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," wired the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company as follows:

"I cannot say too much in praise of the print of 'In Old Kentucky,' which I witnessed the other evening. You ought to be congratulated on the beautiful tinting and upon the all-around quality which have added much to an already magnificent production.

The same day the Rothacker offices received a wire from Louis B. Mayer's New York office reading as follows:

"Accept our heartiest thanks and congratulations on your splendnd prints of 'In Old Kentucky.' The laboratory work, tinting and toning is the finest we have ever seen. They are truly worthy of the wonderful production which 'In Old Kentucky' has turned out to be."

Song on Elsie Janis' First Selznick Picture Scores

All New York is seeing, talking, singing, whistling and humming "A Regular Girl." Elsie Janis, America's beloved comedienne and the queen of pep and personality is the big reason for the wave of enthusiasm which is sweeping Manhattan from all corners.

Miss Janis' first Selznick Picture, "A Regular Girl," opened for an indefinite run at B. S. Moss' Broadway Theatre on Monday last, and the Selznick exploitation forces, under the supervision of Director of Exploitation and Publicity Hunt Stromberg, paved the way for novel promotion that aided in attracting the crowds in record numbers.

A line of ticket-seekers that extended from the Broadway's box-office clear down to Thirty-ninth street bore mute evidence of the popularity of Elsie Janis and the effectiveness of Selznick exploitation. The appearance of Miss Janis in her first Selznick production had been announced by means of large display space in New York newspapers, supplemented by over 5,000 half-sheets, twenty-fours, painted bulletins, electric signs and other forms of exterior advertising.

Kinograms Offering Variety of Current Events on Screen

The present release of Kinograms opens with some striking scenes of the departure of King Albert of Belgium on the George Washington from Old Point Comfort at the end of his extended visit to the United States. Another monarch, the Marajah of Punjab had a regal celebration of his birthday in Lahore, India, and several interesting scenes are shown of the native customs.

The Deutschland, the German submarine which disappeared mysteriously during the war, arrived to the great amazement of everyone in the Thames, London. A peek into the manufacture of paper for our big dailies is given when several scenes are shown of the cutting of timber for the pulp mills in the spruce forests of British Columbia.

The scene changes to Cleveland, O., and describes a demonstration of a newly designed plane that delivers mail without stopping. At San Francisco the new Japanese envoy to the United States, His Excellency, Kijure Shidehara, arrived and received a hearty welcome by the Japanese Legation.

Madlaine Traverse Will Lead in "Lost Money," Fox Release

Madlaine Traverse is the star of "Lost Money," the Fox feature which is to be released this month, and in the role of Judith Atherstone, the emotional actress, finds a woman, who, from a petted and pampered daughter of wealth, passes to the position of absolute slave to a big, uncouth diamond hunter.

But four players are cast in "Lost Money." Denison Clift, the author, and Edmund Lawrence, the director, are said to have produced a photoplay that is novel in settings, in atmosphere, in construction and in development. Supporting the accomplished star are George McDaniel, Henry Hebert and Edin B. Tilton.

Robertson-Cole's Activities

Reports success of "Get Together Week;" Marked Rise in Business Reported Lately

"THE Get Together Week" inaugurated by Robertson-Cole which commenced on November 9th is reported to have proved most successful. Exhibitors in all sections of the country are said to have united to make this undertaking a memorable one. In addition to running Robertson-Cole special productions the entire week, there was a separate campaign for get-together contracts. Many exhibitors were enticed to try the Robertson-Cole productions for the week, and so successful was their initial attempt that hundreds of new contracts are now, according to reports, in the home office as the result of this convincing box-office proof.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, vice-president and general manager of the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, is said to be more than elated on the success of the national campaign. In Chicago, San Francisco, Atlanta, Ga., St. Louis, Cleveland, New Orleans, Washington, Philadelphia and other large cities, the exchanges distributing Robertson-Cole releases are reported to have broken all records for weekly averages.

Mr. Kirkpatrick also points out that the D. W. Griffith studios in Los Angeles, California, have been acquired for Sessue Hayakawa productions which are made for Robertson-Cole by the Haworth Company. "We have planned some of the largest productions ever screened starring this great Japanese star, and with the addition of the new studios, this work can be pushed forth with a high degree of efficiency and quality," announces Mr. Kirkpatrick.

Representatives of Robertson-Cole have wired that exhibitors in every section of the country are packing their houses since the country went bone dry and that the motion picture enters a new era of prosperity with the closing of the saloon door. "The motion picture house has taken the place of the back room of the saloon," declared Mr. Kirkpatrick. "Statistics gathered by the Robertson-Cole Distributing Company during the past week shows that almost every motion picture temple has increased its business two-fold."

To Exploit "Blind Husbands"

Elaborate Press-Sheet Containing Much Useful Ad and Publicity Material, at Exchanges

OFFICIALS of the Universal Company believe that exhibitors will be pleased to hear that a newspaper press-sheet on "Blind Husbands" has been shipped to all Universal exchanges. The Stroheim production has offered such possibilities for exploitation that it was decided to issue a specially edited press-sheet for the picture.

The press-sheet is composed of eight sheets of advertising cuts and publicity. One side of several of the total of twelve pages is left blank, permitting clipping of the sheet for use with newspaper editors. The cover page is the reproduction of one of the posters used in the poster campaign. It shows a man striving to retain his hold on a mountain which forms the head of a woman. The cover page or the next page which has a full length reproduction of Eric Von Stroheim may be used for lobby displays or newspaper ads. One full page ad is devoted to small scenes of the production and the announcement of the picture as a new class of photoplay art.

Two half-page ads and four quarter-page ads are included Each is worded in a different manner, thus enabling the exhibitor to use a style of his own choice or one similar to his usual construction. Five two columns and five one-column ad cuts are reproduced. Advertising catch lines also appear.

The musical setting for the entire production is included, as well as two and one-half pages of copy suitable for newspapers. Some of the stories contained are short ones adaptable for pre-showing use, while others are criticisms and comments.

Two three-column, four two-column and three one-column scene publicity cuts are reproduced. Each cut reproduced in this press-sheet is available in either electro or mat form at any of the Universal exchanges.

Holly Comedies Studios Damaged by Fire Being Rebuilt

The work of rebuilding the portions of the Holly Comedy studios in Edendale, Cal., recently destroyed by fire, has started under the supervision of Robert P. Kerr, director of the Holly brand of fun films. Although the flames caused considerable damage to the administration buildings, the stages and dressing rooms were intact, which fact made it possible for Sid Smith, the star in the comedies, to complete five one-reel productions, now being distributed by the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation.

First Vehicle For New Fox Star

Buck Jones, Cowboy, who Recently was Signed up will Have Many Stunts in "Camouflaged"

Fox Film Corporation announces that its new western lead-man, Buck Jones, will make his screen debut before the public in the production, entitled "Camouflaged." The picture is being directed by Charles Swickard, who, incidentally, is also making his Fox debut at the same time. The supporting company in the picture includes Josie Sedgwick, Margaret Cullington, Frederick Starr, Ernest Shields, Lon Goff, Dick Loreno and H. W. Podgett.

Mr. Swickard, who, according to the Fox announcement, is "a veteran of the screen," declares that the new entrant for film honors "will create a following from the start" because of his unusual feats which the director characterizes as "extraordinary." Judging from the Fox report at hand, the strong point of the newcomer's qualifications to win the motion-picture fans is his ability as a horseman. The press notice reads in part: "The coolness and fearlessness of the man is said to have made it necessary more than once for the director to order a scene retaken, for the reason that members of the company had gazed in wonder at the star as he did what had been considered the impossible."

In the same notice, the assertion is made that the script calls for the rider of a galloping horse to fall over backward, grab the horse's tail in transit, and be dragged "several hundred feet, the steel-shod hoofs of the horse barely missing his head." The Fox statement has it that Buck Jones, unsolicited, first performed the "stunt" to demonstrate to the director that it could be done according to specifications, and then repeated the feat once more to permit the cameraman to "shoot" the action.

Comedy Film As Rival of Drama

Public Wants To Laugh Primarily, Says Sennett; Technique of The Comedy is Being Improved

IN a recent statement, Mack Sennett gave expression to his views on the place that the comedy film occupies in the interest of the photoplay public and the steps being taken to bring the comedy picture up to present-day standards of the industry.

"The comedy film is coming into its own," says Mack Sennett, the producer of Mack Sennett Comedies, "and theatre owners are learning that their patrons want to laugh. Exhibitors desire to serve the public, and like making a newspaper, it is a difficult job to carefully feel out the public wants and at the same time, keep the theatre till filled with money enough to pay the bills.

"The war certainly changed a lot of things, and during those tragic days and since, the theatre owners saw at once that the time was right then and there to make people laugh. 'Give us comedy pictures,' they said, and right then and there began the appreciation of the fact that comedies should no longer be mere 'fillers' in a program, but that regardless of their two-reel length, comedies had what I might call body, that they stood up, as it were, and were worthy of being featured, and that time, money and thought had been given to their production.

"Modern motion picture comedies are not mere carelessly-done, pie-slinging affairs, but are carefully thought-out satires with merry plots and original burlesques of the old-time melodramas of the 10-20-30 days when the galleries hissed the villain.

"The featuring of short comedies, due to their value in entertaining the public, is good for the motion picture industry because it will bring about a healthy competition between the producers of dramatic films, and of comedy pictures, as well as with those who are responsible for making up the other units of the average motion picture theatre's interesting program of entertainment.

"Of course motion picture producers must keep in mind that the people who go to motion picture theatres, whether in London, Tokyo or Central Falls, Iowa, go there to be entertained and, that in its last analysis, human nature is very much the same. One wants to be thrilled a little, made to wonder a little, made to feel a trifle sad — but not too sad — and finally, made to leave the theatre with a warm, comfy, happy feeling. That's where the comedy film comes in."

House Peters to Lead in "Silk Husbands and Calico Wives"

Prizma Picture to Appear Weekly on Bill of Capitol Theatre

A special Prizma color picture will be shown at the new Capitol Theatre, Broadway, New York, every week covering a period of one year. This is the latest announcement of The Prizma, Inc.

In an interview with a NEWS representative Mr. J. M. Stokes, speaking for the Prizma Company, stated that Managing Director E. J .Bowes of the Capitol Theatre was sparing no expense or time in placing before critical Broadway patrons Prizma color pictures to their best advantage.

At the opening of the Capitol Theatre the first picture shown on the screen was a specially prepared picture, the "Capitol Color Land Review." This picture was especially prepared by the editors of the Prizma Company, and every week, it is said they will contain the most interesting scenes in color obtainable.

The significance of these pictures is shown by the fact that Mr. Bowes has secured the services of Mr. John Wenger, who has long been identified with the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Mr. Wenger is an expert on stage settings and will supervise the building of settings symbolic of the "Capitol Color Land Review."

Wilson Completes Plans for New Hallmark Chapter-Picture

Ben Wilson, star of Hallmark Pictures Corporation serial, "The Trail of the Octopus," who was in New York recently making arrangements for the second serial production, reports from his Hollywood studio, California, that plans have been completed for his next serial production, the working title of which is "Fifteen Days for a Life." Neva Gerber, who supported him in "The Trail of the Octopus," will be his leading women in this next serial.

"BIG THREE"

Claim "Lost City" Is Thriller

Selig and Mayer say Daredeviltry Shown is Unsurpassed; Several Narrow Escapes Reported

A COMMOTION resulted in motion-picture circles by the announcement that Louis B. Mayer, who has guided the destinies of Miss Anita Stewart and Mrs. Mildred Harris Chaplin, had apparently entered into the business of exploiting serials. Word from the Coast had it that Mayer purchased from Colonel Selig the 15-episode serial, "The Lost City." Eight of the 15 episodes have already been completed and are en-route East, where it is presumed they will be handled by the Mayer sales force.

"The Lost City" is a screen story of adventure in the wastes and jungles of "the dark continent." It is claimed that practically every wild beast inhabiting that continent appears in the picture, and it is further asserted that several were actually slain while attacking the principal members of the cast. Colonel Selig is reported to have on his big Los Angeles estate the largest zoological garden west of Chicago. The statement is made that more than 800 untamed animals are in captivity there; and the vast majority of them were used in producing "The Lost City," according to the announcement received.

Juanita Hansen takes the leading role and is played opposite by George Chesebro. Miss Hansen and Chesebro are said to be ably supported by a strong cast.

"Not for any amount of money could I be induced to go through some of those scenes again," says Miss Hansen, whose arm, it is reported, was lacerated by a leopard, that was lassoed in mid-air as it sprang at her from a rocky ledge. The story called for the lassoing of the beast as it crouched to spring, but the leopard, it is stated, sprang unexpectedly; and it was only through the skill of George Chesebro that Miss Hansen escaped more serious injury

According to the announcement at hand, Colonel Selig and Louis B. Mayer believe that for daredeviltry and thrills "The Lost City" stands in a class by itself. "Because of the cost of production, the amount of material used, the many narrow escapes of actors and actresses and the splendid attention to detail, 'The Lost city' reaches the pinnacle of serial production," reads the report submitted.

Press Club Has "Ladies Night"

Alice Brady is Guest of Evening; Representative Gathering Sees Enjoyable Variety Show

ACCORDING to a report from the Realart Corporation, the National Press Club recently departed from its traditionary path by inaugurating a "Ladies' Night," at which Miss Alice Brady was the guest of the evening. The function, unprecedented in the history of the club, it is said, was heralded by a startling announcement which read "The First Ladies' Night in a Thousand Years."

Long before the time set, the members, their ladies and invited guests filled the spacious dining hall of the Club, and by the time the dinner hour was sounded every available room was converted into a dining place. It is estimated that over one thousand persons were served, the first course being promptly served at 6 o'clock.

Among the other attractions on the evening's schedule of entertainment was the showing of the Realart feature, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room." The picture, according to reports, held the interest of the guests throughout, and the mystery problem involved called forth considerable speculation as to the identity of the assailant of the scientist's daughter. The Press Club quartette sang several selections, which were received with much applause. This was followed by the audience singing popular songs. This impromptu number gave the event an informal homelike atmosphere. Two acts appearing at Keith's helped to entertain the guests with songs and witty stayings.

Miss Alice Brady arrived at 11:15 p. m., and was received by Mr. Earle Goodwin, president of the club, and the reception committee headed by Mr. Jack Connolly. Miss Brady was requested to sign the guests register, adding her name to the list of distinguished guests who had appeared at the club.

Milwaukee Now Made Independent Exchange for Triangle Film

On the recommendation of Bert L. Hadfield, who has been supervising the Chicago and Minneapolis exchanges for Triangle, Milwaukee has been made an independent exchange.

Formerly Milwaukee was a sub-office of Chicago and the change was decided necessary to take care of the great increase in business that resulted from Mr. Hadfield's efforts. E. W. Smith has been appointed manager of this office.

Shipman Mistakingly Thought to be With Canadian Photoplay Prod.

The following open statement has been made by Ernest Shipman in order to clear up an apparent misconception as regards stories of his connection with the company mentioned:

"I am in receipt of quite a number of letters from Canadian sources, mostly from friends of my schooldays in Toronto, Ottawa and Hamilton, inquiring if I will personally guarantee the value of the stock now being offered by the Canadian Photoplay Productions, Ltd. of Toronto; their impression being that this is the company with which Nell Shipman and myself are connected, and which produced James Oliver Curwood's story "Back to God's Country" which has just played a record week at the Strand Theatre, Toronto and is booked at the leading houses including the Capital Theatre, New York City.

"Through the medium of the Motion Picture News, I would like to state that the Company which produced "Back to God's Country" is entitled Canadian Photoplays, Ltd., and is an Alberta Corporation composed almost entirely of Calgary business men, and that none of its stock is for sale.

"I know nothing regarding the status or policy of the company now starting in Toronto under a somewhat similar name, but will say that any new and deserving organization which produces photoplays of sufficient calibre as to warrant exploitation by The First National Exhibitors Circuit, is assured of success."

Release Date of Screenics is Put Off to December 14

C. L. Chester announced that the release date on Screenics, which had been published as November 23rd, will be Dec. 14th. Some interesting animal life material which has been a long time on the way came in unexpectedly the other day, and as this was scheduled for the opening releases the starting date was delayed in order to carry out the program as originally planned.

"We are trying to make the animal life section of Screenics something that will fit any audience anywhere, and from the comments of those who have seen our sample prints I believe we are succeeding," C. L. Chester states.

Special Service Section on
Hoxie and Little in "Lightning Bryce"

A WESTERN SERIAL

THIS is a Western serial and naturally you will expect some good horseback riding. In this you will not be disappointed. Mr. Hoxie and Ann Little are both capable people and the chances they are willing to take and do take in the sequences ought to make your patrons sit up and take notice.

The story which is unfolded in first episodes and which promises to hold to the end of the serial reduced to theme concerns the efforts of Hoxie and Miss Little, son and daughter respectively of two prospectors who discover a rich mine only to lose their lives before being able to realize on their discovery, to locate this mine with a deep dyed villain attempting to rob them of their treasure. Naturally a lot of complication have to be injected into a production which is to last thirty reels. Many sequences will be used that really have nothing to do with advancing the story but in this picture when such excursions are taken, some action often time of real stunt importance is injected so that the episode will not drag.

The serial is largely so far as it has been viewed by the writer photographed out of doors and a wide variety of scenery is used as a background much of it being really beautiful.

The story is by Joe Brandt. The production is to be in fifteen episodes.

SYNOPSIS OF FIRST THREE EPISODES

LIGHTNING Bryce is a young cowpuncher. Kate Jordan is a Western girl with an Eastern training. The two young people's fathers are prospecting partners who have found a gold mine that is considered by a fictional tribe of Indians on the Aztec order sacred and not to be touched by white hands. Through the use of a drug which drives men insane, one of the Indians is instrumental in causing Lightning's father to murder his partner. He then wanders about over the desert to arrive at a certain camp, where all four people were to meet, at the point of death. He however delivers to the sheriff a bowie knife and a piece of string which are to be turned over to the two young people, the knife to Lightning and the string to Kate. When the string is wound about the knife it will disclose the location of the gold mine, by means of printed directions which the prospectors have written on the string when wrapped about the knife as described.

Before Lightning and Kate arrive, a crooked undersheriff has heard the story of the mine and the means by which it can be located so he secures the aid of a girl of the camp in his attempt to steal both knife and string from the sheriff. The girl is successful in locating the knife but while searching for the string, a mysterious woman who rides a horse and shrouds her face, substitutes another blade in its place and the girl carries the wrong knife to her lover with the message that she can not find the string.

Kate and Lightning arrive and the dying prospector's gifts as the sheriff believes are delivered to them, the string to Kate and a knife which the girl had substituted for the original to Lightning.

Lightning and the crooked undersheriff meet in a poker game and Lightning wins among other things two nuggets of gold which the prospector had brought from the Indian mine and which the undersheriff had stolen. The Indians have learned that white men have taken some of the gold from their mine and send messengers to recover it. One of the messengers discovers that Lightning has the nuggets, In the meantime the undersheriff enters Kate's room and steals the string. He is surprised by Lightning and a terrific fight ensues.

Lightning and Kate part, Kate to go to her home on a nearby ranch and Lightning to return to his work.

While on the way Kate is ambushed by the undersheriff's sweetheart and the string stolen. The Indian who desired the gold nuggets succeeds in overpowering Lightning and obtaining them.

Lightning is able to free himself from the position in which he has been left by the Indian and meets Kate again just after she has regained consciousness. They tell each other of their experiences and Lightning guesses who is responsible for the crimes. Kate goes on to her home, taking the knife which the mysterious woman has left with her. Lightning goes in search of the missing string. He locates the undersheriff at a deserted mining camp and finds him trying to use the string to learn the location of the gold mine. Lightning holds the gang up and escapes with the string, taking it back to Kate.

The undersheriff and his followers who are outlaws follow to the Jordan ranchhouse where Lightning holds them at bay until the ranch foreman can arrive with aid.

The outlaws are beaten off and ride away with Lightning and Kate pursuing. Both come to grief however, Lightning being lassoed and dragged over the rough country side by a runaway horse and Kate is kidnapped by the undersheriff and is being carried away when the third episode closes.

COMPARISONS AND OPINIONS

WE would compare this picture very favorably with the Duncan serials like "The Fight For a Million" in as much as the scenes are all out of doors in the West and that horseback riding and sensational stunts of this sort are to the front in practically every sequence.

If you ran this serial or have seen it you will then know about what to expect in "Lightning Bryce."

Our opinion is that this picture will hold interest where they like serials and especially Western stuff. Suspense is nicely maintained at the close of each episode and there are plenty of stunts pulled which are noteworthy. In these Hoxie is not alone, being ably assisted by Miss Little.

There is action and suspense in every reel of "Lightning Brice" the new serial which is now ready for the exhibitors

ADVERTISING ANGLES

WE would invest heavily in a bill board campaign going well out of our regular territory with our billing. As you no doubt know a Western subject is especially good material for the 24-sheet stand in as much as a scenic back ground makes an attractive display in itself and that the action depicted can be made to carry something concerning the picture.

Any argument that you cannot afford to spend money on a two-reel subject is not good logic. If you book this serial and can get some extra dollars into your house to see the first numbers you will have hooked them solid for fifteen weeks, therefore you should figure your advertising appropriation into fifteen parts and charge it over the run of the production.

A Western picture is always a good subject for stunt stuff. Why not hire a good horseman who can make up in a typical western girl's outfit and ride about the streets at good speed for two or three days before your opening date, with advertising the show?

You will of course not neglect your newspapers securing some good cuts that will convince of the fact that this is a real picture.

We are always in favor of using still photographs and a western subject is especially excellent for this form of exploitation. Don't confine your efforts in this direction to just the front of your house but get the pictures into the store windows by mounting them on a neat card board on which you can imprint the playing dates, etc.

This is a picture which Young America is going to eat up as it is just their style, plenty of riding and heroics, so we would make a special play for their patronage. A prize offered for the best story on the first episode of say the nearest guess as to what will happen in the second episode would get the youngsters' attention and insure you a full house for at least one show and after that it is up to the picture itself to keep them coming.

It might be well to run a special matinee just for children with some stunt to get them all out.

We are strongly against running free shows which some exhibitors have done for the first episode of a serial as something which costs nothing is never appreciated and you lose not only the admissions of those who will be followers of the serial but of those who just happened to come in on this particular date.

Rather do we favor spending a lot of money for advertising or hunting up some extra drawing card to run on the same bill.

NEWSPAPER DISPLAY ADVICE

FOR catch lines we suggest the following:

"Real Rough Riding and Thrilling Stunts mark the new serial ——"

"A Thrill to Every Foot and A Story of Unparalleled Merit Makes ——"

For a paragraph of selling talk something like this will do:

The opening episode of our new serial will merit every superlative we might write concerning its thrilling footage. It introduces two stars who stand unequalled in horsemanship, ability to perform thrilling stunts and do the things that have made Western pictures so popular. In support are players who are as capable as the leads. This is a story of the fight for a gold mine. It will please you in it's every episode."

"If you like them with thrilling stunts, tense situations and hairbreadth escapes, where rough riding that will make you grip your seats and big scenes follow one after another, then you will enjoy this new serial success. Photographed with the great outdoors of the West as a background, produced from an original story of great merit, 'Lightning Bryce' is offered as a special attraction worth the entire price of our admission."

The Kinograms Program For This Week Shows Its Usual Variety

Among the features to be seen in the Kinograms News this week are the following: The people of Richmond, Va., unveil a hundred thousand dollar memorial statue of "Stonewall" Jackson. St. Louis holds its annual police parade. The Stoney Indians pow-wow at Banff, Canada. Former soldiers of the A. E. F.'s First Division go on duty in the mine fields at Coal River, W. Va., a strike area. Prince Casimir Lubomirsky, the first Polish envoy, arrives in Washington. Rosalind, worth $15,000, arrives in Boston from Glasgow, Scotland. Rosalind is a highbred mare.

Exhibitor's Book For "The Mystery of 13" Is Now Available

Though somewhat delayed by the strike of the New York printers, there comes to hand the "Exhibitor's Book," prepared by Louis Burston, president of Burston Films, Inc., the subject being that producer's latest Francis Ford serial The Mystery of "13."

Louis Burston makes a brief and business like statement at the beginning. This is followed by a page devoted to Francis Ford. Then come portraits of the thirteen principals, and a synopsis which gives one a taste of the quality of The Mystery of "13." Ready prepared advertisements, name cuts and portrait cuts of the stars, Francis Ford and Rosemary Theby, for exhibitors' use follow, while in the center of the book is a full-color, four-page insert which shows in miniature the special stock and episode paper prepared with elaborate care. The miniatures show samples of a one, three, six and twenty-four sheet, and the suggestions that accompany them are brief but helpful.

Katherine MacDonald Will Star in "The Guests of Hercules"

Announcement is made this week of the purchase of the motion picture rights to "The Guests of Hercules," by Mrs. A. M. Williamson, as the fourth feature attraction starring Katherine MacDonald, which is to be released by First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The story is said to be given the flavoring of an international drama by the importance of the roles of several Americans resident at Monte Carlo for the season. Production of the story at the MacDonald studios will begin at once.

"Toby's Bow," Starring Tom Moore

A print of "Toby's Bow," the Goldwyn Picture which Tom Moore completed at the Culver City Studios just before he came East to make exterior scenes for his next production, was received at the New York exchange last week. It was run off at a special showing attended by Samuel Goldwyn, other executives at the home office, and Mr. Moore, who did not have an opportunity to see the completed product before he left California.

Re-Created Features in Demand

The Triangle Exchanges Report a Wide-Spread Demand Among Exhibitors For Re-issues

ANNOUNCEMENT is made that the eighteen Triangle exchanges have reported a widespread demand among exhibitors for the first of the re-created features, "The Flame of the Yukon," released November 23d. Many important first run bookings have already been arranged in some of the best theatres in the country, it is said.

A pre-release showing of this Dorothy Dalton feature, produced under the supervision of Thomas H. Ince, was given at the Iris Theatre, Indianapolis, during the week of November 9th.

A complete line of new advertising has been prepared for each of these features, which have been entirely re-edited and retitled in the present day style. The advertising includes two styles of one-sheet posters, one three-sheet, a six-sheet, two styles of lobby displays, black and white photos for newspaper publicity and advertisments, an exhibitor's campaign book, music plot, slides and a one and two column cut for newspaper reproduction.

The second feature of this series, "Betty of Greystone," with Dorothy Gish and Owen Moore and supervised by D. W. Griffith, will be released December 14th.

A good demand is also reported for the Mack Sennett Keystone comedies which will be released every week beginning November 23 with "Other People's Wives." A two-reeler will be alternated with a one-reel comedy, giving the variety which is demanded to-day.

New Pathe Serial Release Soon

New Production, "The Adventures of Ruth," Starring Ruth Roland, Set For Release, December 28th

PATHE Exchange, Inc., this week announces the release on Sunday, December 28th, of a new fifteen-episode production, starring Ruth Roland and entitled "The Adventures of Ruth." This will bring to the screens three Pathe serials on first-run the same week. Coincidentally with the release of the first episode of "The Adventures of Ruth" on December 28th, will come the release of the tenth episode of the George B. Seitz serial, "Bound and Gagged" and the eighth episode of the Pearl White serial, "The Black Secret." This will be the second time in the history of the House of Pathe that a similar situation has arisen. On the week of November 9th three Pathe serials will be running first-run—the first episode of "The Black Secret," the third episode of "Bound and Gagged" and the last episode of "The Great Gamble."

In a special way, "The Adventures of Ruth" is making a bid for distinction in the field of serials. It is the first production of Miss Roland's own company—Ruth Roland Serials, Inc.—and discloses her in the roles of producer, author, supervising director and star. The story is by Miss Roland herself, and the scenario was written by Gilson Willets, author of many of her past serial successes, including "Hands Up" and "The Tiger's Trail."

A good cast has been selected to support Miss Roland. The leading man is Herbert Heyes, one of the popular juvenile leads of the photoplay screen. Thomas G. Lingham plays the "heavy." The cast also includes William Human, Charles Bennett and Helen Case.

"The Gay Old Dog" Wins Praise

Exhibitors and Critics Present at Special Showing of the Picture Acclaim the Production

AN audience, which included some of the most prominent persons in the motion-picture industry, taxed the capacity of the Eltinge Theatre at a special showing of the Hobart Henley feature. "The Gay Dog," early last week. The production, which stars John Cumberland, was received with great favor, and, it is said, scores of exhibitors who attended the showing demonstrated their approval of the picture by booking it almost immediately through the New York branch of the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

A. H. Woods, the theatrical producer, for whom Cumberland has been starring many years, was much impressed with the picture, which, he asserted, was most representative of the advance being made by the silent drama.

New York critics, in commenting upon the photo dramatization of Edna Ferber's short story, the adaptation of which was made by Mrs. Sidney Drew, praised the production in enthusiastic terms.

Harriette Underhill of the New York Tribune, whose criticism is quite typical of the press reviewers present, describes the picture as a "classic," and adds: "Any one who knows Mr. Cumberland will realize, without seeing the picture, just how splendidly he must have portrayed the title role. Even in his most humorous scenes, he is strangely wistful and pathetic; and in his pathos there is always humor. It is a delightful performance."

T. E. Oliphant, of the Evening Mail, sums up his opinion of "The Gay Old Dog," in these terms: "No critic of the spoken drama has this season witnessed a play that, for fidelity to life, can equal this Hobart Henley production, with John Cumberland as the star. When a photoplay gives new meaning to the phrase 'a human document' there is hope for the youngest sister of the arts."

"High-Speed" Auto-Race Story

Director Miller is on Home-Stretch With "High-Speed" at Hallmark's Studio; Release About Jan. 1

THE screen version of Clinton H. Stagg's popular automobile racing story, "High Speed" is nearing completion under the direction of Charles Miller at Hallmark Picture Corporation Studios, 230 West 38th St. Edward Earl and Gladys Hulette have the starring roles. Chief in support are: Roger Lytton, Charles Husted, Fay Evelyn, Ida Horten, Jack Edwards and Mathew L. Betts. Roy Vaughn is cameraman. Charles Miller is personally directing the production assisted by Albert Cowles, with Leon Britton supervisor. The screen adaptation was made by John J. Glavey, of Hallmark, Scenario Staff.

The story centres around the Santa Monica races held yearly in California and the automobile races held annually at Sheepshead Bay. For the racing scenes, Director Miller took his company of more than two hundred people to the Sheepshead race track where a race was staked with professional drivers participating, it is said.

Frank G. Hall, president of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation announces that "High Speed" will be ready for release under the Famous Directors' Series about the first of the year following the Keanan Buel production recently completed at the 54th Street Studio, with Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard, stars. With the release of "High Speed" there will have been six productions released by the Famous Directors' Series, totaling 26 in all.

Arthur F. Beck Buys Two Studios

Creation and Kalem Plants in New Jersey Acquired; "The Capitol" to be Completed in One

ARTHUR F. BECK, president of Artco Productions, Inc., and Beck Productions, Inc., has bought the Creation and Kalem studios at Cliffside, N. J., as a result of negotiations that have been in progress since the temporary leasing of these properties recently by Mr. Beck for use in the completion of Leah Baird's latest feature, "The Capitol," by Augustus Thomas, and "The Isle of Jewels" serial for Pathe release, in which Stuart Holmes and Frances Mann are co-stars. The price paid for the buildings is given as $30,000.

The purchase includes the entire equipment of the properties and in addition Mr. Beck has taken a long term lease of the ground, with an additional five acres adjoining the studio properties, upon which workmen are now engaged erecting garages and hangars for two flying boats, with a landing stage for the latter. The two machines, formerly destined for use by the American forces in France, were purchased by Mr. Beck two months ago. They are to be used in the production of a serial which will follow "The Isle of Jewels."

Work has already been commenced on the remodeling and enlargement of the studios, the plans providing for continuation of production while this work is in progress. The entire lighting and mechanical equipment are to be overhauled and modernized. Large signs surrounding the plant announce that it will be known in future as the Leah Baird studios. When the work of reconstruction has been completed there will be accommodations for three companies, with an outside stage.

As soon as the final touches have been administered to the Beck serial, "The Isle of Jewels," for which Charles T. Dazey wrote the scenario, production will be launched on "The Harvest Moon," one of the most famous of Augustus Thomas' plays, the rights to which have been bought outright from the author for $21,000.

Clara K. Young and Garson Endorse Rothacker Work

Further endorsement of the character of laboratory work turned out by the Rothacker plant is contained in wires received at the Chicago headquarters of the Company from Clara Kimball Young and Harry Garson, commenting on "Eyes of Youth" prints. Miss Young's wire reads: "Wish to extend to yourself and associates my heartiest congratulations for the wonderful work you have given me on Eyes of Youth prints — Do not think I have ever had the pleasure of seeing better work and my best wishes are extended to you for your future success.

Mr. Garson telegraphed: "Congratulations and thanks for the high class work that you have given my company on Eyes of Youth — Everyone is unanimous in praise of some of the best laboratory work that it has ever been my pleasure to witness on the screen — Sincere wishes for your continuance of this high grade of work."

Sterling Sole Distributors for Hallmark Films in Canada

I. Soskin, president of Sterling Films, Ltd., of Montreal and Toronto, Can., who recently closed a contract with Frank G. Hall president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, whereby Sterling Films, Ltd., will handle, exclusively, in the Dominion, Hallmark's Famous Directors pictures — twenty-six in all — and its serial releases which includes "The Trail of the Octopus" and "The Sign of the Rat," writes the New York office of Hallmark, stating that the report has been erroneously circulated, in Canada, that another distributing corporation is holding itself out to be the distributor of Hallmark pictures in the Dominion. Mr. Soskin states that Sterling Films, Ltd., is the sole and exclusive distributor of Hallmark pictures in Canada.

Washington is Latest Link in Pioneer Exchange Chain

Screen Art Pictures, Inc., of which Michael Lessy is the head, is the latest independent exchange organization to affiliate itself with the progressive group of Pioneer Cooperative Exchanges.

The territory which will be under the jurisdiction of the Screen Art Pictures will include the District of Columbia, Maryland, Delaware and Virginia.

The temporary headquarters of the Screen Art Exchange is now located at 1315 Vine street, Philadelphia, but arrangements are now under way for the leasing of an entire building in the centre of the business district of Washington.

E. H. Hibben, of New York, is now managing director of the William Fox Strand and Plaza Theatres in Denver.

Mr. Hibben until recently was connected with the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation. He has been with the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., Baumer Films of New York, Keith Circuit, Cohan & Harris, Shubert Theatrical Company, Klaw & Erlanger and others.

"A Burlesque on Carmen" one of the Chaplin reissues to be released by Victor Kremer

Kremer Inaugurates Sales Drive For the Chaplin Comedies

The New York offices of Victor Kremer announced this week that the sales drive in behalf of the four Chaplin Comedies controlled by his organization is now under way. In addition to Essanay's "A Burlesque on Carmen," Kremer also controls the rights in the United States and Canada to the following Chaplin production:—"The Champion," two parts, "A Jitney Elopement" two parts, "Work," two parts and "By The Sea" one part. The following deals were closed this week whereby these pictures have been acquired for state right releases by R. C. Cropper. The Beehive Exchange, Chicago, Illinois, for the following states: Indiana, Missouri and northern Illinois. Harry Crandall, of Washington, D. C., who recently purchased "A Burlesque on Carmen" for his territory, has also acquired the four other Chaplins for The District of Columbia, Virginia, North Carolina, Maryland and Delaware.

In connection with the Chaplin pictures which he now controls, Victor Kremer will issue complete and new advertising accessories in the way of posters, lobby display, slides, press sheets, heralds and a unique advertising novelty for the use of the exhibitor, the details of which will be made public.

Additional Studio Space Leased by Famous Players-Lasky Corp.

J. N. Naulty, general manager of the Eastern studios of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has obtained a short lease on the World Peerless studio at Fort Lee, N. J., whereby a part of that studio not now being used may provide room for at least two companies.

A delay was brought about in occupying the Amsterdam Opera House, the lease of which was announced a short time ago. The cables supplying current to the opera house were not large enough to hold the high voltage necessary to supply the Klcigs and Cooper-Hewitts used in the making of pictures. The New York Edison Company, tore up 44th street for a block and laid the necessary cable that would allow production to start on "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

Spanish Author At Fox Studios

Vicente Blasco Ibanez, Novelist, in Visit to Fort Lee Sees Various Phases of Film Manufacture

ACCORDING to a report from the Fox Film Corporation, Vicente Blasco Ibanez, the noted Spanish novelist, was recently the guest of the corporation and among other things enjoyed an inspection trip to the Fox Studios at Fort Lee. The visit to the Fort Lee establishment grew out of an expressed wish on the part of the writer to see just how films were made.

Mr. Blasco — that is the way the Spanish address him, according to the Fox announcement — was met at his hotel by a representative of Mr. Fox and was driven to the Fort Lee studios via Riverside Drive. The novelist is said to have spoken with admiration of the beauties of the Hudson and to have been charmed with the wonder of the city's sky-line which unfolded itself as the party ascended the Palisades.

As the author entered the studio, following his arrival at Fort Lee, an orchestra, under the direction of Edwin Bachman, played "A Spanish Dance." This was followed by other selections. A company with William Farnum in the lead was at work when Mr. Blasco made his entry. The Fox star ceased action to be introduced and to exchange greetings. J. Gordon, who is directing the present Farnum picture, was also presented. The author expressed his pleasure at meeting Mr. Farnum and at the opportunity of seeing the actual operations of the Fox Film Corporation. A special showing of the "Wings of the Morning" in which William Farnum is starred was put on for Mr. Blasco's entertainment.

After taking leave of Mr. Farnum and his company, the writer was shown through the laboratory of the Fox Film plant, where the visitor was enabled to see all the processes of developing, drying, cutting, joining and printing. The distinguished guest is said to have expressed himself in enthusiastic terms over the way in which American ingenuity has devised so many labor-saving machines for the development of the industry.

On his return to the city the novelist was taken to the home office, where he was presented to William Fox whom he complimented upon the high quality of his productions and the efficiency of the studios and laboratory, it is said.

Completing Helen Holmes Series

First Seven Episodes Shown State Right Buyers Said to Hold Scores of Thrills

NATHAN HIRSH, producer of many popular screen offerings and president of the Aywon Film Corporation, announces that the Helen Holmes series, consisting of twenty episodes of two reels each, will soon be completed.

The first seven of this series have been completed and state right buyers from many parts of the country have admitted the series to be the best two reelers upon the market to-day.

This popular series of two reel thrillers that Mr. Hirsh is now offering, is adapted from the well known "Hazards of Helen" railroad series. Each episode is complete in itself, the stories being written with the expressed purpose of providing modern film fans with two reels of solid entertainment. There are claimed to be thrills in abundance, plenty of action, and unbelievable stunts offered that only Helen Holmes can do. The artistic nature of these two reel thrillers is further enhanced by attractive and illustrated titles.

The progressive state right buyer is taking advantage of this opportunity, it is said, with the result that a number of United States territories have been sold. Mr. Hirsh further announces that the states of New York and New Jersey will soon be ready for the exhibitors who may apply for bookings direct from the Aywon Film Corporation, 729 Seventh Avenue, New York City.

In order to aid exhibitors to properly exploit this popular railroad series, Mr. Hirsh has provided advertising accessories that he, personally, can recommend as being of an assured help in aiding the state right buyer and the exhibitor.

Harold Lloyd Fully Recovered

Comedian Makes Flying Trip to New York Before Resuming Permanent Work on His Comedy Series

HAROLD LLOYD, the Pathe comedian, completely recovered from the accident which kept him in a hospital for several weeks, stopped long enough, after resuming work on his new series of $100 000 two reel comedies, to make a hurried trip to New York. Lloyd arrived in New York City on Thursday last, accompanied by Hal E. Roach, President of the Rolin Film Company, producing the Lloyd comedies, and the one reelers featuring "Snub" Pollard. The comedian arrived here just in time to attend the showing of his first two reeler, "Bumping into Broadway," which was featured by the Rialto and Strand Theatres.

Fred C. Quimby, director of Pathe Exchanges reports that the new $100,000 comedies are meeting his every expectation, and more. The most important theatres in Chicago have all signed the Lloyd features.

Immediately upon his return to Los Angeles, Lloyd plans to resume work on the comedy he "jumped" to make the trip to New York. It is the most pretentious production he has ever attempted, and the strongest effort will be made to have it surpass its predecessors — "Bumping into Broadway," "Captain Kidd's Kids," "From Hand to Mouth' and "His Royal Slyness."

Picture Aids Recruiting Drive

"The Lost Battalion" Acquires Much Valuable Exploitation in Marine Campaign for More Members

"THE Lost Battalion," released through W. H. Productions Co., is meeting with great success in the Wisconsin territory, it is reported by the Wisconsin Film Corporation of Milwaukee, Wis., which gives an interesting account of a few of the exploitation "stunts" employed in their territory.

"We are using the services of Captain Stanley Huntley Lewis, special aid to the United States Marine Corps," writes the Wisconsin exchange, "in promoting publicity for 'The Lost Battalion,' working out of the larger cities in Wisconsin.

"Captain Lewis has a large automobile built like a submarine. Mounted on the rear of this car is a Colt machine gun which saw four years of continuous service in France with the French army, and which is said to have killed at least two thousand Germans. An official statement to that effect from the French war office accompanies the gun. The car is equipped with a military bugle played by a keyboard and is blown by an exhaust on the engine. On this the captain plays all the army calls, which can be heard from a distance of half a mile.

"In his full capacity as special aid to the Marine Corps, with credentials from Washington, Captain Lewis is authorized to secure a detail of marines from a recruiting station to accompany him and assist him in this exploitation work. He establishes a branch for the marine corps at each theatre during the run of 'The Lost Battalion.'

"An expert artist in water colors, in each city he arranges with the proprietors of the leading mercantile establishments for the use of their large plate glass windows. On the outside of these windows, he paints in water color, signs for 'The Lost Battalion,' combined with the advertisement of the Marine Corps, covering the entire window.

"Captain Lewis makes not only the city in which 'The Lost Battalion' is running, but all surrounding towns as well. He lectures at noon at the various factories, addresses schools, making also short addresses from his car in front of the theatre. He has the privilege through his connection with the Marine Corps, of distributing printed matter from his car, containing advertising on 'The Lost Battalion' and the Marine Corps."

Variety of Paramount Releases

November 9th Sees Issue of Three New Features With Well-Known Stars in the Casts

AN announcement has been received to the effect that on November 9 Famous Players-Lasky Corporation resumes its policy of releasing two and three productions a week alternately. For that date three Paramount-Artcraft pictures are scheduled. They are "Luck in Pawn," starring Marguerite Clark; Charles Ray in "Crooked Straight," and Enid Bennett in "What Every Woman Learns." The two last named are Thomas H. Ince productions.

Walter Edwards directed "Luck in Pawn," which is one of the five productions which Miss Clark made in California this year. Charles Meredith plays opposite Miss Clark in "Luck in Pawn." Thomas D. Persse, Leota Lorraine, Richard Wayne and Lillian Langdon are also in the cast, and a delightful child role is played by Pat Moore.

Charles Ray's leading woman in "Crooked Straight" is Margery Wilson, who has appeared with the star before and also with William S. Hart. Otto Hoffman, well known to Ince fans as a character actor in old man parts, has a characteristic role. Gordon Mullen plays the heavy, and Wade Boteler is also included in the small but select roster.

"What Every Woman Learns," the other Ince-supervised release of the 9th, in which Enid Bennett is starred, was written by George B. Lewis.

Milton Sills, as the hero; Irving Cummings, Theodore Roberts, Lydia Knott and William Conklin make up a cast of more than ordinary strength.

Griffith Treats Novel Theme

In "The Greatest Question," Made For the First National, Topic of Spiritualism is Treated

D. W. GRIFFITH in his initial attraction for First National Exhibitors' Circuit has unearthed, it is claimed, a new and popular subject which will enable exhibitors to appeal to women patrons with something other than a love theme. Based upon the thought of whether communication with the dead is fact or fancy, the production is entitled "The Greatest Question," and is prefaced by a remark from the master director stating that despite the convictions and sincerity of many of us, there is a Great Question in the minds of the majority.

The element of Spiritualism that characterizes this initial First National release from Griffith is one said to be hitherto untouched in motion pictures. Treated skilfully and in a manner that, according to reports, grips an audience in typical Griffith fashion, the question looms great in the minds of those who will see the picture.

The announcement at hand states that, in treating this timely theme, Mr. Griffith at no time takes his story into situations where the thought becomes confused; but on the other hand, confines his scope to the effect of the problem upon a poor family of farmfolk whose main source of livelihood is taken from them as the result of an heroic action that was never known.

Colleen Moore who heads the cast in the new Christie special "A Roman Scandal"

Featurettes Based on Biblical Stories Put Out by Spanuth

Here's another new idea for pictures conceived by H. A. Spanuth, president of the Commonwealth Pictures Company, Chicago, which seems to be timely, as it will aid in overcoming the opposition to motion picture shows on Sunday, which, at the present is agitating many localities.

This latest inspiration of Mr. Spanuth, who was the first to introduce vaudeville to the screen in his Spanuth's Original Vod-a-Vil Movies, is to be known as "Spanuth's Sermonettes." It is not the intention to "preach" in these sermonettes, and they are entirely non-sectarian. The sermonettes will transfer to the screen the stories of the Bible and the messages they are intended to bring to mankind. Each sermonette is in two parts, the first the picturization of the text and story taken from the Bible, and the second, the modern story showing the adaptation of the message to our every day life.

The first of these novelty films will have for its theme. the Christmas story — The Birth of Jesus, the Christ Child, especially appropriate for showing during the holidays. It will be ready Dec. 1.

Tenor and Ten-Year Old Star to Appear with Edith Taliaferro

E. Coit Albertson, who sang the tenor role in such operatic productions as "The Sultan of Zula" and "Madame Sherry," has deserted the field of light opera and is now engaged in the leading role opposite Edith Taliaferro in the photoplay, "Who's Your Brother?" While the legitimate stage is reported to have sustained a real loss in the absence of Mr. Albertson's voice, the "silent drama" is reported to have won a picture artist of no mean ability.

Another feature of the "Who's Your Brother?" cast is the presence of Elizabeth Kennedy, the ten-year old star, who plays the part of a boy in the picture. Besides Miss Taliaferro, Mr. Albertson and Miss Kennedy, the cast includes: Frank Burbeck, Gladden James, Herbert Fortier, Mrs. Elizabeth Garrison, Edith Stockton, Paul Panzer and others.

Fox Adds Wells Hawks to Staff; Publicist of Wide Experience

The Fox Film Corporation announces that it has secured the services of Wells Hawks in the capacity of special representative of the Fox organization. Mr. Hawks has been recently placed on the inactive list of the United States Navy, his rank being that of a Lieutenant Commander, U. S. N. R. F.

The new Fox publicist is a man of wide newspaper experience gained in New York, Washington and Baltimore. Some of the theatrical stars and organizations with whom Mr. Hawks has been associated in the past as a publicity man include, according to reports: Charles Frohman, Maude Adams, John Drew, Ethel Barrymore, Julia Marlowe, E. H. Sothern and Sir Henry Irving; the New York Hippodrome, Dreamland, the Ringling Brothers Circus, the Metropolitan Opera Company, and Klaw & Erlanger. He is also said to have been associated with the Universal Film Corporation and the Famous Players, and to have supervised the personal publicity of Mary Pickford.

While serving as publicity officer of the Navy, Mr. Hawks is reported to have been entrusted with several important publicity and photographic missions and to have been elevated to the rank of a full commander in recognition of his efficient services.

Facts and Follies Company is En Route for Florida Studios

Director Wray Physico and the entire Facts and Follies Company of over 30 artists and assistants sailed last week on the steamship "Mohawk" for Jacksonville. Arrangements have been made whereby the Dittenfass studio will be used for the winter months.

Chester Returns from the Coast

C. L. Chester, producer of Chester Outings and Screenics, who has been combining business and pleasure in Los Angeles for the past three weeks, returned last week.

Grace Davison, Pioneer star who is working on her second production for that company

Robertson-Cole Reviews Work

Report Cites Past Year's Expansion in Business, Exchanges, and in the Number and Quality of Pictures

THE entire fourth floor of the Mecca building at Forty-seventh Street and Broadway, with the exception of a few small rooms, has now been taken over by Roberston-Cole and is the Home Office of the Robertson-Cole Company and the Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation.

In less than a year this company has placed on the market more than a score of motion picture plays, which have been greeted by press and public as successes, and has released a feature play each week. A one-reel comedy has also been released each week since August 1st. In recent announcements, it is made known that very shortly ten one-reel pictures of the South Seas and 30 Adventure Scenics will be released.

Starting with the Martin Johnson pictures, "Cannibals of the South Seas" and "Captured by Cannibals," the following specials were released: "The Turn in the Road," "Better Times," "The Other Half," "Poor Relations," "What Every Woman Wants," "Man's Desire," "The House of Intrigue" and "The Open Door."

Next came the news of the opening of the Robertson-Cole Exchanges. Almost overnight the branch offices of the company were opened in twenty-six cities throughout the country and a complete executive, clerical and sales force was established in each one.

The new force went to work with vim and energy, and it is the statement of officials of the Distributing Corporation that a steady increase of booking has been reported each week, culminating in the past week "in an enormous flood of contracts" secured in the "Robertson-Cole Get-Together Week."

Hallmark's New Field Managers

Stephens, Mintz and Starr Added to Sales Staff to Accommodate the Recent Territorial Expansion

WITH the addition to its sales forces of S. T. Stephens, and M. J. Mintz as field managers and M. Harlan Starr as special representative, covering the entire United States territory, Hallmark Pictures Corporation has one of the most complete sales organizations in the picture field according to a statement made by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark.

Following the acquisition of the Exhibitors Mutual Distributing Corporation exchanges and the reorganization and enlargement of its own sales forces to accommodate the change, Mr. Hall and W. F. Rodgers, general sales manager of Hallmark Pictures Corporation thought it advisable to create three new offices known as field managers and special representatives. Messrs. Stephens, Mintz and Starr were engaged to fill these offices because of their experience in the distributing and sales end of the motion picture business and their familiarity with the territory over which they will work.

S. T. Stephens, who will cover the Far West was formerly general supervisor of exchanges for Exhibitors Mutual and supervised the southern exchanges for more than three years.

M. Harlan Starr was formerly the First National's sales manager in the Michigan territory, after which he entered the employ of the Clark-Cornelius Corporation as field manager, and held this position until the time he was assigned to Hallmark.

Mr. J. Mintz, who with Mr. Stephens has been placed in one of the two newly created offices of field managers, has operated for many years in the Chicago territory as manager for independent exchanges.

"Eyes of Youth" Book is Ready

Harry Reichenbach Reports That He Has Compiled an Elaborate and Effective Exhibitors' Book

HARRY REICHENBACH reports the completion of an effective press book which puts into the hands of exhibitors "a modus operandi unequalled in originality and make up," it is claimed to draw the crowds to the presentation of "Eyes of Youth," with Clara Kimball Young. Those who have viewed the campaign book assert it to be an invaluable aid to exhibitors in the intensive exploitation by the Equity Pictures Corporation, Inc., of this six-reel Harry Garson Special Production of Max Marcin's stage play.

One, three, six and twenty-four sheet posters visualize the most important epochs of the story. Eight pages are devoted to outstanding display advertising, for which cuts of various size and attractive variety are said to be available, including mats of all cuts. There are also dignified heralds, announcement slides, emphasizing marked epochs throughout the story of variegated colors, comprising amber, rose and blue tints, and pleasing combinations of coloring.

According to reports received, lobby displays of all sizes and descriptions, lobby cards, program suggestions, readers for preliminary insertion, biographies, thumb-nail press stories make up a striking array which will supply unquestionable aid to the exhibitors and cannot fail it is claimed, to attract a wide-spread attendance.

Hand colored photos of Clara Kimball Young, 22 by 28, will be seen in the lobbies of the best houses, while hand-decorated school slates, chestnut tag announcements, "Eyes of Youth" eye glasses, and other Reichenbach symbols have already been sent broadcast, it is asserted. According to statements made, illuminated signs will be seen in conspicuous motion-picture centers of the United States, while bill-post space on Elevated and Subway roads has been obtained.

"Everywoman" Ready to Show

F. P.–Lasky's Screen Production of Noted Allegory Said to Improve on the Stage Presentation

THE first print of "Everywoman," Famous Players-Lasky's Paramount-Artcraft version of Walter Browne's morality play which won such success on the stage simultaneously in America, Europe and Australia a few seasons ago, arrived in New York recently and was shown to the executives of the company and the members of the Publicity and Advertising Department. The picture is said to have been received with the utmost enthusiasm by all present.

George H. Melford was assigned the task of making the play into a photodramatic spectacle, and his efforts are reported to have met with unusual success and to have resulted in a production which, it is asserted by Famous Players-Lasky, has seldom been approached in lavishness. The continuity by Will M. Ritchey and the titles, embellished by the sculptural art of Willie Hopkins, add to the attractive features of the finished product. The various big scenes, it is reported, demand gorgeous settings and gowning, and the picture is said to set a new standard in costuming for motion picture productions

Some remarkable effects in photography are said to have been introduced by Paul Perry. Notable among these is the treatment of the character Nobody. This is accomplished by double exposure, making the figure entirely visible yet transparent. Double exposure is also cleverly employed in bringing out the figure of Flattery, who appears in reflection whenever Everywoman looks into her mirror.

Violet Heming was sent to California to play the title role and to be featured along with Theodore Roberts and Wanda Hawley. Miss Hawley, incidentally, plays the role of Beauty in the allegory. Then there is Clara Horton, as Youth; Margaret Loomis, as Modesty; Mildred Reardon, as Conscience, and Rebe Daniels as Vice. In addition, Theodore Roberts portrays Wealth; Monte Blue is Love; Edythe Chapman is Truth; Irving Cummings is Passion; James Neill is Nobody; Raymond Hatton is Flattery; Lucien Littlefield is Lord Witless; Noah Beery is Bluff; Jay Dwiggins is Stuff; Tully Marshall is Puff; Robert Brower is Age; Charles Ogle is Time; Fred Huntley is Dissipation and Clarence Geldart appears as the Auctioneer in the prologue.

"Everywoman," it is said, will be given to the public December 21st.

Vitagraph Opens New Branches

Offices in Five Large Centers are Given Additional Floor Space to Accommodate Increased Demand

VITAGRAPH reports that owing to the increasing demand for its products, it has found it necessary to establish branch exchanges in Buffalo and Albany, and in addition to move the branches in Philadelphia, New Orleans, Washington, D. C., Kansas City and St. Johns, B. C., into larger quarters.

"The new Vitagraph exchanges at Buffalo and Albany are already in operation," said John M. Quinn, general manager of Vitagraph, Inc., "and the final arrangements for three additional exchanges in other large cities will be completed within a week.

"In Philadelphia the branch office was moved from 229 North Twelfth street to 1225, 1227 and 1229 Vine street, where its handsome offices are located on the street floor. Vitagraph entertained the exhibitors of the Philadelphia district on the occasion of the formal opening, with Corinne Griffith, Gladys Leslie and Jean Paige as special hostesses.

"The New Orleans branch has moved from 347 Caroldelet street to a three-story building at 420 Camp street, in the heart of the business section of the city. In Washington the branch has added another floor to its already commodious quarters, giving it an additional 3,000 square feet of floor space. The Kansas City branch also had added several feet of floor space by moving to new quarters.

"At St. Johns, one of the most important film centres in Canada, our branch is moving from 167 Prince William street to the street floor and basement of the big British North American Bank building on the same street. A five years' lease was taken on the new offices and the work of building vaults and a large projection room is already under way."

Real Life Stories and Characters in Bloxbie Productions

What is claimed to be a distinct triumph in an original departure from the regular style of motion pictures, is that of the Bloxbie Film Corporation. The company making pictures for the state right market has capitalized on what is said to be a new idea and entirely different from any pictures being released to-day.

Heroes and heroines have been selected from the plain people in every walk of life, and from each individual the story of their past life has been woven into a scenario and picturized for the screen. It is stated that each picture will be produced only around those who have had sufficient publicity and adventurous life to warrant the producers' success.

"Young Americans" is the title chosen for the series; each playlet complete in itself and running about two reels. The first picture entitled "Buddies" features Corporal Barny Tovin and Sergeant Howard Cooper. The second is "The Doughnut Girls," featuring the McIntyre sisters who risked their lives serving doughnuts with the Salvation Army while in France. The success for the "Young American" series is claimed on the basis that they reflect the spirit of the times.

"Deliverance" Credited as Being a Truly Great Picture

There have been quite a number of really big motion pictures made in the last few years but according to New York critics among the most wonderful of all is that of Helen Keller, the deaf, dumb and blind girl, in "Deliverance," which was produced originally at the Lyric Theatre, New York City, and which will be seen in this city in a very short time. The critic of the New York Times says "it is a succession of wonders" and that seems to be everybody else's conclusion who has seen it.

Helen Keller has accomplished so many remarkable feats she has been appropriately called the "eighth wonder of the world" and it is astounding to think that she should have made such a pronounced success in a moving picture which fate denies her the privilege of ever seeing.

John H. Turner's "Simple Souls" Purchased For Blanche Sweet

Pathe Exchange, Inc., has recently received word from the Jesse D. Hampton studios in California that the latest work of the English novelist, John Hastings Turner, "Simple Souls," has been purchased and will be filmed shortly for Blanche Sweet.

The work is described as a "pure, delightful comedy," and as "one of the most original and entertaining books of the season, filled on every page with irresistible humor." Miss Sweet believes that it will give her the greatest opportunity she has enjoyed in a long time to display her talents in the comedy line.

Song on "House Without Children"

A wealth of music has been inspired by Robert McLaughlin's human interest drama, "The House Without Children." Mr. William R. Haskins has composed the music to homely lyrics by Will A. Heelan of a song bearing the same title as the photoplay, and the song has been accepted by Argus Enterprises, Inc., as the official song of the production, although another song had previously been inspired by the little girl in the story and had been indorsed and is to-day sung in conjunction with the presentation. It is entitled "Your Clouds Have a Silver Lining."

"After the Storm," with Edith Day in Lead, Due on Nov. 17.

Carle Carlton, General Manager of the Crest Picture Corporation, announces that the new feature motion-picture, entitled "After the Storm," featuring Edith Day and directed by Paul Scardon, will be released on or about the 17th of November.

Edith Day will appear on the stage in "Irene," at the Vanderbilt Theatre on November 18, 1919.

Thomas Carrigan With Capellani

Thomas J. Carrigan has been engaged by Director George Archainbaud for the lead in June Caprice's next picture for Albert Capellani. Mr. Carrigan played the title role in the screen version of "Checkers."

Old Eclair Company to Resume Activities in Filmdom

We learn through Mr. Ratisbonne, who has just returned from a three months' trip to England and the Continent, that the old Eclair Company of Paris has emerged from the comparative inactivity forced upon it by the war into a new and financially strong organization with a capital of 5,000,000 francs.

The new company will not produce films but will print and distribute the best pictures obtainable on the world's market. Mr. Ratisbonne is negotiating long-term contracts for the printing and distributing of American films on the Continent, and announces that the film men, desirous of securing good distribution for their product, should communicate with him at 729 Seventh avenue, Room 704, Telephone, Bryant 1574.

"Get-Rich-Quick" Wallingford To Be Seen on the Film Screen

The announcement comes from Albert E. Smith, President of Vitagraph, that J. Rufus Wallingford famous character of the "Get-Rich-Quick Wallingford" stories, and his almost equally well-known side partner, Blackie Daw, are to make their appearance on the screen.

Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester are writing the scenario for the screen version of the Wallingford stories. Mr. Chester wrote the original stories. He is production editor of Vitagraph.

It is stated that Mr. Chester's Wallingford stories, as shown on the screen, will form a part of the series of special features by America's foremost fiction writers which Vitagraph will produce during the coming year.

High Praise Given the Fairbanks Film by Capitol Management

Hiram Abrams of the United Artists is the recipient of a letter from Edward Bowes, Vice-President and Managing Director of the Capitol Theatre, in which a glowing tribute is paid to the Fairbanks picture, "His Majesty, The American," for the highly important part it played in making the opening of the Capitol such a remarkable success. Mr. Bowes writes in part: "I cannot imagine anything more appropriate to the dedication of our theatre than this extraordinarily fine picture. I only hope that we are fortunate enough to have as future feature attractions pictures even approximating it in merit."

Good Cast Is Assembled For the "Partners of the Night"

Goldwyn Pictures announces that "Partners of the Night" is now under production at the Biograph studios in the East under the direction of Paul Scardon. This picture is one of the Eminent Author's series and is by Leroy Scott.

A good cast has been selected with Pinna Nesbit and William B. Davidson, William Ingersoll, Emmett Corrigan, Mario Majeroni, Vincent Coleman, Frank Kingdon, Tenny Wright, Lew O'Connor, and Ed. Boulder also appear.

"The Capitol" Scheduled Dec. 7

Leah Baird and Strong Supporting Cast Appears in Hodkinson Film From Thomas' Play

W. W. HODKINSON Corporation announces the release on December 7th of Leah Baird in Augustus Thomas' stage success, "The Capitol," an Artco production made under the executive direction of Arthur F. Beck, and personally directed by George Irving. The shadow of national life surrounds "The Capitol," which is a story of social intrigue and a woman's fight for her honor and her husband. When Frank Keenan and Amelia Bingham were jointly starred in this play on the stage it was one of the outstanding successes of its period and aroused an excited and stormy newspaper controversy which, needless to say, added to the theatrical producer's and its author's profits.

Mr. Beck has given Miss Baird an excellent supporting cast and the pictorial investiture of the story is richly and finely done.

The story concerns the efforts of a crooked agent of big interests at Washington to whip a fearless, public-serving Congressman and prevent his passage of bills as well as his own elevation to the United States Senate. This crooked agent, years before having brought ruin to a home, having fled with the wife of a middle western man, having driven a deserted husband from peace and solace into the priesthood, draws all of these separate forces into a tense drama by the imminence of ruin for the daughter of the woman whose life he had wrecked.

Dramatically, this story is said to be as tense and vivid as "As A Man Thinks," the first of Miss Baird's picturizations of Augustus Thomas' heroines, which not only was at its outset but is now six months after release, one of the assured successes of its type and kind among screen releases.

The cast in "The Capitol" comprises such well-known players as Robert T. Haines, Alexander Gaden, William B. Davidson, Ben Hendricks, Downing Clark, Brian Darley and Donald Hugh McBride.

Closer Cooperation In United

J. A. Berst Says Exhibitors of all Districts will Have Local Representative on Nat'l Board

According to an announcement, coming from Mr. J. A. Berst, President of United Picture Theatres of America, the United will bring into operation a plan which will place the actual control and business policy of United in the hands of the exhibitors.

It is pointed out that by this cooperative plan, United exhibitor stockholders in the various territories, will elect an exhibitor committee; the chairman of this committee will represent his territory on the National Board of Directors of United; and in this way the exhibitors will have a voice and a voting power in all meetings of the United, help shape the policies of the company, be active in conducting its business affairs, and work in a truly co-operative way to make United bigger than ever.

In the statement just issued Mr. Berst declares: "United is about to increase its Board of Directors to thirty-six. Thirty of these directors are to be selected from the different exchange centers according to their respective quotas.

"The selection of directors is to be made by the franchise holders in each territory. We do not desire to influence this selection. As a matter of fact, the selection should be free, wide and open.

"For the purpose of cementing the relationship of our large body of exhibitor members and of exercising the power of co-operation locally as well as nationally, a local United Exhibitor's Board of Trade, with headquarters in our local exchange, will be formed. These Boards will work along the same lines as the Rotary Clubs which have done so much to build up business co-operation in other lines of industry. Meetings will be held once a month and the Boards are to be most active in the management of United. United's Cincinnati office has already formed one of these Boards of Trade and the plan is working splendidly."

Fitzgerald Finishes the First of Famous Directors' Series

Dallas M. Fitzgerald, who is directing the first production for Hallmark Pictures Corporation series of 26 Famous Directors' Pictures from an original story by Leon D. Britton with Anna Lehr starred, supported by Marie Shotwell, Edmund Breese, Wallace Ray, George Cooper, Glenn Kunkel, Joseph Granby, Edward Elkas and James Cullen, announces that the actual production work on this picture will be completed this week.

New Film Company Complete

Marshall Neilan Announces First Film as Started; Personnel has Experienced and Able Men

AFTER months of preparation, Marshall Neilan Productions is now a reality, and work on the first picture is already under way at the Neilan studio in Hollywood. The studio is now a scene of great activity night and day, and work is reported to be progressing rapidly under Mr. Neilan's personal direction.

As his first lieutenant and chief assistant in the producing branch of his organization, Mr. Neilan hs Victor Heerman, well known in the film world for his work with Keystone, Mack Sennett and Fox.

Also assisting in the direction of the pictures are Tom Held and H. I. Peyton, both of whom have done excellent work in the past as assistant directors.

Turning the camera cranks are two cinema experts of considerable ability and experience, Henry Cronjager and Sam Landers. Assisting in the camera work is Foster Leonard.

The art direction is under the charge of Ben Carre, who for five years acted in the same capacity with Maurice Tourneur. The electrical and lighting department are taken care of by Howard M. Ewing, who for five years was chief electrician of the Famous Players-Lasky studio. Mr. Ewing is also the inventor of the Ewing Light.

At the helm of the business wheel of the studio is Wellington Wales, who is well known as an efficiency expert in the film world. As eastern representative in charge of sales, Mr. Neilan has the services of one who is reported to be one of the pioneers of the distribution field in the person of J. R. Grainger. Pete Smith is the director of publicity and and advertising.

Miss Lucita Squier, William Linahan, George Elder, Clarence O. Brown, Nat Deverich, Virginia Bellas, Benjamin Buxton, William Bomb, William H. Carr, Charles A. Smith, Lancie Morrell, C. J. Blampied, Cash Shockey and Frank Stucky, are also reported to be filling positions of importance and responsibilty in the new company.

Initial Bookings on "The Joyous Liar" Reported to Be Heavy

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that the J. Warren Kerrigan-Robert Brunton production, "The Joyous Liar," has in its opening week enjoyed a heavier national contract booking than any Kerrigan picture ever made has done before in the first four weeks, dating from release day.

Mr. Kerrigan has repeatedly expressed his wishes to link himself with author values, with finer direction and to have his pictures rank deservedly with the best technical product in the market. These wishes he is said to have achieved through the formation of his own producing company in association with Robert Brunton, thereby obtaining the facilities of the great Brunton studios in Los Angeles.

Claims "Beckoning Roads" One of Best Barriscale Films

J. L. Frothingham, general manager of the B. B. Features, is loud in his praise of "Beckoning Roads," the next Barriscale feature for Robertson-Cole. Mr. Frothingham who saw the picture in its raw state declares that it is one of the best Barriscale features ever offered the public.

After scenario experts had spent much time looking over a mass of scenarios for the popular star, "The Luck of Geraldine" by Kathleen Norris has been selected for Miss Barriscale's coming picture.

Charles Ray Busy on Interiors for "Watch Out, William"

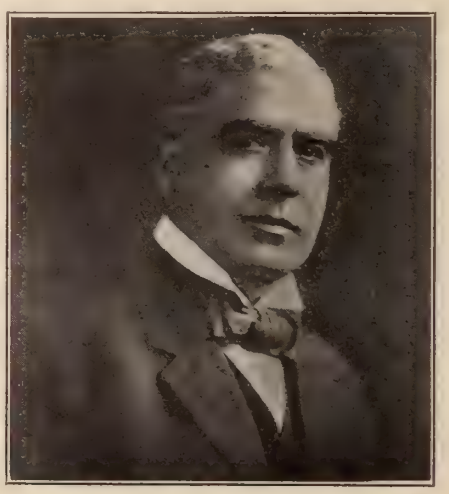
Charles Ray, directed by Jerry Storm and supported by Winifred Westover, have been busy the past week taking interior scenes for the current Ray Picture, "Watch Out, William." The story was written by Agnes Christine Johnston, and the cast selected includes the names of Betty Schade, Dick Rush, Donald McDonald, George F. Hernandez and Lew Morrison.

Frank Dazey Joins the Scenario Staff of Louis B. Mayer

Frank M. Dazey, son of Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," has joined the scenario staff of Louis B. Mayer, producer of the Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin pictures. He has already served on the scenario staff of Vitagraph, Metro, Selznick, American and Lasky companies, it is said. Mr. Dazey left last week for the coast to start work at the Mayer studios in Los Angeles.

Grace Davison Ill; Work Held Up Temporarily on Pioneer Film

With the stage all set for the opening shot on the next Grace Davison production, it was learned that the star could not begin work owing to a heavy cold contracted last week while flying from New York to her Long Island home in an army aeroplane. Miss Davison's condition is not regarded as serious, and within a week or ten days, it is expected that her physicians will consent to her return to work.



Gilson Willets, author of the scenario of the new Pathe serial "The Adventures of Ruth"

Robertson-Cole Producing Units in West All Going Full Blast

At the Haworth Studios, the "Tong Man" has just been completed. Hayakawa leads in the cast, which also includes Toyo Fugita, Helen Eddy, Jack Abbe and Marc Robbins. Hayakawa has already started on his new picture, which is called "The Beggar Prince"—a romance of the days of the Arabian Nights. Hayakawa plays a dual role. The cast also includes: Beatrice La Plante, Thelma Percy, Robert Bolder, Joseph Swickert, Bert Hadley and Buddy Post.

Edith Storey is nearing the completion of "The Golden Hope," the cast of which includes: Marin Sais, Carl Gerard, Howard Gaye, William Elmer, Omar Whitehead, Frank Shawa and A. J. Fleming.

Bessie Barriscale is at present engaged on the picturization of Jeanne Judson's book, "Beckoning Roads." Niles Welch, Gloria Hope, George Periolet, Thomas Holding, Joseph Dowling and Dorcas Mathews also appear in the picture.

Brentwood has two companies at work, one directed by Claude H. Mitchell and the other by Henry Kolker. Mitchell has almost completed his picture. It has been given no official title as yet. Mitchell's cast is headed by ZaSu Pitts and includes Henry Woodward, Edwin Stevens, W. H. Bainbridge, Fanny Midgeley, Frank Hayes, Julanne Johnson, Hughie Mack, Anna Hernandez and Fred Mack.

Use of Films by Non-Theatrical Organizations is Increasing

If non-theatrical organizations continue taking up the exhibition of motion pictures, it will be necessary to organize an advisory lecture staff. This, at least, is the opinion of Miss Rose Tapley, manager of the club and social service section of the Non-Theatrical Distribution Department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

On November 5th, Miss Tapley spoke before the Theatre club of the Boys' High School in Brooklyn. Last Wednesday evening Miss Tapley addressed the Federated Boys' Club at Tenth Street and Avenue A. Next Sunday evening she and her assistant Edward Lipkin have been urged to give a talk before the Brownsville Labor Lyceum Club of Brooklyn.

On November 12th, Miss Tapley will speak upon "The Value of the Motion Picture in Church Work" at the Second Presbyterian Church in Paterson, N. J. She will also address the Municipal Forum Committee on the "Lincoln Cycle" motion pictures, which the committee is utilizing in its work, at a meeting to be held at Cooper Union, New York, November 13th.

Cody Picture Reaches Half Way Mark Toward Completion

While L. J. Gasnier, producer of the Lew Cody vehicles, is in New York on business connected with the distribution and exploitation of the Cody productions. "The Butterfly Man," the George Barr McCutcheon story being filmed under Ida May Park's direction with Cody in the title role has reached the half-way mark toward completion.

Fox Films Popular in Canada; Farnum and Mix Favorites

Vincent J. McCabe, manager for Fox Film Corporation, has just made a flying trip to New York from Toronto to arrange for extra prints of Fox Entertainments, for which there is said is a big demand in the Dominion.

"The Canadians like Fox pictures," said Mr. McCabe. The business of Fox Film Corporation has trebled in Canada within the last year. We now have six branches, having opened offices at Winnipeg, Vancouver and Calgary. There are eight hundred motion picture theatres in Canada and practically all of them are showing Fox pictures.

"Checkers" has had a phenomenal run in Canada. It played two weeks at Massey Hall, a Toronto house which has a seating capacity of 3,500 and it is returning for a second engagement. Another Canadian favorite is "Evangeline." "Kathleen Mavourneen" is going very well, as are the Sunshine Comedies, Mutt & Jeff and Fox News. William Farnum is a prime favorite. So is Tom Mix.

Cohen of Bulls-Eye Returns East With Number of New Releases

As a result of his second visit to the West Coast studios of the Bulls-Eye Film Corporation in Hollywood, California, Milton L. Cohen, president of the company, has returned to New York with the first two releases of the Mercury Comedies, five releases of the one-reel Holly Comedies, the two reels which make up the Pendleton, Ore., "Round-Up" pictorial and the first two releases of the Sunset-Burrud "Legends of the Wilderness."

Including the Gale Henry Comedies, the Bulls-Eye Master-Comedies and the Napoleon and Sally "monkey-shines," Bulls-Eye now has a program numbering seven subjects, it is reported. Previews of the new Bulls-Eye subjects will be held at once for the benefit of state right buyers, according to statements received.

Holiday Release of De Luxe Chaplin Comedy December 28

The Holidays' release of the new edition of Chaplain comedies De Luxe, recently acquired by Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation for distribution, through arrangement with the Clark-Cornelius Corporation, will be "The Vagabond." Mr. Hall announces the release date for this Chaplin, December 28th. W. F. Rodgers, general sales manager, Hallmark, reports that bookings from all the first-run houses are coming in, daily. "One A.M." is announced as the first of this Chaplin series for the New Year, releasing February 8th.

Change of Managers at Pioneer's Cleveland Exchange Reported

J. J. Mooney, under whose management the Cleveland exchange of the Pioneer Film Corporation began operation, resigned last week and was succeeded as manager by C. R. Nelson. Mr. Mooney leaves the film circles, it is reported, to enter business under his own name.

Vernon M. Schuback Seattle manager for Universal and W. W. Kofeldt, manager of the new Liberty theatre Wenatchee, Wash.

New York Bookings on "The Gay Old Dog" Reported Heavy

Following a special showing of "The Gay Old Dog" at the Eltinge Theatre last Monday, which was attended by many exhibitors and others interested in the film industry, it was announced by the New York branch of Pathe Exchange, Inc., that the bookings on the Hobart Henley production were exceeding all expectations. The picture, which was adapted from Edna Ferber's story by Mrs. Sidney Drew, stars John Cumberland.

The Henley production, released Nov. 2d, has been booked over virtually the entire Marcus Loew circuit in the Metropolitan District, including the following theaatres: Bijou, Broadway, Circle, 86th Street, New York, New 42d Street, 116th Street, Burland and the Seventh Avenue.

William Fox booked it at the Academy of Music, while other prominent neighborhood houses, which scheduled it early last week, are the Universal, Chatham, City Hall, New Atlantic Garden, St. Mark's East Side Beauty, Regent, Village, Greenwich, Broadway Lyceum, Electra, Tip Top, Willoughby, Wyckoff, West End, Imperial, Richmond Hill, Manor, the Strand, Stamford, Conn.; Playhouse, Mt. Vernon; La Rochelle, New Rochelle; Elite-Montauk.

United Film Service, Saint Louis, secured Eastern Missouri and Southern Illinois, while the Strand Feature of Detroit will handle Michigan.

Clever Titles by Logue Featured in "The Amazing Lovers"

"The Amazing Lovers," the forthcoming feature produced by A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., as a B. A. Rolfe production, is to be accompanied by a striking series of titles prepared by Charles A. Logue. The titles are couched in terms that smack distinctly of the base-ball diamond and are part of a cleverly worked-out comparison between the life of the society set and that of the professional base-ball player. The following, which appears in the foreword, is typical of Mr. Logue's style of treatment:

"That alluring group, known in the Sunday papers as Society, leads an existence as ordered and systematic as the Players in the National League. They run a schedule of about 150 Games of Dinners, making their Social Hits, Social Errors and Safe Plays in the Outfield of Flirtation. They play the Game in a Uniform called Evening Clothes and the Players never dispute with the Umpire, who grants the decrees of divorce after Decisions on Misplays around the Home Plate."

"Percy" Heath of Universal, the Right Man in the Right Place

According to an announcement from Universal, Eugene P. Heath, better known probably as "Percy" Heath, is a man unusually qualified to fill the difficult position of scenario editor which is the present role he is engaged in on the company's staff at Universal City.

After graduating from a Maryland University, it is said, he became a special writer and later dramatic critic of the Baltimore Herald. David Belasco later secured his services as play reader and publicity expert. Mr. Heath next became general press representative for the late Frederick Thompson, and later on for Henry W. Savage. Mr. Heath was also formerly chief of Charles Dillingham's publicity staff.

Chester's "Screenics" to Combine Animal Life and Humor

C. L. Chester Productions, Inc., announces that starting on Nov. 23, there will be released at the rate of one a week a series of one-reelers under the general title of "Screenics." "Screenics" will consist of a two-fold combination, a section devoted to animals which will take up about two-thirds of the release, and a department of witticisms which will occupy the remainder of the reel. The latter section, it is said, will be made up by some of the leading humorists of the country and will consist of an original and humorous tale each week.

Edith Taliaferro Is To Star in "Who's Your Brother?" Soon

Broadway fans in particular and "movie" fans generally will be probably interested to know that Edith Taliaferro will soon be seen along the Rialto on the "silver sheet" in a romantic drama from the pen of Robert Bronson Stockbridge, and which was produced by The Curtiss Pictures Corporation under the personal supervision of John G. Adolfi.

That there are many strong "action" scenes in the latest Clara Kimball Young feature "Eyes of Youth" is certain, judging from the above. The feature is released through Equity Pictures Corp.

Baggot's Range Undergoes Test

New Burston Serial, "The Hawk's Trail," Imposes Fifteen Roles on the Versatile Star

JUDGING from several hundred interesting still photographs recently received by the home office of Burston Films, Inc., Louis Burston's latest serial, "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggot and featuring Rhea Mitchell opposite, possesses variety and unusual situations.

As was recently pointed out Mr. Burston's idea of the model serial is that it should depend for its suspense upon the plot development and the action which forwards this, rather than upon interpolated stunts. It is claimed that the result as shown by the few episodes already screened in New York is a fifteen-episode feature built up like a fifteen chapter novel, except that while each episode is complete in itself, the thread of a big story runs through all, binding them together. The story has to do with the efforts of a scientific criminologist, known to the underworld as "The Hawk," to capture a slick individual who bears so striking a resemblance to himself (the Hawk), that the complications are as numerous as they are surprising.

The character of the Hawk is played by King Baggot, who has found it a most sympathetic role, it is said. Naturally when a detective sets out to capture a man who might easily be mistaken for himself, he has more use for disguises than Sherlock Holmes himself. Therefore, the script provides King Baggot with the opportunity for the display of wide dramatic ability. Among the fifteen different characters played by the star may be mentioned a high-caste Chinese, a convict, an East Indian Swami, a stoker, a gentleman of leisure, a burglar, and, of course, a straight part, the Hawk himself.

Announcement of the distribution and release of "The Hawk's Trail" will be made from the Burston Home Offices in the very near future.

"Bandbox" Praised in Chicago

Chicago House Plays Hodkinson Film: Is Called Great Melodrama Packed With Thrills

A. T. MEIR, owner of the Rose Theatre, one of Chicago's "Loop" district first runs, has selected Doris Kenyon in "The Bandbox," the W. W. Hodkinson release, as his next week seat-filler at the Rose because, to use his own terms, it packs more thrills into one six reel feature subject than most manufacturers put in a fifteen episode serial of two reels each.

The booking success of the first Deitrich-Beck production of a series of Louis Joseph Vance novels is conspicuous. Before the picture was ever delivered to the exchanges the Hodkinson organization, its distributors, had received and returned several hundred contracts unapproved preferring to offer the picture to exhibitors after they had seen it and immediately recognized its values.

During the past week a trade showing of "The Bandbox" was held for the writers and critics of the motion picture journals and simultaneously a showing was held in Chicago for the daily newspaper and western trade press critics. Chicago opinion, the first to get into print in this instance because of the printers' strike in the East, was unanimously favorable to both "The Bandbox" and its star, and the expressions of the New York writers were more enthusiastic than they customarily give in advance of the publication of their views.

Screen Opinions, Chicago, for example, says: "An alert and intelligent audience will derive the most pleasure from 'The Bandbox.' The mystery element in the Louis Joseph Vance story has been well maintained and the interest is held throughout. The work of Doris Kenyon is pleasing throughout, and she registers well in the big emotional scenes. Supporting her to good advantage are: Alexander Gaden, Walter McEwen and Gretchen Hartmen."

Three recent additions to the Lasky stock forces have been made by Casting Director Lou Goodstadt within the past few days. The trio includes Ruth Ashby, William Boyd and Allan Connor.

New Capital Film to Deal Heavy Blow for Ireland's Freedom

S. L. Barnhard, President of the Capital Film Company, has announced the acquisition of world rights to the great Irish picture, "FOR THE FREEDOM OF IRELAND," produced by Creation Films, Inc. The picture reveals startling truths about Ireland according to statements received; and its presentation at this time is bound to assure it tremendous popularity, it is said.

Mr. Barnhard is enthusiastic over the new picture, and according to reports, the Capital Film Company is sparing nothing to put it across big. Endorsements of leading Irish organizations throughout the country are reported as being received daily. The statement is made that a special corps of publicity men will exploit this photoplay which is being backed by an elaborate advertising campaign.

"FOR THE FREEDOM OF IRELAND" is represented as being a screen champion of the Irish cause and as a feature which is bound to find a host of enthusiastic sympathizers, not only among the Irish, but among all believers in the right of freedom for the smaller nations.

E. Jose to Direct Anita Stewart

Louis B. Mayer has selected Edward Jose to direct Miss Anita Stewart in Caroline Lockhart's famous story, "The Fighting Shepherdess." This will be Miss Stewart's first production after her two months' rest in the East. She will leave for the coast shortly to begin work about the middle of November.

Mr. Jose directed the latest Norma Talmadge release, "The Isle of Conquest," and the big special, "Mothers of Men." At one time he is said to have directed Sarah Bernhardt.

Silas Seadler Is Engaged on the Realart Publicity Staff

Realart announces the engagement of Silas Seadler on its publicity staff. Mr. Seadler was a former newspaper and magazine writer and has also been the personal press representative for several well-known picture stars. He was recently associated with Charles Reed Jones in a free lance publicity organization.

We suspect that Harry MacDonald used a trick camera on this Fox house but he labels it "A Quiet Evening at the Strand, Denver. Boy, page John Zauft. Arthur James—please copy"

New Picture for Alice Brady Announced by Realart

Alice Brady, star of the stage and one of the Realart luminaries is to do "The Fear Market," an elaborate picture play of romance, intrigue and love.

Realart's production will follow closely the stage play of the same name by Princess Troubetskoy which ran at the Comedy Theatre in New York four years ago with Edmund Breese and Sydney Shields in the principal roles.

The picture will be filmed while Miss Brady is playing the subway circuit in her last season's popular success, "Forever After," and will be the last photoplay the Realart star will make before leaving for an extended absence from New York with her play.

In presenting Miss Brady in "The Fear Market," President Arthur S. Kane of Realart Pictures Corporation holds to his originally adopted slogan of "Stories based on successful books and stage plays."

Hallmark Seeks Original Tales with Dramatic Possibilities

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, announces that, following the establishment of a scenario department at the Hallmark Studios, 230 West 38th street, Hallmark Pictures is in the market for original stories with dramatic possibilities and that all scripts should be submitted to the Scenario Department, Hallmark Pictures Corporation, 230 West Thirty-eighth street, for approval.

Mr. Hall suggests that the script be submitted in brief synopsis form, the writer giving the actionable situations only. Authors wishing to dispose of the screen rights to their works, are also requested to submit a brief synopsis.

Production of the twelfth episode of the "innovation serial" "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Baggot, has been completed by Burston Films, Inc., under the direction of Woodrow Van Dyke, from the story by Nan Blair. Louis Burston, president of the producing company is personally supervising this, his third serial.

American's Next Super-Feature

"Eve in Exile" said by President Hutchinson to be Greatest Cosmo Hamilton Work

AS its next super-feature attraction American Film Company, Inc., will offer Cosmo Hamilton's story—"Eve In Exile." This, the producer claims, is by long odds the most powerful of all the Cosmo Hamilton stories and from the reception accorded his "Scandal" as a speaking stage attraction, it should enjoy a great success.

The biggest theatres in Chicago and New York played "Scandal" continuously for more than half a year. Hundreds of thousands of people witnessed it and either returned themselves to enjoy it again, or sent their friends to see it. Millions have read Cosmo Hamilton's novels. Consequently the exhibitor offering a Cosmo Hamilton feature is almost guaranteed a box office attraction of a sensational sort.

"In undertaking the presentation in films of Cosmo Hamilton's super-achievement, 'Eve in Exile,' we naturally prepared to stage the production in the elaborate manner such an unusual story deserves," explained President Samuel S. Hutchinson of the American Film Company in discussing the new offering with a News interviewer.

"First of all we gathered a cast that is beyond all question one of the greatest that has ever appeared in a single screen attraction. I know the words 'all-star cast' have been used times without number—so many times in fact that they have rather lost their real meaning, for certain producers have not hesitated to attach the words 'all-star' cast to their own stock company players. Consequently I dislike to refer to the 'Eve In Exile' cast as an 'all-star cast,' though that is just what it is. Instead I shall merely call your attention to the fact that we specially engaged such players as Thomas Santschi, Wheeler Oakman, Charlotte Walker, Melbourne MacDowell, Martha Mattox, Violet Palmer, L. C. Shumway, George Periolat, Harvey Clark and Perry Banks—to mention only a few of them, and leave you to judge as to the individual merits of each player. Exhibitors well know that the majority of those named above have themselves been featured as the leading player in any number of big productions. Yet in 'Eve In Exile' all have wonderful opportunities for the display of their peculiar talents and so enthusiastic did each player become over the particular role assigned him or her, that each put every ounce of energy into the portrayal of the role assigned, and a truly wonderful production results.

"Lois Zellner, who is responsible for many sensational screen successes, was entrusted with the task of preparing the continuity and working script of the Cosmo Hamilton story, and handled it in an exceptional manner. Burton George, producer of a large number of big feature photoplays, directed 'Eve In Exile' and Dal Clawson, long a cameraman for Lois Weber and other famous producers, was behind the camera. Some of the 'shots' are exceptionally beautiful and numerous art critics who have witnessed 'Eve In Exile' at a private advance showing have gone out of their way to compliment us on the artistry of the production."

"The titling, tinting and other mechanical technical work that goes to make any production of note, was handled by experts in their respective lines and the few exhibitors who have been afforded an advance glimpse of the play either at our plant or in a Pathe Exchange have not hesitated to declare it the equal of any great feature produced in the past two years. When the trade paper and newspaper critics are invited to behold it, I am sure these advance predictions will be more than fulfilled."

"Our Chicago laboratories have just completed the work of preparing the prints for shipment and exhibitors are invited to see the American Film Company representative at their nearest Pathe Exchange without delay for early bookings. Reservations have already been made for 'Eve In Exile' by a number of the biggest and best theatres and prompt action is necessary if an early booking is desired."

"Mystery Yellow Room" Wins

Tom Moore's Washington House Gets Receipts Surpassing Returns on Any Previous Performances

THE Realart Pictures Corporation is the recipient of an enthusiastic telegram from Tom Moore, manager of the Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C., wherein high praise is accorded to the Emile Chautard production, "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," as a puller for box-office receipts. The telegram follows:

"Mystery of Yellow Room made wonderful impression on packed houses. My Rialto receipts to-day undoubtedly beyond those of Daddy Long Legs, which holds record of house. Stop. Biggest crowds since Long Legs and at least two thousand turned away. Stop. Am elated beyond words. Stop. Realart setting pace hard to equal. Stop. Again our congratulations.

"Tom Moore."

In conjunction with Mr. Moore's exploitation forces Realart has been preparing the presentation of this story for a long time in advance. Not only was the interest in this drama keyed-up by advance stories, but the climax was the actual presentation by Mr. Moore, who had devised a tense prologue. The attention of the audience was held from the moment a mellow light of mystery illumined the scene of a small, barred "Yellow Room" up to the very end, when the really insoluble mystery was finally cleared up.

Phyllis Terry in "Kismet"

In a recent article telling of Louis Mercanton's acquisition of world rights to Kismet, a line stated that Philip Terry was one of those in a leading role. This should have read as Phyllis Terry, niece of Ellen Terry.

Noted Plays Acquired by Metro

"Lights O' London" Melodrama, and "Judah" Brought Over From England by Cohen

PURCHASE of "The Lights O' London," George R Sim's melodrama, and "Judah," a modern play by Henry Arthur Jones, is announced by Metro Pictures Corporation. These plays, both of them famous and familiar to discriminating theatregoers for a generation, were among the dozen or more recently brought from England by Harry J. Cohen, manager of Metro's foreign department, as available material for Screen Classics, Inc., productions to be released by Metro.

"The Lights O' London" and "Judah" help to round out the thirty-six notable dramatic plays and widely read novels which will make up Metro's output of the "fewer and better" pictures for 1919–20. The full puota of thirty-six is rapidly nearing completion, and toward this end the entire literary and dramatic field is being swept, ransacked in order that the same high standard of screen material may be maintained as has recently been announced.

When Mr. Cohen was in Lodon a great number of English books and plays were submitted to him as screen material and he examined the offerings of many agents in a search for suitable vehicles for Metro stars. He made a tentative selection of about a dozen. Among these were "The Lights O' London" and "Judah." The acquisition of these two stage successes follows close upon Metro's announcement of the purchase of the farce, "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," by Mark Swan and C. W. Bell, which together with Paul Armstrong's "Alias Jimmy Valentine," Richard Ganthoney's "A Message From Mars," and Rachel Crothers's "Old Lady 31," comprise the Metro purchases recently announced, and pave the way for the remaining few yet to be acquired.

Production of "The Lights O' London" will follow the presentation of the five Drury Lane melodramas purchased by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, on his recent trip to England, and which include "The Best of Luck," now nearing completion; "The Hope," "The Great Millionaire," "Hearts Are Trumps" and "The Marriages of Mayfair."

Cast Is Set for "Easy to Get," Marguerite Clark's Latest

Production is nearing completion at the 56th street studio of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation on "Easy to Get," Marguerite Clark's first Eastern picture since her return from the West coast, Walter Edwards, who directed all of Miss Clark's pictures in the West, was brought East specially for the forthcoming picture, and is assisted by Fred J. Robinson with Hal Young at the camera.

Miss Clark has the role of a bride, Milly Morehouse, and, it is said, the opportunities for her charming comedy were never more frequent. Playing opposite Miss Clark is Harrison Ford, the forceful young leading man who takes the part of husband Bob. The other members of the cast include: Rodney La Rocque, Helen Green, "Kid" Broad, Herbert Barrington and Julia R. Hurley.

"Dawn," New Blackton-Pathe Film, Will Be Released Nov. 30

Commodore J. Stuart Blackton gives the motion picture world what is described as "another noteworthy example of the silent art" in "Dawn," which Pathe will release on November 30th. "Dawn" is the second of a series of Blackton productions to be distributed by Pathe, "The Moonshine Trail" being its predecessor.

Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon have the featured roles in "Dawn." Others in the cast are: Flora Finch, Harry Davenport, James Furey, Fanny Rice, Gladys Valerie, Margaret Barry, Eddie Dunn and Gus Alexander. The story was adapted for screening by Stanley Olmsted.

Fischer Compiles Big Press Book for "The Amazing Lovers"

A thirty-two page exhibitor's service book is now being prepared by the publicity department of A. H. Fischer Features, Inc., on "The Amazing Lovers," the B. A. Rolfe production produced by the Fischer corporation as the first picture of a series based on stories by Robert W. Chambers. "The Amazing Lovers" is an adaptation by Charles A. Logue of Mr. Chambers's "The Shining Band."

According to statements made, the campaign, as outlined in the book, is flexible to the requirements of each exhibitor who, knowing his local conditions best, shall alone determine the extent of the application of the campaign. By reason of this fact every manager of a theatre, from the smallest house to the largest, has a ready-made campaign that he may use if he so wishes, it is claimed.

One of the features of the book is the inclusion of the Grace Darling articles — the Grace Darling Talks to Girls — which the International Feature Service, Inc., has granted the Fischer corporation permission to reproduce. Thirteen articles make up the series.

Robertson-Cole Scores Ten Strike In Naming Max Levy in Chicago

The appointment of Max Levy at Chicago manager of Robertson-Cole Distributing Corporation, assures this concern of strong representation in the territory, as Mr. Levy has been connected with the picture game for many years and is known and liked by practically every exhibitor in the middle west.

Mr. Levy's return from a seven weeks' visit in New York, was the occasion of a welcome home jollification meeting of exhibitors. The new manager has some active exploitation plans which he intends to make effective at once in connection with the forthcoming release of Maurice Tourneur's screen masterpiece "The Broken Butterfly."

Long Shots and Exceptional Scenery Feature Farnum's Next

William Farnum, Fox star, now at work on a picture being made under the temporary title of "Pierre Le Grand" has in this photoplay that will tax the ingenuity of John Boyle, the cameraman, and will demand of the director, J. Gordon Edwards, the masterwork of his successful career. William Farnum wanted this production to be something different from anything he had yet done on the screen. To that end many remarkable shots were placed in the script and many an hour has been spent by the director and the cameraman in studying the best way to gain the maximum of results from the novelties called for in the scenario.

It has been decided that on one scene twenty-six cameras will shoot simultaneously from different angles, so that the full value may be obtained. In another scene four cameras are used, and Director Edwards is called upon to direct two scenes simultaneously.

Screen-Camera Reveals How Life Develops Under Incubation

The development of scientific research through the use of moving pictures has taken another step forward. Charles F. Herm of the department of physiology, American Museum of History, and an expert in cinema-microscopy, has been added to the staff of the New Screen Magazine, "The Reel of Knowledge," distributed by the Universal Film Manufacturing Co.

Mr. Herm has made several interesting pictures for the New Screen Magazine. One of these shows how life begins in an egg. What happens after the egg is placed in an incubator is said to be faithfully recorded up to the instant when the chick picks its way through the shell and utters its first "peep."

Lytell Company at Lake Tahoe

A wire to the Metro studios in Hollywood from Truckee, Cal., states that 3,600 feet of unusual sunrise negative was exposed on the location at Lake Tahoe, where Bert Lytell and his supporting company are photographing Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Right of Way," for Screen Classics, Inc.

Normand Renews Her Contract

Star Voices Belief That Definite Line of Characterizations Mars Ability of Stage Artist

MABEL NORMAND has just renewed a long-term contract with Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. This announcement was made at the Goldwyn offices last week.

The Goldwyn star is now in New York on a short vacation between productions. She has just finished "Pinto," by Victor Schertzinger, her director, a screen play that, according to those who have seen the first print at the Culver City Studios, is destined to surpass in popularity any of Miss Normand's previous productions, not excepting "Jinx" that is being heralded by exhibitors, it is said, as one of the best box office pictures issued in the past twelve months.

In speaking of her ambitions for the future as a Goldwyn star, Miss Normand made it clear that she does not wish to base her popularity on any one definite line of characterizations. She believes that there is danger of an actress becoming too distinctly typed and that to avoid this there should be marked variety in the story material provided. Mr. Schertzinger's story, "Pinto," appealed to her particularly because it offered a role unlike anything she had essayed in the past, that of a western ranch girl, who is more at home with horses than with people.

Miss Normand said that she looked forward to returning to the Culver City Studios to start work on her next picture, the continuity of which is now being prepared.

Jack Dempsey to Appear in Film

Topp1er of Jess Willard to Pose For Camera on Coast According to Frank P. Spellman

TAKING cognizance of the saying that to the victor belongs the spoils, Jack Dempsey who some months ago pained firm believers in the unconquerable might of size by disposing of big Jess Willard in a few hectic rounds, thereby acquiring the world's heavyweight fistic crown, is shortly to disport himself in the glare of the Cooper-Hewitts.

Of late Dempsey has been the attraction with the Sells Floto Circus, thereby following in the footsteps of his defeated opponent. A few weeks before the footlights convinced the young title holder he was not cut out to follow vaudeville.

Now Frank P. Spellman, well-known circus and carnival showman, declares he represents Dempsey and his manager, Jack Kearns, and states he is arranging for the appearance of the champion in pictures. Mr. Spellman visited the NEWS office prior to departing for the Coast. Beyond the bare statement that Jack would edify screen followers in the future he refused to divulge further details.

Late newspaper dispatches relate that Dempsey has suffered an accident while with the circus in the Middle West, and is at present hobbling around on crutches.

Baby Marie Osborne in New Pathe Release, "Miss Gingersnap"

Pathe will release Baby Marie Osborne in a two-reel comedy drama "Miss Gingersnap," presented by Leon T. Osborne on November 23rd. The story, by Alberta Storey, abounds in humor, it is said, and gives the little star unusual opportunities to display her budding histrionic ability.

Baby Marie is assisted in her comedy efforts by little "Sambo" Morrison, the diminutive colored actor. The cast also includes Margaret Cullington, Ruth Lackaye and L. M. Wells.

The Fiction Mart

The Enemy of Woman
By Winifred Graham

Character of Story: Political activity.
Theme: Suffrage.
Characters: Lionel Marsh, M. P., opposed to suffrage; Meg Marsh, Lionel's twin sister and double, a militant suffragette; Stuart Barry, friend, a political associate of Lionel; Ruth Andover, a disciple of Meg; Lady Violet Cairn, suffragette; Roderic Seymour, in love with Ruth; Meriel Bruce, a widow, intent on marrying Lionel.
The Plot: Lionel Marsh, on the eve of a speech in the House of Commons, is drugged at dinner by Meg. She dons his clothes, takes his seat in the House, and makes a speech in favor of suffrage, with the result that Lionel is suspended for breach of order. Meg then confesses her deception in the public prints and is sentenced to a prison term. Lionel gives up his political career. The twins are estranged.

Ruth goes on with Meg's work and for the sake of the cause jilts Roderic Seymour. She receives word that her mother is about to undergo a serious operation and is about to go to the bedside, when Lady Violet tells her she has been chosen to head the breaking up of a political meeting. Ruth goes to the meeting, but is overcome by shame because of her treatment of her mother and takes no part in the demonstration. Her father telegraphs that her mother is in danger and Ruth arrives just before her mother's death. Cured of suffrage, she marries Roderic.

Meanwhile Lionel meets Meriel Bruce, who industriously sets her cap for him. Luckily, when on the verge of a proposal, he learns that her fiendish temper ruined her dead husband's life. Lionel breaks with her. Thinking Barry has caused the breach, Mrs. Bruce plots against him and Lionel and joins the suffrage party as a means to her end.

She impresses upon Lady Violet that a politician must be assassinated to advance the cause. It is decided that Mrs. Bruce will destroy the Prime Minister with a bomb at a wedding. A friend of Lady Violet, Miss Brown, procures the bomb. At the wedding Mrs. Bruce hurls the bomb, not at the Prime Minister, but at Lionel and Barry, who fall at the explosion.

Meg hears of the event and that Lionel is dead and hurries to London but finds Lionel alive and unhurt. Miss Brown, not knowing of Ruth's defection, had appealed to her to have Roderic, an expert on explosives, prepare the bomb. Roderic had prepared a harmless one.

Meg forswears suffrage and Lionel returns to politics.
Locale: London. Mostly interiors.
Picture High Lights: Meg's speech in the House of Commons. Ruth's remorse at her mother's bedside. The hurling of the bomb.

The Queen's Heart
By J. H. Hildreth

Character of Story: Romance.
Theme: Love and fighting.
Characters: Jack Northrup, an American; Dorothy Howard, his fiancee; Captain Villiers of the Isogne, afterward Marquis of Calche; Dr. McCraik; Captain Hay of the Queen's army; Isogne, Queen of Rhodes; Turks, soldiers and sailors, courtiers, etc.
The Plot: Jack Northrup and Dorothy Howard, who are in a yachting party, set out in a small boat to inspect an odd looking steamer lying nearby in the harbor. A storm arises and they are cut off from their own boat and picked up by the strange ship as it is putting out to sea. There is an air of mystery about the boat which appears to be built as a warship disguised as a merchant vessel. Dr. McCraik, the ship's surgeon, learns that the purpose of the expedition is to replace on the throne of Rhodes, Isogne, deposed by the Turks. McCraik and the two Americans plan to escape in a small boat. McCraik gets into the boat and casts off without them. They decide to throw in their lot with the crusaders who are on their way to restore Rhodes to the Christian world. On the way the ship meets and sinks a Turkish cruiser. Arrived at Rhodes, a battle ensues in which several Turkish vessels are sunk and the city of Calche is captured for the Queen. Villiers, captain of the vessel, is ennobled by the Queen and Northrup is made a Count in charge of the Queen's guard. From that time on the fighting is almost incessant, with many thrilling hair-breadth escapes upon the part of all of the principal characters. The Queen falls in love with Jack who is in love with Dorothy and Jack is tempted to discard Dorothy for the Queen but is prevented by his sense of honor. After many sorties and battles, the forces of the Queen are overcome by the Turks and the Queen is mortally wounded. The Queen and Jack and Dorothy escape. The Queen dies in Jack's arms, leaving Jack and Dorothy to return to America and the modern commercial atmosphere which they both dislike but which they realize must be their part in life.

Geraldine Farrar as she appears in her latest Goldwyn offering "Flame of the Desert"

Locale: The Mediterranean.
Picture High Lights: There are so many dramatic scenes in this story that it would be impractical to enumerate them here; a story on the general order of Soldiers of Fortune.

Linda Condon
By Joseph Hergesheimer

Character of Story: Society drama.
Theme: Temperament.
Characters: Linda Condon; Dodge Pleydon, a sculptor; Mrs. Condon, Linda's mother, afterward Mrs. Moses Feldt; Moses Feldt, a business man; Judith and Pansy, his daughters; Arnaud Hallet, a Philadelphia aristocrat; Amelia Lowrie, Linda's aunt; Elouise Lowrie, another aunt.
The Plot: Linda Condon's earliest recollections were of hotels — sometimes at the seashore and sometimes in the city, where, in company with her young and pretty mother, she spent her youth. Mrs. Condon, the most discussed woman in every hotel where they stayed, had many men friends but none among the women. She left Linda much to herself and her nature differed greatly from that of her daughter. Linda was immaculate in dress, proper, stiff, priggish even, remote and quaintly dignified. Her mother was impulsive, warm hearted and generally voted a "good fellow" by their casual acquaintances. Linda never knew her father. As Linda is budding into womanhood her mother finds her charms fading and decides to accept the offer of Moses Feldt to make her his wife. Linda finds the Feldts very generous and kind but she does not care for their friends nor can she enter into their life and their amusements with enjoyment. She meets, at a studio tea, Dodge Pleydon, who falls in love with her. She is very much interested in him but cannot bring herself to consent to marry him nor to let him kiss her. She does not like demonstrative people. She is called cold and admits it. At a musicale she is discovered by her paternal aunts, the Lowries of Philadelphia, and is invited to visit. In these prim ancestor worshipping women, Linda recognizes kindred spirits and in her they see the typical "Lowrie." Without ever learning the real cause of the estrangement between her mother and father, she feels that she will be happier with the aunts than in her own home and she decides to stay with them. Linda receives a proposal from Arnaud Hallet, a rather seedy-looking aristocrat who has, however, an income of more than fifty thousand a year, the minimum figure which Linda had set as the necessary income of an eligible husband, and Linda marries him. She continues to be interested in Dodge Pleydon and he in her and they correspond though they do not meet again until years later and do not find themselves much in one another's company until Linda has a grown daughter and a nearly grown son. Pleydon, meanwhile, has become famous. Hallet has resigned himself to the fact that his wife will never care for him the way he does for her. As her daughter becomes engaged Linda decides that she has given up enough of her life and that she will go to Pleydon and leave her husband. She goes to Pleydon's apartment for luncheon, fully intending to stay, but he does not suspect her intention and in the course of the conversation she learns that he is really in love with his ideal of the youthful Linda many years ago. She reconsiders and returns to her husband, no one the wiser.
Locale: New York and Philadelphia.
Picture High Lights: Emotional scenes are peculiarly lacking owing to the temperament of the heroine. If Linda were depicted as merely mercenary in the beginning, awakening too late to the necessity of love, this would furnish ample opportunity for the emotional type of actress.

The Ambassador's Trunk
By George Barton

Character of Story: Mystery.
Theme: Diplomatic intrigue.
Characters: Captain Vance Prescott, of the Intelligence; Professor Francis Vernon, Fourth Assistant Secretary of State; Hope Vernon, his daughter; Thomas Warner of the Washington Planet; Count Castro, South American diplomat; Gilbert Vernon, a Pacifist; Bromley Barnes of the Secret Service; Fernando Werta, a spy.
The Plot: Vance Prescott, a member of the Intelligence corps, is sent to the country home of the Fourth Assistant Secretary of State with important papers from the State Department. These papers concern a secret treaty in regard to South American oil concessions. It is feared that an attempt will be made to steal the treaty before it is ratified four days later. Vance welcomes the opportunity of visiting Professor Vernon's home since he is in love with the Professor's daughter, Hope. At the country house he finds as guests a newspaper reporter of his acquaintance, Count Castro, a South American diplomat, and Bromley Barnes of the Secret Service who has been assigned to the house as an additional precaution. Professor Vernon locks the treaty in a safe in his library and during the night the papers are stolen. Suspicion first points to Hope and then to her brother who is an avowed Pacifist but Prescott and Barnes are both morally certain that Count Castro is the guilty man. Prescott finally overhears a conversation between Castro and Werta, a spy in his employ, and learns that the papers are to be hidden in the trunk of the French Ambassador who had been visiting there a few days before and whose trunk had not yet been sent on to Washington. He cannot positively identify the speakers, so is forced to follow up the clue without making an arrest. Werta is apprehended on a charge of being a suspicious person and violater of the Espionage law. Castro remains at liberty. When Prescott inquires about the trunk, he finds it has just been sent to the station. He rushes to the train and finds Bromley Barnes aboard. There is a wreck but both escape uninjured. The Ambassador's trunk is finally located, but when opened, it contains nothing. Prescott then learns that an old servant took out the papers just before the trunk left the house but that these were afterward taken from him by Count Castro. Barnes and Prescott rush to the city and Prescott is just in time to rescue Hope, who in attempting to regain the papers, has fallen into the cluthces of Castro. Castro again escapes. Barnes and Prescott attend a meeting of the "Sons of Liberty" a supposed anarachist society and there see Castro. The place is raided but Castro gets away. Prescott learns that Castro has planned to escape into Mexico by meeting an aeroplane in the Southern part of Virginia. He hastens there in an automobile and encounters the Count. In a pitched battle he secures the papers but is stunned and does not secure his prisoner. Prescott arrives in time to present the papers to the conference when the treaty is to be signed. Castro is murdered as a traitor by his confederates who believe that he has sold them out.

Locale: Washington and suburbs.

Picture High Lights: Several encounters between Castro and Prescott; the timely arrival of the treaty at the conference.

Peter The Brazen
By George F. Worts

Character of Story: Mystery; adventure.

Theme: Exploits of a wireless operator.

Character: Peter Moore, wireless operator; The Gray Dragon of Len Yang; Kahn Meng, his son; Eileen Lorimer, the girl in the case; Amy Vost, an American girl; Bobby MacLaurin, Peter's pal; Romola Borria, an agent of the Gray Dragon.

The Plot: Peter Moore, the crack wireless operator of the Pacific, is on his way from Hong Kong to Shanghai when he discovers that there is on board the boat a woman prisoner who is evidently being conveyed by Chinese to the inland city of Len Yang where the Gray Dragon, a sinister figure of power and evil, imported slaves to work in his mines. The power and influence of this man are such that he is hated and feared throughout China. Peter Moore makes up his mind to save the girl aboard the boat and in pursuit of this plan manages to smuggle her onto a sampan after a short struggle with the guards who are trying to lower her to a Chinese junk in the early morning. The girl is Eileen Lorimer, an American. Peter puts her on board a boat bound for America and determines to go on to the city of Len Yang and learn the secrets of that dread place. He finds that a Miss Amy Vost, who closely resembles Eileen, is bound in the same general direction, followed by his old friend, Bobby MacLaurin, who takes charge of a river vessel in order to be near the girl of his choice. On the way up the river the boat is wrecked and Peter wanders alone into the camp of a Chinese mandarin who professes to be an enemy of the Gray Dragon and offers to help him into Len Yang. Once in the city Peter makes the acquaintance of a wireless operator there and by watching the messages learns that Amy Vost is to be brought into the city as a prisoner. Aided by Bobby MacLaurin he effects a sensational rescue and starts back on his way to Hong Kong. On the boat he falls in with Romola Borria, who first pretends to be his friend and afterward asks him to run away with her. She attempts to betray him into the hands of the Gray Dragon by luring him to a house on the edge of the city, but he escapes, killing her husband with the last shot in the melee. Peter returns to America and finds Eileen but believes that she is in love with another man. He returns to China. She follows him, having meanwhile become a surgeon, and announces her intention of going with him to Len Yang. After some further exciting adventures in which Romola Borria plays the part of the traitress, Peter falls in with Kahn Meng who claims to be advancing on Len Yang to reduce it to ashes. Peter, however, finds himself a prisoner in the hands of the Gray Dragon and learns that Kahn Meng is the son of the Dragon. The Gray Dragon is killed in the fight which follows and his son declares himself the enemy of all of his father's methods. He sets Eileen and Peter at liberty.

Locale: China.

Picture High Lights: Chinese atmosphere and scenery. Chiefly exteriors but good opportunity for gorgeous settings. Many dramatic situations.

Bull Dog Carney
By W. A. Fraser

Character of Story: Canadian Western.

Theme: Carney's exploits.

Characters: Bulldog Carney, a good "bad man"; Jeanette; Jack Wolf, who lives up to his name; Kootenay Jim, gambler; Harry Holt, Jeanette's brother; "Oregon," Carney's pal; mounted police, miners, jockeys, etc.; Seth Long, Keeper of the hotel at Bucking Horse.

The Plot: While published as a novel, this is really a series of short stories dealing with the various exploits of "Bulldog" Carney whose business is the smuggling of opium over the Canadian line into the United States. Carney is an Englishman, once of good social station but now a typical product of the frontier. He is beloved of the women and feared by the men, chivalrous by nature, quick on the draw, playing his own hand against both the Mounted Police and the various crooks infesting the camps of the Northwest. Jeanette, wife of Seth Long, the keeper of the hotel at Bucking Horse, where many of the incidents related occur, is in love with Carney but he keeps their relationship on a strictly friendly basis so long as Seth is alive — the latter being conveniently murdered by an outsider in a gambling brawl. Jeanette appears in many of the stories, giving the necessary "woman interest." Altogether these stories are full of action, picturesque and comparatively original in the matter of plot. Practically all of them would make good pictures and as a series centering around the character of Carney present opportunities to any actor who favors the role of a Western gunman.

Locale: Canadian Northwest.

Picture High Lights: Many good dramatic situations.

Little Miss By-The-Day
By Lucille Van Slyke

Character of Story: Romance.

Theme: Character study.

Characters: Felice Day; Madmoiselle D'Ormy, her governess; "The Portia Person"; The Major, Felice's grandfather; Dudley Hamilt, a choir singer; Margot, a servant; Piquer, a servant; Mr. Burrel, the Major's legal adviser, known as "Certain Legal Matters"; Zeb, keeper of the kennels; Graener, a theatrical producer; The Poetry Girl; The Sculptor Girl, etc.

The Plot: Felice Day's earliest recollections were of the old mansion in Brooklyn where she lived with the Major, her grandfather, and her invalid mother. The major made his living by raising blooded dogs. Felice made the acquaintance of a choir boy, Dudley Hamilt, over the garden wall on the other side of which was the choir yard of a church. This was her first and only suitor. When her mother dies the Major is too tender-hearted to tell Felice and lets her believe that her mother has gone on to to the House in the woods — a country home which has been handed down from generation to generation in the line of female succession, becoming the property of the daughter in each case instead of the property of the son. Felice grows up believing that she will find her mother waiting for her in the garden of the country house. Sheltered from contact with the world, she has no notion of worldly affairs and does not in the least understand what has happened when the big house in Brooklyn is sold for taxes and they are forced to take refuge in the House in the Woods. As matters go from bad to worse Felice comes to the city to see what can be done — a quaint, old-fashioned figure, looking middle-aged because of her attire, though really not more than twenty-five or six years of age. The years have slipped by playing chess with her grandfather and tending her mother's garden. Dudley Hamilt, meanwhile, has sought in vain for her, and she has dreamed of him. The adventures of Felice in seeking to recover the old house and set her financial affairs in order make the major portion of the story, inter twined with the romance with Dudley Hamilt Upon reaching the city she finds the old home full of "weeds" as she calls them — unsavory foreign families who have let space from the receiver. Felice, with the courage of ignorance, sets about acquiring money to pay her debts by sewing at $2.00 by the day, from which she gets the name which she registers with the Woman's Exchange. In the course of this work she encounters a young attorney whom she had met when a child and whom she has always called "The Portia Person." This man aids her in unraveling her affairs. She has meanwhile contrived to secure temporary possession of the old house, clean it up and fills it with young geniuses of one sort or another. Her own genius for whistling is discovered by accident and she takes New York by storm as "Madmoiselle Folly." Her appearance in a playlet founded on her garden romance brings Dudley Hamilt to her and all ends well. The charm of the story lies in the winning personality of little Miss By-the-Day.

Interviewing Hugh Thompson, Screen Hero and Leading Man

"JUST say I'm the hardest man in the world to interview, and let it go at that," Hugh Thompson declared laughingly, when we told him the other day that we should like to write a story about him.

"Nonsense," we assured him, "we won't do anything of the sort. "You've been playing leads with all sorts of popular ladies for quite some time, and you can at least tell us about their idiosyncrasies and whether it's as pleasant to be a very much in demand leading man, as it's supposed to be."

"Now see here, you want to get me into trouble," Mr. Thompson's good natured voice retorted over the telephone, "I'm not going to commit myself along those lines, but I'll drop in to see you whenever you want just to convince you that I'm no kind of a press agent."

He came, according to appointment, late one afternoon. He is six feet two, at least, very well built, very well dressed, with black hair and dark eyes — precisely the description that would fit the dream hero of every sweet girl graduate in the United States, isn't it? Add to the description the fact that he can act, and of course, he's an ideal leading man, and it's no wonder that he never has more than four days holiday between pictures, and hardly any summer vacation at all.

But that doesn't satisfy the gentleman. No, indeed, he's ambitious, too, if you please, and has high hopes of being a star in his own right some day. He has written fifteen stories, that he thinks are fitted to his own personality, and when the opportunity comes, there will be no frenzied search by an entire scenario department for the right kind of a story. Mr. Thompson will hand over his scripts and they can take their pick. But he doesn't believe in haste. He knows that a star's screen life depends on the number and loyalty of the fans that have noticed his work in supporting casts, and he has several times refused chances to star with less well-known companies in order to take advantage of the training to be had with prominent directors and stars. One instance of his belief in the value of learning the fundamentals of his profession thoroughly, is the fact that he played in stock for eight years.

"And when you start in that way as a juvenile," he explained, "they don't give you boys' parts to play. You have all sorts of characterizations — old men, rubes from the country, policemen, butlers, bell hops, messengers and couriers and pages — anything but what you really are, and a new part every week. You hate it, but it's the best training in the world. For instance, a short while ago I had to play an Indian, that is, the man I was impersonating was supposed to assume the character and pass as an Indian during two reels of the picture. I had played an Indian for eight weeks during my stock experience, so that I knew the characteristics well — a stolid expression, erect carriage, and all the rest of it, and it wasn't difficult at all for me to assume them, you see.

"I always decide on the sort of interpretation I'm going to give a character myself," he added. "I take the script home, read it through, and act as I think a man would act under the imposed conditions."

"But if the director doesn't like your interpretation?" we asked.

"Then I rehearse the scene as he wants me to, and play it as I want to when the scene is taken," he declared with his spontaneous smile.

"And aren't you going to tell us anything about leading ladies," we insisted. "We've always wanted a point of view other than the interviewer's. Are they all as sweet as they look?"

"Some of them are and some of them aren't," he temporized, "but the only points of contention that arise while playing are as to whether or not they will let you have as much of a scene as you think you ought to have. Some of them give you every chance in the world and meet you more than half way, and some of them don't But, seriously, I never have any trouble with any of them. They are all alright."

Which remark seems to us the keynote of Mr. Thompson's temperament. He is sociable and jolly and ready to enjoy himself, and not at all inclined to find fault with conditions or facts or people. He used up six collars at the artists' ball the other night, and stayed till 6 A. M. He told us this as proof that he likes to dance, and we don't need any further evidence. We are quite convinced. He likes to do a great many other things as well, and he looks as though he thought the world a very nice place, indeed.—MARGUERITE JONES.

Close-ups of Players

Director Noel Smith was forced to pay for the breaking of a bedstead which was demolished when no attempt at comedy was made. Smith directs Jimmie Aubrey, and with his comedian went to a mountain inn so as to be near the ducks in the morning. The place did not have modern conveniences, and heat was scarce, so after warming his feet over a coal oil stove, he jumped into bed. He wrecked it.

Maurice Tournier, whose artistic productions are released on the Paramount-Artcraft program, contracted with H. H. Van Loan this week for a story which he feels will be one of the real picture features of the year. Van Loan developed an entirely new theme and related the story to Tournier who immediately saw its dramatic possibilities. He thereupon signed a contract for the story, the title of which is "The Great Redeemer," and in the production of which Jack Holt will probably play the leading role.

Jack Cunningham, erstwhile novelist, playwright and New York newspaperman, is engaged in writing the continuity for J. Warren Kerrigan's next picture, which will be an adaptation of a famous French classic.

Denison Clift, Fox West Coast scenario editor, has completed the scripts for Madlaine Traverse's newest productions. "Lost Money" is a story of the African diamond mines; "The Hell Ship" is a powerful tale of the sea, and "What Would You Do?" is a problem play of to-day. All are original stories and continuities from Clift's pen.

Teck, Seattle; Benjamin Caplon, Washington; H. H. Gihon, New Orleans; Unda Hamren, Omaha; R. Allison, Salt Lake City.

Rowland at Helm of Production

Metro President Upon Illness of Maxwell Karger Takes Hold of Coast Studio Reins

RICHARD A. ROWLAND, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, recently assumed the supervisory reins over the five Screen Classics, Inc., productions now under way at the Metro studios in Hollywood, when Director General Maxwell Karger was confined to his bed with blood poisoning. This unusual feat for a motion picture executive was accomplished under trying conditions when minor but nevertheless vexatious mishaps occurred in the progress of several of the productions.

At Hollywood on a tour of inspection and consultation Mr. Rowland had in a few days familiarized himself with the work in hand sufficiently to be able to jump into the breach and keep things moving with their usual speed and smoothness. He conferred with the several stars and their directors, passing decisions on all phases of the work as easily as though he had long been accustomed to the task.

The first of the mishaps under Mr. Rowland's brief regime in the role of director general came when Jack Dillon, who was directing Bert Lytell in Sir Gilbert Parker's novel, "The Right of Way," met with an accident that absented him from the studios. Mr. Rowland immediately gave Bert Lytell authority to proceed with the picture as his own director. Later, when Director Dillon had recovered, the entire company with Robert Kurrle, the cameraman, left for location at Lake Tahoe.

After an illness of ten days Viola Dana got back to work on "The Willow Tree." Mr. Rowland was able to keep the company at work on scenes not requiring Miss Dana during her absence.

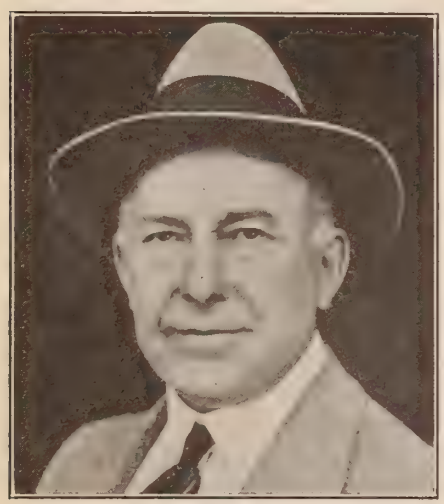
Alice Lake and other members of the company filming "Should A Woman Tell?" a story by Finis Fox, spent six consecutive days at the studio while Mr. Rowland was in control, the longest time "at home" since the production started. John E. Ince, who is directing, has been on location most of the time. Miss Lake is being featured in this picture with Jack Mulhall and Frank Currier at the head of a notable cast.

May Allison made rapid progress with "The Walk-Offs," the Morosco society play by Frederic and Fanny Hatton, under the eyes of Metro's chief executive.

Prizma Takes a Star From World

Madge Evans' Contract Taken Over by Prizma Natural Color Pictures; to be Featured

PRIZMA Natural Color Pictures announces, by arrangement with World Pictures, that beginning next Monday they will take over the contract the latter had with Madge Evans, who has been a World star for several years and will start in making productions with this famous juvenile artist as the featured member of a company that will be engaged to produce two or more reel pictures in natural colors. Unlike Prizma subjects that have been released in the past, the Madge Evans Pictures will be picturizations of stories especially written or published creations of well-known authors.



Otis B. Thayer, President and Director-General of Art-O-Graf

It is with a great deal of pride that Prisma makes this announcement that they have secured Madge Evans as their star. They did not make this selection until after they had scoured the field for possible talent who combined reputation as an actress and an established following together with youth, beauty, grace and charm. Another factor that entered into the selection was the future possibility of the star they decided to take to make Prizma natural color pictures in combination with photo play dramas.

Madge Evans began her career as an actress when almost a babe in arms. She has scored successes in Broadway productions, the most notable of which she shared honors with John and Lionel Barrymore in "Peter Ibbetson." With the World company she has been a star in her own right and shared co-starring honors with Montagu Love, June Elvidge and Carlyle Blackwell.

To the exhibitor this announcement should hold great interest. It will, it is claimed, be the first time in the history of the industry that natural color pictures have been utilized in further embellishing good stories and good direction in providing material for an interesting program for the motion picture theatre. Negotiations are now pending with several of the best-known directors in the industry to secure for the Madge Evans Prizma pictures the highest degree of perfection in picturization of interesting subject matter for photoplay dramas.

Edwin Carewe has secured the motion picture rights to Augustus Thomas' stage success, "Rio Grande." In order to film the scenes in their original setting, Mr. Carewe went yesterday to California where he will remain a year and make four pictures for Pathe.

Leading Canadian Statesmen Endorse Fox News Enterprise

What is described as a glowing tribute has been paid to William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, in the endorsement by three leading Canadian statemen of Fox News, the new animated screen newspaper and magazine that has made immense strides since its first release on October 11. These letters of commendation were written by Sir George E. Foster, Acting Prime Minister of the Dominion; Pierre E. Blondin, Postmaster-General of the Dominion, and Sir Francis Stillman Barnard, Lieutenant-Governor of British Columbia.

In this connection, the Fox report also points out that President Wilson has given the stamp of approval to Fox News, as have the Governors of several States and many United States Senators. Following this encouraging welcome in the United States, the Fox officials feel that these commendations from the pens of three of Canada's foremost leaders constitute an additional bond of good feeling between the two great English-speaking peoples of the Western Hemisphere.

"Are You Legally Married" Is Proving to Be Success

B. H. Mills of the Elk Photoplays announces that "Are You Legally Married" has had unusual success at the Harris Theatre and at the Academy of Music in the city. At Proctor's 23d Street, the picture is reported to be bringing great crowds at the present time. According to the same source, the feature has been booked over the Fox, B. S. Moss, and the Consolidated Theatres Enterprises circuits.

Jean Acker of Metro Weds

Almost duplicating the romance of the character she enacted in "Lombardi, Ltd." the Screen Classics, Inc., production starring Bert Lytell, Jean Acker, who was seen in the picture as "Daisy, a Model," one of the sextette of beauty mannequins, married Rudolpho Valentino, an Italian dancer and leading man of the screen, at Hollywood, Cal., at midnight, November 5.

The wedding came suddenly after two months of courtship.

In and Out West Coast Studios

Goldwyn Studio Notes

THE Goldwyn studios are more than active this week, inasmuch as work was started on four new productions. The first unit to get away was that directed by Frank Lloyd, which is making "The Woman in Room 13," starring Pauline Frederick. The casting department has selected John Bowers, Charles Clary, Robert McKim, Goldie Madden and Kate Lester, who has just returned from a trip to New York.

Madge Kennedy has resumed work after an absence of a number of weeks from the studio, and Victor Schertzinger, who is responsible for the direction of the several recent Mabel Normand subjects, is to direct her. Pat O'Malley, Margery Wilson, Arthur Houseman and Robert Chandler are in the supporting cast.

Will Rogers is just beginning work under the direction of Clarence Badger in "The Strange Boarder," and is to have his four-year-old son, Jimmie, with him in an important part. Irene Rich will be the leading woman, and other players in the company are James Mason, Lionel Barrymore, Jack Richardson, Sidney Dean and Louis Durham.

The other company to get underway is that directed by Reginald Barker making "Dangerous Days," an adaptation from the Mary Roberts Rinehart novel. Director Barker will have Lawson Butt, Clarissa Selwyn, Roland Lee, Ann Forest, Milton Ross and Florence Deshon in the cast.

The Goldwyn plant exterior lot has many large settings now under construction, and perhaps the largest is that of the street scene being erected for the Jack Pickford film "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come." This is one of the most elaborate exterior settings built at the Goldwyn studios.

Doings at Vitagraph Plant

EXPANSION became effective this week at the Vitagraph studios when General Manager W. S. Smith negotiated for 10 acres of land adjoining the studios which will be used for exterior settings. The plot has exceptional advantages for producing purposes, in that it contains valleys and hills, a small canyon and a stream. Work of constructing many permanent improvements on this new acquisition to the studio has already commenced.

William Duncan shocked Hollywood this week and shattered glass of many windows when by a great explosion he blew off the face of a high cliff in the vicinity of the studio for scenes in "Smashing Barriers."

The Tony Moreno Company is working on locations for "The Invisible Hand" serial, and they have had anything but a pleasant week as the result of the script providing that a number of canoes be overturned and the occupants thrown into the water.

Montgomery and Rock Company are at work on a city comedy, in which Joseph Rock appears as a traffic policeman. The traffic situation in Los Angeles, which is said to be the worst in the country, is said to be the foundation for this story, and when it appears on Los Angeles screens it may be taken as a satire on local conditions, which has a national aspect. Lillian Webster, formerly with D. W. Griffith, Universal and Pathe companies, has been engaged as leading woman for this company, and will make her Vitagraph debut in the subject being made at present. Miss Webster is a very attractive blonde, and thus will add contrast to the brunette comedians, Montgomery and Rock.

Fox Studio Happenings

Denison Clift has written a story which will serve as the next vehicle for Madlaine Traverse which has been titled, "What Would You Do?" Edmund Lawrence is going to direct the making of this, and studio manager Sol Wurtzel has selected a cast which includes George MacDaniels, Frank Elliott, Charles K. French, Lenore Lynard and Edwin B. Tilton. Tilton is a new member of the Fox Stock Company, who is an actor from the speaking stage of a number of years' experience.

Howard M. Mitchell has been selected as director for Peggy Hyland's next picture, "The Official Chaperone." The cast has not been fully selected because of delay in creating sets.

William Russell who arrived in Los Angeles during the past week, is ready to begin work at the Fox studio with Director Emmett Flynn in the making of "The Lincoln Highwayman." Other players for this subject have not yet been named.

Madlaine Traverse in the Fox Presentation of "Lost Money"

What Metro Is Doing

TWO new plays have been announced for Viola Dana to be made following the completion of the subject on which she is now at work, "The Willow Tree." It is not definitely decided which will be taken up next, but the subjects bought are "Eliza Comes to Stay," by H. V. Esmond, and "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," a farce by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan, which was produced by Al Woods and proved to be a three-act stage success in 1917. Miss Dana is now working under the direction of Henry Otto in the Japanese garden scenes for "The Willow Tree." This is, no doubt, the most beautiful setting of its kind made for a film play, and in all probability a greater part of the garden will be retained as a beauty spot for the Metro studios.

Telegraphic advice from Truckee, Cal., is to the effect that the Bert Lytell Company is meeting with marked success in taking exteriors for "The Right-Of-Way," the Sir Gilbert Parker story being made under the direction of Jack Dillon. They will probably be in the north three weeks in all.

Director John Ince and company are working at the Metro studios filming interiors for "Should A Woman Tell?" with an all-star cast which includes Alice Lake, Frank Currier and Jack Mulhall.

May Allison is continuing her work in "The Walk-Offs," Frederick and Fannie Hutton play, and Ray Smallwood is making the final scenes for "The Best Of Luck," with Jack Holt, Kathryn Adams and Fred Malatesta.

Supervising director, Maxwell Karger, was unable to be at his work at the Metro studios several days owing to infection resulting from a bruise, and President Richard A. Rowland took the reins of supervision of the five producing units at the plant.

Universal Activities

FOR some time, it has been the contention of the officers of the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., that directors would give better service if two or three weeks were spent between the making of each subject, and they have now put into effect such a new policy inasmuch as the releases have been made in advance for some time to come. The new policy is to give the director more time to prepare for the filming of his next picture and for this reason it is the belief of the officers that far better results will be obtained.

No new productions were started this week by the feature companies at Universal City. The Lyons and Moran Company have just filmed "Stop That Marriage," with Charlotte Merrian and Alma Bennett and Grace Marvin and they are now beginning work on "Their First Quarrel."

The original story by H. H. Van Loan, which was the starring vehicle for Priscilla Dean made by Tod Browning, has been given the final title of "The Beautiful Beggar." This story was originally named "The Virgin of Stamboul." Another title change announced is that for the serial now being completed by Director Jacques Jaccard originally known as "The Thirteenth Hour." This film will be released as "The Vanishing Dagger."

Five-reel subjects in production are "The Triflers," by Christie Cabanne; "The Peddler," by Director William C. Dowlan; "Rouge and Riches," by Harry Franklyn; "Phantom Melody," by Douglas Gerrard; "Ambition," by Allen Holubar; "The Day She Paid," by Rex Ingram; "Overland Red," by Lynn Reynolds; "Lower Four and Upper Three," by Al Santell; "The Woman In The Plot," by Eric Von Stroheim," and "The Breath of the Gods," by Rolin Sturgeon. In addition to the above list the companies have a number of two-reel subjects being made,—"The Line Runner," by Norman Dawn; "The Sheriff's Oath," by Phil Rosen, and the serial company's "The Man Hunter," directed by Reeves Eason; "The Prince of Avenue A," by Jack Ford, and "The Lion Man," by Al Russell.

Charlie Ray as he appears in his newest Thomas A. Ince feature, "Crooked-Straight"

Here And There

THERE was a quiet wedding at Santa Ana, Cal., Monday evening, November 3d, in which the principals were Hedda Nova, starred by Vitagraph and Universal, and Director Paul C. Hurst, who is with the National Film Company. Miss Nova is a Russian by birth, born at Odessa, and the name placed on the marriage record was Hedwiga Peonie Kusczewiski.

Dot Farley, who has appeared in a number of Fox Sunshine Comedies, and was featured in L-Ko Comedies, has been engaged by the Romayne Super Films Company, and is now playing in the first subject being made at their new studio at Culver City. The subject is being directed by Vin Moore. This company has also engaged a number of other professionals who have appeared in well-known comedies.

George Beban has begun work on the filming of another production at the Brunton studios and has completed arrangements with Sol L. Lessor for distribution of this subject. Lessor has already laid out a new campaign for advertising this subject and will have some new features to introduce in the presentation of the film when it is ready for the market. Mr. Beban has not announced the entire cast.

The title for the second George Loane Tucker production is stated to be "Ladies Must Live." The film play is said to be a composite of two books and a play. No statement of the complete cast has been given but it is understood that Betty Compson, Jack Gilbert, Beatrice Joy and Arnold Gregg take important parts.

After a week in Big Bear Valley, the Great Western Producing Company is again at the studio working on interiors for "Fighting Through," a serial which features Elmo Lincoln and is being directed by J. P. McGowan. This company is working at the L-Ko studios in Hollywood.

"Somebody's Pretty Baby," is the title given a special comedy being made at the L-Ko studio, which features Harry Gribbon and Eva Novak, with Merta Sterling as one of the principal fun makers. The company went to La Jolla, a beach town 100 miles south of Los Angeles last week, and there 18 bathing girls gave the villagers a treat.

Another comedy now in the making is laid about an African golf tournament.

Neilan, M. Tourneur, George L. Tucker etc., maintain a Sphinx-like countenance when being questioned, HOKUM cannot give this news to the world this week.

J. Stewart Woodhouse, who recently stepped into a swivel chair as head of the Goldwyn publicity department after more than a year in the same capacity at the Thomas H. Ince studios, reports the Goldwyn studio orchestra, organized and directed by Bert Crossland the "set" musician, or "tear starter,' is now a living, breathing, tooting, reality of eighteen men.

A room at the Hollywood Hotel was ransacked. Two suits of clothes were taken, one containing a salary check, and the next day a negro boy presented the check to our bank saying he was Bert Lytell. And the strong arm of the law grasped him by the neck. We mention this in the above form that Metro's melodramatic scenario writers may recall the instance and incorporate it in some of the Drury Lanes. It would surely add a bit of color.

"The Amazing Lovers" Reported Almost Ready for Market

"The Amazing Lovers," the B. A. Rolfe production, has been given the final O. K. as to editing and titling and is now about ready for the market. "The Amazing Lovers" is picture number one of the Robert W. Chambers series, being an adaptation by Charles A. Logue of Mr. Chambers's story of "The Shining Band." As it now stands it is in seven reels. It is a special feature production.

In the cast appear Grace Darling, Ramsaye Wallace, Sally Crute, Marc McDermott, E. J. Ratcliffe, G. V. Seyffertitz, John Goldsworthy, John L. Shine and Robert Paton Gibbs. B. A. Rolfe and Chester DeVonde directed the production and A. A. Cadwell and A. Fried photographed it.

Realart Opens New Orleans Exchange To Aid Gulf Service

To enable Realart Pictures Corporation to give exhibitors of the Gulf Coast territory better service, President Arthur S. Kane of Realart announces the opening of a new exchange at New Orleans. The office is on Film Row, at Tulane and Liberty streets. Truly B. Wildman, well known among Southern exhibitors, is the manager.

Recently John S. Woody, general manager decided that Diaz Callahan, at the Dallas, Tex., branch was developing more business than one manager could handle and give exhibitors of the Gulf Coast good service, hence the opening of the twenty-first branch.

New Dorothy Phillips Offering

"Ambition" Said to be Finest of Holubar's Work; All Other Companies Hard at It

CARL LAEMMLE, Universal's president, announced this week the completion of the new Allen Holubar production "Ambition." The star of this production is Dorothy Phillips.

According to Mr. Laemmle the final scenes of the production were taken this week, and Mr. Holubar started on the task of cutting the film immediately after the last scene was taken. Mr. Laemmle stated that the new production is the triumph of Holubar's career as a director. More money has been expended on this production than on "The Heart of Humanity" or "The Right to Happiness," and the production was slightly more than sixteen weeks in the making.

No announcement has been made as to the release date of this new production. A special trade showing is planned as soon as the first print of the production arrives at the New York offices of Universal.

Among the other big productions which are being filmed at Universal City is the new Priscilla Dean feature, based on the H. H. Van Loan story "The Virgin of Stamboul" but which will be released under the title of "The Beautiful Beggar".

Work on "The Triflers", the story of upper and lower strata of New York life by Joseph Franklin Poland, is progressing satisfactorily under Christy Cabanne's guiding hand at Universal City. A cast of unusual importance has been enlisted for this production, including Edith Roberts, recently featured in "Lasca"; David Butler, leading man for Mary MacLaren in several of her recent productions; Forrest Stanley, featured in "Under Suspicion"; and Benny Alexander, the wonderful child actor, seen in "Hearts of the World."

Director William C. Dowlen, who is producing "The Peddler" for Universal, is expected back from vacation next week, to work on his final sets in this feature. The story is from the Henry C. Rowland novel running in the Saturday Evening Post, with the chief characters portrayed by Frank Mayo, Ora Carew and Dagmar Godowsky. Several streets in New York's East Side section have been reproduced at Universal City for James J. Corbett's forthcoming production, "The Prince of Avenue A," now in course of formation under the directing hand of Jack Ford. The vehicle is one in which "Gentleman Jim" formerly starred on the stage, and was written by Frank and Charles T. Dazey.

The production of "The Phanton Melody," starring Monroe Salisbury, has progressed to its final stages at Universal City, under the direction of Douglas Gerrard. Rex Ingram has finished "The Day She Paid."

All other companies are also hard at work.

Equipment Service

Automatic Makes Hit in Foreign Countries

THE foreign market is "opening up" and American-made products are in demand the world over. In no field is this demand for American products so marked as in the motion picture field.

The Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company, manufacturers of the well-known Automatic Registers, report that the Trans-Regional Trading Corporation, their export representatives, have asked them to supply double the number of machines they contracted for, and have also inquired as to the possibility of tripling the export output.

This is a high tribute to American mechanical equipment. American exhibitors were quick to recognize the advantage of having rapid ticket selling service and box office protection, and this selling record bears out the oft made claim that the whole world wants what America endorses.

Business men—and exhibitors are business men first and theatrical men second—realize that to make the biggest possible net profit from an enterprise, every dollar of revenue must be protected and preserved. The days of loose, hit or miss methods in business are over, and it is the general recognition of this important business fact that has brought the Automaticket Register and the Automaticket System into world prominence.

The Capitol Theatre, which is the last word in modern motion picture theatre designing, has put its endorsement on this register by ordering a battery of four Four-Unit machines.

Not the least important feature of this splendid ticket selling system, is the fact that it makes accounting so simple. The average exhibitor can't afford to "keep books" on an elaborate scale, and getting an automatic total of his sales at each price for the day, is a big and important help.

Another great advantage in the Automatic System is the fact that it makes the making up of tax reports so simple a matter. In fact, it automatically yields the figures each day for this purpose, and it is so accurate and dependable, that reports based on mechanical register readings have been specified as acceptable by the United States Government.

It is no wonder that this marvelous mechanical device has been taken up so generally by all the countries of the world the minute foreign trade channels were opened. The fact that it is used by most of the most progressive theatres and circuits in the Country, would naturally lead any shrewd observer to the conclusion that the Automaticket Register is vitally essential to the financial success of a motion picture exhibiting enterprise.

Winter Building the Only Answer to the Year's Construction Delays

By A. E. Wells, President, Wells Brothers Construction Co.

ON the verge of winter, construction blocked in hundreds of cities, a shortage of many materials of construction and of labor and yet withal, an acute shortage of homes, offices, stores and in many cities, of office buildings, factories and warehouses—what is the answer?

The answer lies in winter construction, in proceeding with work during December, January and February, which have been normally "closed" months. Winter work is not new. It has been practised for years, its safety adequately demonstrated, its economy proved. It should be more generally practised.

Any owner who, thru prosecuting work during cold weather, can get occupancy of factory or warehouse or can lease apartments, offices or store space on May 1, stands to gain far more than the added costs of winter work.

Not only the owner, but builder, engineer and architect, gain. There is financial loss to the contractor who breaks up his trained organization, only to build it again in the spring. New men must take time to accustom themselves to working together and owners pay the bill in increased costs. Architects' and engineers' offices are frequently idle thru much of the winter. Building superintendents have nothing to do and owners pay for unproductive overhead.

Perhaps the best way then, to reduce the cost of building is to keep architects', engineers' and contractors' forces busy twelve months of the year.

WHY DOES CONSTRUCTION STOP IN WINTER?

Primarily the reason why building has been inactive is that concrete does not harden so rapidly when its temperature hovers near freezing. But we heat our homes, offices and stores and coal is comparatively small operating cost. We are today able to enclose a structure, warm it with simple coke stoves, heat aggregates prior to mixing with Portland cement, and keep the concrete or mortar warm until hardening has occurred.

Without these precautions, cold weather work is impossible but the precautions are simple and reasonably inexpensive. Why not do the logical thing and consider the winter as an open season for all but the most exposed class of construction.

Our organization has continued to lay brick and place concrete under zero temperatures even in the northern cities of Canada. A part of our normal equipment is sufficient tarpaulins to enclose practically any structure and sufficient salamanders or coke stoves to keep such enclosures warm. Boilers of any type, frequently those used to furnish steam for hoisting, supply live steam for heating aggregates and water and for thawing snow and ice from forms and reinforcing steel.

While a heavy snow may temporarily delay the delivery of materials, yet deep snow is seldom encountered. It is temperature alone that commonly hampers work, and temperature need not be feared.

PLANT LAYOUT FOR COLD WEATHER WORK

In laying out a plant for handling concrete in winter, or where the work is likely to run into winter before completion, there must be provision for the proper heating of materials and water. In case of sand and gravel in open storage piles, it is only necessary to lay a grid of steam pipes under the material piles and place a tarpaulin over the pile. From one main thru the center, branches should extend in both directions every six feet. These branches should be drilled with ⅛-inch holes spaced about 18 inches apart. Several hundred yards of material stored in one pile can be heated in this way with the steam from an ordinary hoisting boiler. Several days prior to concreting, steam should be turned into the pile during working hours which will be sufficient, except at times of extreme cold, to maintain the necessary temperature.

When material is stored in bins, a series of pipes should be laid on the floor of the bins, feeding from a main pipe at the top of the sloping floor. Steam radiates thru the entire contents of the bin and if a canvas cover is pulled over the top when work is stopped at night the material will retain its heat, except in very cold weather, when a small amount of steam may be needed at night.

It is necessary also to heat mixing water and a steam line running directly into the water tank is the customary way; a one-inch line being sufficient to heat water for a one-yard mixer.

But concrete poured into forms exposed to cold would lose its heat before hardening had progressed sufficiently. Forms must therefore be protected and the most satisfactory means is a complete canvas enclosure, with salamanders or coke stoves to maintain a temperature of 45 degrees or over, within. Several hours before concrete is poured, salamanders are started in the story below the forms, unless that story is already heated. Immediately after pouring, a sufficient number of salamanders are placed above the new concrete to insure its safe and thoro hardening. These will furnish heat for the floor above.

This method of enclosure and heating necessitates that the form work for the floor above that being poured shall be in place, in order to serve as a roof under which concrete may be kept worm; altho in the case of steel frame structure, it may be possible to support canvas upon the steel because of the floor above.

Forms for the story above are supported as usual, upon posts, but since the floor slab of the story supporting these posts is not yet poured, it is customary to set the posts upon concrete blocks of the proper depth so that upon pouring, the block becomes a part of the finished floor. This requires setting blocks to grade and finishing their upper surface.

It is, of course, necessary that the workmen be watched somewhat more carefully on winter work. Snow or ice in the forms is detrimental to good work. Careful inspection is necessary at every stage of the work, but slipshod methods are probably no more likely to effect quality in winter than in summer.

Where the enclosure in canvas is comparatively complete, workers operate at practically normal efficiency, but there are some delays likely to occur thru slow delivery of materials during periods of snow. Yet the added costs are more than compensated for by the certainty of quicker occupancy and reduction of interest on money tied up in the incompleted building. It would seem folly to cease work on a structure where there is need of early use.

A Real Manager

Not all managers are in the same class. It has sometimes seemed as if few managers cared how the picture appeared on the screen as long as the box office for that day showed a balance on the right side. But it seems that there are a few exhibitors who realize the value of well handled films. One of this class has written a letter which we print below. He has been convinced of the slip shod manner in which Exchanges are handling and inspecting films, especially when the films are intended for a small town house. Since over 70 per cent of the 15,000 theatres in this country are in the so-called small towns you can judge for yourself what percentage of films is passed through the Exchange without decent inspection and repair.

The writer of the letter below can depend on the NEWS to do everything within its power to correct the present Exchange evils. It will take time. That everyone realizes. But the time is coming when the theatre man can be sure of the quality and condition of the films he receives because the Exchange manager will not allow a film to leave the shipping room until it has been passed upon by really competent examiners.

Technical Editor,
Motion Picture News,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Sir: I have just finished reading the letter of Mr. Large of Collingswood, in the current issue of the NEWS, and want to thank him for writing it, the NEWS for publishing it and the editor of the Technical Department for his very pertinent comments on it. I own an Opera House in a town of 1600 population, and am trying my best to give our people a good show for their money, but conditions such as he so forcibly points out, make it almost impossible at times. I have had some experience with the Philadelphia exchange of the corporation he mentions, and many of the shows received from them had never been rewound, coming to us just as they left the last town played. The heads of these big companies must learn that a few dollars put into this very vital care of the films they market will bring them in more return than all the page advertisements ever printed. I do not remember just what percentage of the backbone of the industry is represented by the small-town exhibitor but many of us are wholly dependent on the local exchange for the proper care and inspection of the shows we screen, through lack of expert operators, and we cannot give a good show without a reasonably good print.

If protests from the small-town exhibitor and operator, helped by the very excellent technical department of the only trade paper now reaching my desk (I subscribe for two, but since the strike am getting only the NEWS) can get under the skin of these swivel-chair feeders of waste-paper baskets, keep it up.

October 30, 1919.

Exchanges Projectors for Professors

FROM Ithaca, the home of Cornell University, comes a letter from a frequent contributor, E. W. Large. As his letter below says, he has given up projecting for a while in order to complete his course in chemistry.

Besides this news Mr Large describes a couple of stunts that make interesting reading. Perhaps in reading of them others will come to your mind. If they do, send them in and we will publish them. There are thousands of little short-cuts and kinks kicking around but you probably feel that everyone else knows about them. Take no chances. Send them all in and we will weed out the oldest ones.

Mr. Large's letter follows:

"Since you were so kind as to ask me to write again I thought some of the boys would like to know what I am doing now. I quit the projection game temporarily in September to return to my work here in Cornell University in the College of Chemistry. Hope to get into studio laboratory work in a few years. This is my Junior year here and I am mighty glad to be back. There will always be a warm spot in my heart for projectionists, however.

"It has always been my opinion that if every man interested in projection would, when he heard of a new operating-room scheme or dodge of any kind, sit right down and send it to the projection department, the News would soon be more eagerly looked for by projectionists than any other publication.

"To practice what I preach, here is a little trick that I learned last summer. I never had occasion to use it myself, so cannot vouch for it absolutely, but my cousin declares it works and I can't see any reason why it shouldn't. This man was working a small town picture house during the war. One night in a Liberty Loan Rally a singer of patriotic songs wished to rouse the audience as much as possible and asked for a spot-light on him down by the screen as he sang. The manager said: 'Impossible. We have nothing but two old Power's machines in the booth,' But the projectionist was thinking it over and finally said: 'Wait a minute; let's try first.'

"This was his stunt. He opened his gate, hung a small metal washer (circular) over his aperture plate, took out the three screws holding his lens jacket in front, dropped the revolving shutter, struck the light and by moving the lens around was able to throw quite a passable spot for a limited range over the front of the house. By varying the washer over the aperture he could change the size of his spot. Some of you men still in the projection game should try your luck with this combination and see how it works.

"A stunt I used to work myself was the producing of colored effects on the screen when the film was black and white. I took several old song slides which are merely pasteboard frames (lantern slide size) with printed gelatine sheets inserted. Removing the fasteners I substituted different color gelatine sheets and used them in the slide carrier. If you try this, don't use them in front of the lens. Using them in the carrier or directly in front of the gate merely changes the color of your light, but when you put them in front of the lens the light rays coming from the lens carrying the screen picture are refracted and the result is an out-of-focus picture, only slightly, to be sure, but still enough to be objectionable. This stunt, of course, absorbs a certain amount of light, but on my Mutt and Jeff cartoons, which were always too bright, I always ran an amber color to soften them down.

"It might interest you to know that the carbon question (that of using White A. C. Uppers in the lower jaw) that you verified for me in the News a few weeks ago, would have been the means of firing me from a job (if I hadn't quit anyway). The manager claimed I was wasting money. Can you beat it?"

Reply:

"Glad to see that you have re-entered college. You are to be commended for wishing to enter the laboratory side of the industry. It can use any number of well-trained chemists and, moreover, it will be necessary to do this if laboratory technique is to keep even with other phases of film production.

"We hope the publishing of your stunts will bring in a large number of others along similar lines. The more of these short and quick methods a projectionist has in mind the more capable he will become as by the use of these little kinks he can often bridge over a temporary breakdown or minor trouble.

"We hope you called your manager's attention to the answer concerning those White A. C. Uppers. He may know all there is to know about theatre managing but it is evident that he is no David W. Griffith as regards projection. We wonder what he thought the upper and lower carbons were marked particularly for those positions if it really was a fact that they could be used interchangeably. Of course, he was wrong. An Upper carbon is for the Upper positive jaw and for none other; the Lower goes opposite it in the lower jaw. No one should try to use them otherwise.

"Furthermore, you could easily have shown your manager that he was losing money himself by using alternating current instead of converting or rectifying it to direct current. But probably he is the type that looks only at to-day's receipts. No doubt it would be a difficult matter to convince him that a motor generator set would pay for itself in power saved over a period of a year or so. Besides this power saving his picture would reflect the difference. Some day he will see the difference and wonder why he didn't change over before. By that time, of course, you will have lost all interest in his theatre. But we felt that a few remarks of this nature must be made. And perhaps he reads the Projection Department."

They're at it Again

THERE is nothing that will clear up an argument like a good healthy discussion by both sides. Just so long as the language is gentlemanly the NEWS will continue to print articles from both the "City Man" and the "Small Town Operator." The one below, written by a Brooklyn, N. Y., projectionist hits straight out from the shoulder and we are sure that the man working in the "small town" will have dozens of "come-backs."

Jas. Andrea Merklein, of Brooklyn, N. Y., will now be heard:

"I have read several articles that this man Christopher from Pennsylvania has been handing out but when it comes to making the city man look foolish 'country' has got to go some. Christopher surely got my blood a-going.

"Mr. Christopher, you claim to have such a wonderful projection room, do you realize that you also forget to mention the most important things in projection, i. e., BRAINS. You blame the city man for the punch marks in your reels. Why not be a good little green-horn and go 50–50.

"I am going to tell you of one incident that happened when I was projecting 'Traffic in Souls' on the road. A man came to me one night during the performance and said he was a good operator and would I let him help. I said, yes, and allowed him to go on until he asked this foolish question, 'Is that a spark coil you get your light from?' I said, yes,—but that he had better go on home to his mama. The funny part of it was that I was using a calcium outfit which we carried and used in the towns where we were unable to get 'juice.'

"I worked one day in Easton, Pa., and quit. Why? For the simple reason that no city man would work on a job with defective wiring and with machines out of order. I told the manager and he claimed the last man did the wiring and operated for five years. I refused to go back for fear of fire and when I told him to that effect, he said 'It takes our own boys to run it.'

"He was right, for three days later in the Sentinel I read that a boy of 14 years and the operator lost their lives. The City Man lives to-day to tell about it. That's what I call BRAINS.

"That was about ten years ago. And the same conditions exist outside New York City. With all your brilliant ideas of the small town you have yet to find such fire hazards in New York. Places of such a nature have been wiped out, conditions made better for the 'operator,' enabling him to do better work, therefore, the city man stands supreme in projection and supreme in salary, not wages.

"A city man never asks if he can smoke in the projection room. He knows the law. Why, some day one of you small town men will ask the Technical Editor of the NEWS how to find a lost arc.

"As to the condition of film there are three ways to eliminate the trouble: (1) Don't destroy it; (2) cut out all bad pieces and put it in good shape yourself, then keep still about it; (3) send it back in better condition than you received it in.

"Have you ever stopped to think that the city man can't lay down on his job, like some of you country operators and ask foolish questions.

"Trusting that what I have written will help to bring the small town operator to his senses, I am,

"Yours very truly,
"JAS. MERKLEIN."

The White Plague flourishes because of carelessness, ignorance and neglect. If the entire country knew of the menace, the death rate from tuberculosis would drop almost immediately.

Use the Motion Picture slide you have received in your theatre calling attention to the fight on tuberculosis and the sale of Red Cross Christmas Seals.

The screen is the most potent force in America and the use of this slide will do more than any other one thing to awaken the people of America to their danger, and will help in obtaining the necessary money to finance the year 'round campaign against tuberculosis.

Mazda Projection

A. H., Oregon:

Will you send me descriptive articles on Mazda lamps as used in motion picture projection?

I have a 90-foot throw with a common white cloth screen. We have 110 volt 60-cycle current supply. Is my distance from screen to projection room too great to use incandescent lamps?

REPLY:

Write to the Westinghouse Lamp Works, Bloomfield, N. J., to the Edison Lamp Works at Harrison, N. J., and to the National Lamp Works, Cleveland, Ohio, for their data on incandescent projection. You will receive some valuable booklets and pamphlets that will be of great help.

With your present line-up we do not feel justified in suggesting a change to incandescent projection. You are about on the dividing line. Ninety feet should be considered the limit with a 12 x 14 picture. But you have a white cloth screen when you really need one of high surface brilliancy to get a satisfactory picture at your distance. Thus you see there are several factors working against you. However, if you are still interested, some supply house near you will be glad to give you a try-out of their Mazda equipment.

For your own benefit and to post yourself on the general subject, it would be worth 25 cents to send that sum to Mr. A. F. Victor, 710 First National Bank Building, Chicago, Ill., for a copy of Trans. No. 6 of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. This book contains several articles on Mazda projection.

The Complete Plan Book

"Lightning Brice"

(15 Episode Serial-National-Arrow)

THE serial form of film entertainment has a great hold on the public, and wise is the producer who caters to it in this direction. We need have no fear that his coffers will be empty if he gives picturegoers their money's worth. Which is by way of introducing "Lightning Bryce," National Film's production which is being distributed by Arrow. All the requisites that go to make up a sure-fire serial are found in their accustomed places. It takes you out of interiors and gives you the great outdoors.

Think of fifteen outstanding Western melodramas and incorporate them into one story and you have a pretty good idea what this offering contains. Action? Of course. A man's size quota of it. And suspense, mystery, romance, adventure, thrills and heart interest. It is embellished with sweeping backgrounds — the colorful backgrounds of the open places of the West. You might say, if you analyze the story, that it does not adhere strictly to truth. But you must remember that you are looking at a serial — and serials are made solely to entertain regardless of any truthful pretentions.

Joe Brandt, who wrote the story, while he has followed a conventional formula in a way, has had the foresight to give it a new dressing so that it appears reasonably fresh and up-to-date. His mysterious figure (no serial is complete without it) is not represented as a hooded monster or as an apostle of iron claw methods. A woman interprets the figure. A new departure. And the author's scheme of introducing his romance is novel to say the least. Two miners will their respective children their property. The daughter of one is made the recipient of a string, the son of the other is given a hunting knife. And the mine can only be located by winding the string over the blade — the string carrying the precious information. So villainy enters to complicate matters and it is expressed in rapid-fire conflict. The string and the knife are stolen by divers persons and the mysterious figure helps out the suspense.

The offering is interpreted by a clever company which is headed by Ann Little, who makes the heroine a resourceful woman indeed, and Jack Hoxie, who cannot be excelled in his feats of horsemanship. He is an ideal selection for this outdoor serial, since he exemplifies the spirit of the West. He brings to the role an enthusiasm, a determination which makes the spectator keenly interested. His star is surely in the ascendant. Paul Hurst is as capable a villain as he is a director. You will find something new in his methods.

The first three episodes are excellent testimony that the serial is a winner. It has everything that comprises a good Western — and a little more. You cannot go wrong in booking it.— LAURENCE REID.

"It Happened In Paris"

(Mme. Yorska and W. Lawson Butt - Five Reels - Tyrad Pictures)

THIS story was written by Sarah Bernhardt and an animated prologue serving to introduce the star, Mme. Yorska, shows the divine Sarah herself.

The American version of the Bernhardt story was made at the Brunton studio in California, according to the announcement, and W. Lawson Butt is the leading man. The scenario is by Jack Cunningham and it was directed by David Hartford.

A portion of the Latin quarter in Paris is pictured and the plot hinges upon the kidnaping of the little baby daughter of a wealthy man by a gypsy 20 years before.

Mme. Yorska, a protege of Sarah Bernhardt, is in a dual role and proves that she is an actress of ability. As Juliette, The Dancer, she is fiery and untamable and as the sister she portrays the artistic girl born of wealth but forced to make her art pay as she has been reduced in finances by the death of her father.

Noticing the remarkable resemblance between the two girls an art seller who is unscrupulous determines to compromise the artist and induces Ronildo, the Apache lover of Juliette, to bring the dancer to his apartments and the idea is to have several friends of the sister see her and they would undoubtedly believe that the young artist had compromised herself to such an extent that they would scorn her.

Then the art seller would persuade the sister to marry him and thus secure her to make copies of the old masters which he could palm off as the genuine works of art.
